But it is with the church in its potentiality rather than with the obstructing force, that we, as integral parts of that church, are interested. The church ought to reach the masses. It ought to be the outward, visible sign of an inward love and helpfulness between each human unit. The dreams of a universal brotherhood should be realized in the church. The church should be the center of light, of cheer, of moral power, of all reforming forces for all humanity. It must become all these if it is to accomplish its mission. Our chief interest should be to learn "what doth hinder" in attaining this end. Three special lacks are apparent.

1. An adequate realization on the part of the church as to the nature and scope of its mission. By just so far as it has ignored all elements entering into the manifold nature of man save what it has been pleased to know as the spiritual, has the church failed to lay hold upon the masses. The lesson it needs to learn to-day is that God made man, not man's soul—but man, with body, brain, affections, ambitions, instincts, will, soul and spirit; all that enter into the mystery of personality, in His own image. This being so—man being in no sense a disembodied spirit, nor even pure spirit clothed upon with body—but the body with its potentialities and even its limitations entering into the human ego, it is clear that the church cannot do true work for humanity if it exalts one element to the absolute suppression of all others.

The spirit is the highest element; it dominates all others; but it also holds a vital relation to all others, and if that relation be ignored it is at the expense of the spiritual with the physical and mental.

To bring men into communion with God, into vital relations to Christ, is the supreme end of the church, but there are other ends which are necessary steps to the highest, and in ignoring those the church has been for ages attempting to leap from the bottom to the top of the ladder, heedless of the intervening rounds.

The church of Christ exists to make this world clean and pure, to make men's brains clear and strong, their bodies vigorous; it exists to make politics clean, homes glad, nations righteous. That famous saying of the old philosopher, "I am a man, and nothing that touches humanity is indifferent to me," should be inscribed over every church door and written in every member's heart. When it shall find humanity in all its unfoldments and all its interests sacred, then, and not till then, can the church begin the fulfillment of its mission.

2. A lack of common-sense business methods in the effort of the church for the masses is conspicuous as a second hindrance. So conspicuous is that lack that it often causes one to wonder if, after all, the church desires to reach them. That was a startling fact announced in a Chicago pulpit the other day, that if the vast city should be swayed by an irresistible impulse church-ward, there would be, after the six hundred churches were filled, seven hundred thousand who could find no house of worship. A startling fact! and yet, in the majority of Chicago churches, there are empty pews each Sunday, and no definite, concerted action taken as to how they may be filled.

"You have the plant of the church," said Stead in Willard Hall, "and you are working it in such a way that if it were your neighbor's capital instead of God's, you would have landed in prison long ago." Oh, for a baptism of common sense business methods in the church of Christ! Oh, for a consecration which shall make men willing to give of their best thought and most practical efforts to its work! When that baptism comes we shall probably talk less and sing less about "going to heaven," but we shall do infinitely more to bring heaven to earth.

3. The third lack is that marvelous power which, call it by what name you will, is still vital—the life of the individual or the organization. It was that power which sent forth the early church in a glad enthusiasm to do and die for the Lord Jesus. It has been this power which has led on the church to every great conquest in the centuries since. Whenever this burning zeal is lost, whenever dogma takes the place of devotion, whenever creed is found to dominate Christliness, then the church loses its hold upon the hearts of men.

"The church to-day is a devitalized body." We have been pondering upon those words since hearing them a few days since from the lips of an earnest Christian. Is it true? It depends largely upon the meaning one attaches to the word "devitalized." That the church has life is proven by its continued existence, as well as by many deeds of Christliness here and there. But that the church lacks the splendid vitality which is its normal condition is also proven by the fact that it is content merely to "hold the fort" instead of marching on, conquering and to conquer.

The masses would long since have been reached if the church of Christ had but apprehended first the masses themselves and its mission to them; second, the methods for carrying out that mission; and third, the power which is its only true life. Not power of place, of wealth, of rank, but power of and from God.

We know no definition of the church of Christ so clear as that given by William T. Stead. "The union of all who love in the service of all who suffer." When that definition is fully accepted the mission of the church to the masses will be both defined and fulfilled.

THE SABBATH WAS MADE FOR MAN.

When Christ rebuked the captious Pharisees with the statement, "The Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath," he uttered a twofold truth but, unfortunately, the one which He emphasized to His immediate hearers is the only one which many people at present see. The most of mankind have gone to precisely the opposite extreme from the old Pharisees. They readily accept the last half of this teaching of the Master, but fail to see in the first half anything more than a negative affirmation of the truth contained in the second.

The Pharisees fell into the error, prevalent at all times, of substituting forms and ceremonies for the weightier matters of the law. It would be a comparatively easy thing to get to heaven if we could only go by the path of long, toilsome pilgrimages, punctilious observance of the rites and ceremonies of external religion, or even of self-inflicted privation and suffering. All of these things are so much easier than to be "meek" and "merciful," "pure in heart" and "poor in spirit," to "hunger and thirst after righteousness," to love God with all our heart, soul, mind and strength and our neighbor as ourselves, that the majority of mankind has always sought eternal life through them. Extreme and absurd punctiliousness in the observance of the Sabbath was but one of the many forms in which the disposition to seek future happiness by external ceremonies manifested itself in Christ's day. This spirit He always rebuked in whatever form it appeared. It was His attitude of uncompromising hostility to it that excited the opposition and hatred of the Pharisees.

Were Christ to come upon the earth now, He would not find that this spirit had been banished, but in this one matter He would find a totally different, though equally erroneous, sentiment prevailing. Few, indeed, need now to be told that the observance of the rites and ceremonies of the Sabbath is not one end of man's creation, but there is great and crying need that men be impressed with the fact that the Sabbath is a divine institution appointed to meet the necessities of man's physical, intellectual, moral and spiritual nature, and that he disregards its claims at the cost of the decay and death of all his powers. This generation has all but lost sight of the vital truth that the Sabbath was made for man.

"The Sabbath was made for man." It was made for the sake of his physical nature. There is an instructive diagram which represents the effect of the day of rest upon the physical frame. A broken line starts upon a given plane, goes down during the day of work, comes up again after a night's rest, yet not quite to the level from which it started, and so on through the week, each morning finding the physical strength a little lower than on the preceding morning, until the Sabbath's rest fully restores the wasted tissues of the body and the man starts again upon the original plane. This is a truthful representation of the facts. Many experiments have proved it beyond a peradventure.

So long ago as when the white covered wagons of the emigrants marked out the trail which the trans-continental railroad afterward followed, the actual gain in time and money to the traveler by observing one day in seven as a day of rest was established. One such train in the face of ridicule actually ventured to obey the command of God instead of the traditions of men, and halted in its long march on every Sabbath day. It reached California ahead of trains that had started before it, and with man and beast in far better condition than were those that traveled continuously. Since then some railroad companies have tried the experiment, with similar results. In proportion to the degree in which they have complied with the demand of the Fourth Commandment, in just that proportion have employers and employés been benefited. "A financial success"; "a great saving to the road"; "we are doing the work of seven days in six and doing it successfully"; "men earn as much as before, and are greatly pleased," are the testimonies of railroad managers to the benefits of Sabbath observance. Along all lines of work similar experiments have proved again and again that men and animals do more work and live longer when one day in seven is observed as a day of rest.

The Sabbath was made for man's intellectual development. The higher faculties are dependent upon the physical, and whatever contributes to the well-being of one benefits the other. In the great majority of cases it is impossible to have a "sound mind" in anything but a "sound body." In the exceptional cases the mind, however bright, would be vastly improved by a body which was not constantly intruding its ills upon the soul.

Few could, and still fewer would, take any time for the development of mind and heart were it not for the periodical day of rest. At the best, only a modicum of intellectual life is possible to the average man or woman. There are a few exceptional cases of hard-working artisans conquering by the light of their furnace fires the subjects usually delegated to the student's "midnight oil," or of busy housewives learning Greek at their ironing boards! But the race as a whole can never accomplish such feats. The general intelligence of the great mass of the American people is the utmost that can be hoped under present conditions. But even that does not exist in lands cursed by a "continental Sunday." It will not long exist here if we suffer our Sabbath to become an ordinary day of work and pleasure.

The Sabbath was made for man's moral and spiritual nature. When the morals of a people decay, its physical and intellectual attainments are soon blighted and the highest, noblest life is possible only when the spiritual is nourished and developed. Christian virtues sometimes shine with rare lustre from a life of unceasing toil, but the usual effect of a life of monotonous drudgery even when, as in the case of many household drudges, the toil is lightened as much as may be on the Sabbath, is and always must be, death to the spiritual and intellectual powers. This tendency is aggravated under our present system in which the struggle for existence is so fierce that many, even Christian people, have fallen into the view that the main purpose in life is to "earn a living," and that the chief virtues are thrift and economy. Bread and butter first, afterwards what you like, is perforce the motto of existence in a competitive system. Without our Sabbath of rest all the higher powers of man's being would be bereft of their one chance for life.

"Man was not made for the Sabbath." He was not created that in this matter or in any other he might flatter the vanity and self-esteem of a capricious deity by obsequious devotion. However strenuously the Pharisees might have denied the accusation, practically they had precisely this conception of God, for the worship with which they sought to please Him was suited only to such a deity. Many people even yet hold the same false, heathenish, degrading view. But He who "pleased not himself" never gave a command to His children for the sake of any advantage to himself. All of God's laws, as this one of the Sabbath, were made for man, and because they were, the path of disobedience is the path of ruin. If we could only appreciate that He has said "thou shalt" and "thou shalt not" always and only because along the lines He thus points out lie our welfare and our happiness, we should not so often evade His commands.

"The Sabbath was made for man." Infinite love devised it for his children's good. Observe it and we shall develop all of those powers in which we resemble our Maker. Disregard it and the death of all that is noblest and best follows, not as the arbitrary penalty of an omnipotent despot, but as the inevitable result of the broken laws of our own nature.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

There lies on our desk a document whose import is one of glad significance to the whole human race, a document which represents the crystallization of the doctrine of human brotherhood, and which comes to white-ribboners particularly as a message of encouragement and good cheer. It is a souvenir copy of the World's Columbian Exposition Memorial for International Arbitration, in dainty white covering, symbolical of its mission, and the title fittingly set in letters of gold.

This memorial, which is an outgrowth of the World's Peace Congress, is addressed to all the governments of the world, and prays "that they will unitedly agree by mutual treaties to submit for settlement by arbitration all such international questions and differences as shall fail of satisfactory solution by the ordinary peaceful methods of negotiation."

Appended are the official signatures of men and women from every civilized country on the globe—World's Fair commissioners from nations of Europe, Asia, Africa, North and South America, Australia and the islands of the sea; World's Fair directors and managers, representatives of the pulpit and the press, United States cabinet officers and officers of the World's and National W. C. T. U. The letter which accompanies the memorial informs us that through the courtesy of Secretary of State Gresham the request of the memorialists that the various governments be officially presented with copies, has been complied with.

The next step will be for legislative bodies of the different nations to take some action in the matter. And in view of the present situation, and the alliances, political and matrimonial, recently formed between the leading powers of Europe, there could be no more opportune time than the present for concerted movement along this line.

The logic of events unquestionably points to a general disarmament in the near future. The idea has taken root, and is putting forth lively young shoots in a quarter where a few years ago we should have least expected it to flourish. That the cause of peace should find a leading champion in the ruler of a nation justly proud of its standing army and of its military system generally is indeed a matter of surprise and rejoicing. Surely Emperor William, of Germany, has come to the kingdom for such a time as this. And, indeed, upon a survey of the whole European ground we might say the same of the rulers of other nations. With Russia, Germany, Great Britain and the United States all leading the thought of the world toward peace, the time must soon come when war shall be relegated to the past and the whole family of God on earth shall dwell together in brotherly unity. Notwithstanding the pessimistic utterances of a certain class of critics (who, by the way, seem to think that man can never rise above his present level), it is said, by those who are watching the course of events across the water, that disarmament is going to be the engrossing topic of the year.

Varied agencies are working together for the furtherance of arbitration plans. Rulers and people are beginning to consider the question of peace, both from its humanitarian and its economic side. Europe has to-day more than three times the number of soldiers she maintained twenty-five years ago, and unless the powers mutually agree to disarm they must each continue to increase the burden in like ratio. It is evident that no nation, however wealthy, can always stand the strain of the financial outlay demanded by this constantly increasing class of non-producers.

The manufacture of new and "improved" weapons of war is another cause which furnishes impetus to the peace movement. As King Humbert, of Italy, recently remarked, "What sovereign will precipitate war now-a-days when it means such a slaughter that even victory would be fearful?" The more deadly the weapons the sooner must permanent and universal peace be established. Hence, the most recent inventions for wholesale slaughter may be regarded in a true sense as improved weapons.

Further, the advantages to be derived by pursuing the policy of arbitration are obvious, and have been demonstrated. To the memorial is appended a list of seventy-six cases in which disputes between nations have been settled by arbitration, (some of which are now pending), the United States having been a party to nearly one-half. The English speaking nations, as was fitting, took the first step in this reform. The first case occurred between this country and Great Britain in 1819.

"The fact," says Mr. Wm. E. Blackstone, to whom the Columbian commission intrusted the work of preparing this memorial, "the fact that no war has ever arisen over one of the decisions of an arbitral court, and that instead of deepening animosities and jealousies as war does, these settlements have brought the countries into much more friendly relations, ought to be a powerful appeal for the universal adoption of international arbitration." And it will be.

The principle of arbitration has already been officially indorsed by the legislative bodies of ten different countries, and at the Pan-American Congress of 1890, the official representatives of eleven American republics adopted and signed a treaty of arbitration, recommending the same to their respective governments. The governments failing to act before the time for ratification had expired a form of extension was submitted, and favorable replies have been received from seven of them.

The W. C. T. U. can wield, and has already wielded, a mighty influence in the direction of international peace. It is itself an embodiment of peace. It stands not only for God and home, but also for God and humanity, and wherever the white ribbon goes it represents the higher and broader Christian thought, that love and service for humanity is nobler than love and service for home or for native land because it includes both.

The prophetic motto which prefaces the memorial—"Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more"—suggests to the Christian at least, the power which operates in man and inclines him toward universal peace, and toward all the varied movements by which he works out his own salvation and brings about the conditions necessary to the development of the high standard which he is destined by his Creator to attain. The harmonious notes of peace are, in this latter part of the nineteenth century, heard above the mutterings of war, and in unison with all the other agencies now employed in carrying out the divine purpose speak unmistakably of the "fulfilling of His word."

We legislate very carefully and conscientiously concerning the number of hogs that shall be penned in a box car but there is no law touching the number of people who shall work, cook, eat, sleep, the sick with the well, perhaps even some dead and dying in one unhealthy swarm, in a room measuring nine by twelve.

Then do not worry.

Very small straws sometimes suffice to reveal in a most unexpected manner the directions of the great currents of human progress. A picture dealer was heard to lament his loss on a particular etching of which he had in stock more copies than he generally kept of one subject. It was a particular type of picture which had been much in demand but for some reason the demand was on the decrease. He thus told the story: "Col. and Mrs. S. came the other day for a dining-room piece. Mrs. S. is no mean critic and I felt sure she would like 'The Young Lord.' She saw its merits and dilated upon them, but said to her husband, 'However, you know we cannot have it.' 'Why not? It is surely fine and is offered to us at a special figure.' 'Yes, I grant that, but think of the children always looking at it when at table.' 'Oh,' said the Colonel, and they turned to look at something else. They chose finally an old engraving representing Sir Philip Sidney giving his flagon of water to a fellow soldier whose need seemed greater. 'That will teach them heroism,' the Colonel said, and a new light dawned on my mind." He adds, "I will have to sell those others for a mere song to the saloon trade." The pictures of conviviality are passing away from American homes, even as other adjuncts of sensual pleasures are being barred out.

What a choice bit is the following from that quaint and genial philospher, Oliver Wendell Holmes, spoken through the personality of his "Professor at the Breakfast Table." "Do you know that every man has a religious belief peculiar to himself? Smith is always a Smithite. He takes in exactly Smith's-worth of knowledge, Smith's-worth of truth, of beauty, of divinity. And Brown has from time immemorial been trying to burn him, to excommunicate him, to anonymous-article him, because he did not take in Brown's-worth of knowledge, truth, beauty, divinity. He cannot do it any more than a pint pot can hold a quart, or a quart pot be filled by a pint. Iron is essentially the same everywhere and always; but the sulphate of iron is never the same as the carbonate of iron. Truth is invariable; but the Smithate of truth must always differ from the Brownate of truth."

Here is a bit of temperance history found in Letters of James Russell Lowell. The date of this particular letter is July 6, 1842. "We have been having temperance celebrations down here at a great rate. Last Friday, Maria, (Maria White, who in December, 1844, became his wife) presented a banner to the Watertown Total Abstinence Society in the name of the women of Watertown. There were more than a thousand persons present. The meeting was held on a beautifully wooded slope belonging to Mr. White. . . There were a great many tears in a great many eyes when she presented the banner. . . She said a few words in clear, silvery tones. She told them that the banner came from their mothers and sisters, their daughters and wives, and they must hold it sacred. The motto on the banner was excellent. It was this verse from the Bible: 'My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not.' . . On the 4th I attended by invitation the celebration of the Cambridgeport W. T. A. society. . . I was called out and made a speech of about ten minutes from the top of a bench to an audience of two thousand. I spoke of the beauty of having women present and of their influence and interest in reforms. I ended with the following sentiment: 'The proper place of woman—at the head of the pilgrims back to purity and truth.'"

ON DUTY.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

OHIO.

MIDYEAR MEETING.

The executive committee of the state union met in midyear meeting at Newark, March 28 and 29. Much business in the interest of the work in our state was transacted.

Cincinnati was chosen as the place where our next state convention will be held, and Upper Sandusky for our next midyear meeting. Superintendents present presented their departments and interesting letters were read from some of the absent ones. Mrs. Shay, of Youngstown, superintendent of work among railroad men, made an earnest plea for Bibles and literature to furnish the cabooses, and for cottage prayer-meetings to be held in the homes of railroad men.

Mrs. Dora Webb, state superintendent of purity, has waged war all the past winter upon the infamous registration system that prevails in Cleveland. She has spent a number of weeks there, in coöperation with the local W. C. T. Unions and the Woman's Council, organizing the forces against this outrage on womanhood. Has held many large mass-meetings at which denunciatory resolutions were passed. A petition was also prepared and endorsed by each of the organizations of women in the city and many influential men, asking for the repeal of that clause in the statute upon which this system of regulation is based. With this backing Senator Clark, of Cleveland, introduced such a bill in the senate. On March 21 Mrs. Webb appeared before the senate committee in the interest of this bill and on the 28th it passed the senate. April 10 Mrs. Webb appeared before the House committee, speaking in the House in the evening instead of in the committee room, by invitation of Senator Clark, and was thus able to reach a large number of members beside the committee. She thinks the committee will report favorably on this bill, and hopes for its passage. Word has just come that Mansfield has recently passed an ordinance authorizing the regulation of prostitution. Does it not behoove Ohio women to rouse themselves to fight this threatening evil?

Our superintendent of juvenile work gave a fine report. Ohio is, in point of companies, reported the banner state in L. T. L. work. We have 1,252 companies reported with a pledged membership of 30,000. We have also fifty Bands of Mercy. More interest is manifest this year in the study of the L. T. L. curriculum of scientific temperance, and in securing diplomas and seals than ever before. Our children are contributing toward the Temple and to the L. T. L. room in the Temperance Hospital.

Mrs. Southworth, of Cleveland, state superintendent of franchise, reported that in all the twenty years of her work for suffrage she had not had a result so gratifying. The responses from local superintendents have been enthusiastic, sympathetic and earnest. There have been no refusals to coöperate and only two or three postals expressing indifference to the cause. She is now in direct correspondence with one hundred and twenty-four local superintendents scattered through forty-six counties, The bill granting school suffrage to women has passed the state senate and we hope will pass the house.

The Bible readings from eleven to twelve each day were real spiritual uplifts and the Scripture lessons and prayers throughout the entire meeting were signally blessed by the presence and power of the Holy Spirit. The first day the reading was given by Mrs. M. G. Townsend, of Holgate, the second was on "Angelic Ministry," by Mrs. H. C. McCabe, of Delaware, first president of the Ohio W. C. T. U. The spiritual power of our meeting was most inspiring. Each member seemed filled with the love of God, her heart tender with sympathy for the sinner and the suffering. We seemed to be reaping abundantly the results of the great tidal wave of religious awakening that has swept over Ohio the past months.

A beautiful letter was received from Mother Stewart, whom severe illness for many weeks past had prevented from meeting with us, and it was ordered published.

Two public meetings were held. The first, a platform meeting, addressed by our state superintendents, and the second, a Crusade meeting, at which Mrs. H. C. McCabe gave the principal address. It contained a most interesting history of the organization of the Ohio Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which preceded the National four months. Mrs. Morris Sharp, of Washington Courthouse, gave an interesting account of the Crusade at that place. Each Crusader present was heard from briefly. Mother Stewart, Mrs. Thompson and Mrs. Frances W Leiter were expected to speak at this meeting but were unable to be present.

The report of our state treasurer showed that $1,100 had been paid in dues, and the outlook was encouraging. The Messenger, our state paper, made a good financial showing. Miss Goodwill, of Canton, was chosen matron of the Home at Lakeside for this summer.

Mrs. Morris Sharp read a paper written by Mrs. M. G. Carpenter (Mrs. Rev. Geo. Carpenter), the leader of the Crusade at Washington Courthouse, giving some Crusade history not generally known. The paper was interesting, and its historic statements merit careful investigation. Mrs. Carpenter has written a history of the Crusade at Washington Courthouse, which the ladies of the local union there have recently had published in a beautiful volume.

Our thankoffering service will be held in June, and the program has already been prepared.

Our state superintendent of narcotics sent an interesting report of work accomplished, principally through the aid of the teachers in public schools, who set the children to investigating the truths of science. To help their children and answer their questions, fathers have been enlisted to study this great question of the effects of tobacco, and some have given up its use.

Our entertainment at Newark was delightful. The pleasantest homes of the city were freely opened for our delegates, and every kindness was shown them. At the church each officer was provided with a spacious table supplied with fresh flowers each day. The Newark ladies, headed by Miss Pollock, our state recording secretary; Mrs. J. M. Graham, president of the union; Mrs. M. E. Eagye, Mrs. Thorne and others, have endeared themselves to the hearts of all who attended this meeting.

The union of unions, Cleveland, is busy preparing for the entertainment of the National Convention. They hope to make this the most successful National meeting that has yet been held.

Democracy union has been holding Demorest contests each month; what other state can boast of such ideal democracy?

Miss Florence Savage, of Akron, a young evangelist of whom Ohio is proud, has served for some time as pastor of the Friends' church at Beloit.

The new union at Barton, Belmont county, organized by Miss Savage last January has increased its membership from thirteen to fifty-five.

WHISPERS OF SPRING.

I find that the organizing work done by Mrs. Helen Harford, state organizer, has been overlooked. I except the report of the Plainview union, organized by Mrs. Harford, with eleven active and ten honorary members. Mrs. S. E. Nichols, president, and an account of five different addresses on the Sunday, at Myrtle Point, Southern Oregon. A pretty good day's work for the Rest-day. Turner was favored with a visit from Mrs. Harford who lectured two evenings. At the close a W. C. T. U. was organized with six members and seven honorary members.

The Honor Day to America's "grand old man" was held in loyal remembrance in many places. Mrs. A. R. Riggs conducted a brief service at the Centenary church, Portland. Albina, Mt. Scott, East Portland and Mt. Tabor, all in the vicinity, celebrated in their different ways. At the latter place the ladies, with the help of those from the churches, gave a banquet in Oriental Hall, to over a hundred guests. After which bright speeches took the place of the usual conventional toasts.

We have lost out of our midst Mrs. Fannie Damon, of Salem, Mrs. A. K. Handy, of Corvallis, likewise Birdie Osburn, of the Y's, and Mattie B. Palmer, the adopted daughter of Mrs. Dr. Owens-Adair, of Astoria. Each left an empty niche, sore to mourn and hard to fill. We can thank God for their blessed memories.

"For words of hope, and bright example given,
To show through moonless skies, that there is light in heaven."

With regard to the new Mt. Scott union, there was material for a fine nucleus there in the person of a lady (name unknown) who herself defeated the saloonist with his petition, who already considered himself the rising sun. She drove the entire day from house to house, gaining signatures to her remonstrance (according to Oregon law for country places), containing a majority of names over the saloon man's, defeated the saloonist in the court next day and caused his sun to go down in darkness.

Our superintendent for mercy work has been making many trips on behalf of her department, sowing a seed in the school that generally bears fruit in an organized Mercy Band soon afterward. Since Mrs. Louise Rounds' visit to Corvallis six mercy bands have arisen in the different rooms of the school, with from thirty to fifty members each. In Forest Grove the influence has been equally felt.

A case was lately won by Mrs. A. R. Riggs in the county court, which excited great interest among our white-ribboners. The city of Portland decided against Mrs. Riggs for erecting the new refuge home within one thousand five hundred feet from a public school, wherein the home was decided to be "a nuisance." In the circuit court, to which she appealed, Judge Munly's decision was that "the common council had no authority to pass such an ordinance." In his summing up he said: "Is the fallen woman, endeavoring to walk in the way of virtue, struggling backwards again toward the life, to be regarded as offensive? Can those who consecrate themselves to the work of giving to the repentant Magdalene a helping hand be said to be engaged in an offensive business? Manifestly not!"

RHODE ISLAND.

THANKOFFERING DAY.

"When we enumerate our blessings and give only a penny for each, we shall find our mite-boxes bursting with fullness."

So would our hearts be if we kept the record there. The thankoffering service held in connection with our spring quarterly meeting is always a season of refreshing. We need to learn to count the pleasant days instead of the stormy ones, the kind words rather than the thoughtless ones, the bountiful gifts instead of the withholdings; so shall we gladly offer unto the Lord the sacrifices of thanksgiving and render back to Him of all that He has so freely given to us.

Mrs. A. M. Paine took charge of the service. In speaking of systematic giving she said: "I believe the time will come when Christians will so imbibe the spirit of their Master, that our churches and all benevolent enterprises will be sustained by the systematic giving of those who proportionately lay aside of their means, "as every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another as good stewards of the manifold grace of God."

Then came the presentation of the offerings, each with its note of thanksgiving. Owing to the "hard times" and the many calls for aid which they entail, the total was not quite so large as last year, being about four hundred dollars. Yet of many of the offerings it might truly be said, "She hath done what she could."

Miss Thurston's Bible reading at the noon hour brought out the thought of how much can be accomplished with the little upon which Christ's blessing rests.

The quarterly report of the corresponding secretary supplemented by representatives from the unions, showed progressive work in many lines. An able address by Mr. J. A. Williams, was followed by a reunion of as many as possible of our original workers. Mrs. G. F. Martin, for sixteen consecutive years president of the Providence union, gave a history of her experience in the work of that city. Others followed with reminiscences, and some who could not be present sent items of interest. A souvenir volume of twenty years of W. C. T. U. work in Rhode Island is now in process of preparation and promises to be of much more than local interest.

GENERAL NEWS.

The Prohibitionists carried on a vigorous campaign. One hundred and fifty meetings were held, one hundred thousand pages of literature distributed, and legislative tickets printed in thirty out of thirty-five cities and towns in the state. Several things conspired, however, so that the actual vote polled fell far short of a year ago. This was a great disappointment after so much labor had been expended and such representative men nominated, but the Independent Citizen, looking forward and not back, is not one whit discouraged and sums up its prophecy and advice thus tersely: "When the break comes in the old political parties, what a rush there will be into the Prohibition camp! Come now and avoid the rush."

Mr. F. O. Draper, superintendent of public schools in the town of Lincoln, has organized an anti-tobacco league for the school boys. They "determine and earnestly purpose

"1. To abstain from the use of tobacco in any form until sixteen years of age, in conformity with the laws of the state.

"2. To abstain from the use of tobacco in the form of cigarettes until twenty-one years of age."

One thousand names have already been secured, and as many pretty bronze badges have been given by a friend of the cause.

When people realize how this narcotic poison stunts the intellectual and physical growth of children, and remember that "The nation of to-morrow sits in the schoolroom of to-day," they will see the vast importance of just this kind of work in the development of good citizenship, which requires a sound mind in a sound body.

Neal Dow meetings have been generally held throughout the state, and many pastors have preached practical sermons on the themes suggested.

The department of flower missions has been formally introduced into our W. C. T. U. with Miss Mary L. Thurston, an earnest member of the Newport Y, as superintendent. The work already done in this line by different unions has opened doors of opportunity to carry cheer into desolate lives and speak the "word in season" that has stayed many a soul in its downward course. By thus organizing we hope that every union will take up the work ere the coming season of flowers has passed.

GOSPEL MESSENGERS.

Mrs. J. K. Barney has just returned from her ministries to sister unions.

Mrs. H. D. Walker is reaping rich harvests for the Master in home fields, and our unions are being greatly helped by her efforts.

Miss E. P. Nichols, state superintendent of evangelistic work, brings strength and cheer to many hearts and homes all over our state.

Mr. Joel Bassett, of the Bethany mission, is a successful "fisher of men." In connection with his work he serves substantial meals Saturday nights and Sunday mornings to needy men.

The mission at Pawtucket, under W. C. T. U. direction, although meeting with many obstacles, is sowing good seed and reaping fruit.

The Y's of Providence have had a series of helpful meetings at the tea rooms, with Bible readings by Mrs. J. K. Barney, Miss E. P. Nichols, Miss E. C. Hodge and Mr. F. H. Jacobs.

We thank God for these workers in our midst, and we thank Him, too, for the many humble witnesses of His love who shines each in her own little corner, and thus helps to make the world bright.

"In this world of darkness, so we must shine,
You in your corner and I in mine.'

COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

Hamilton county convention was held in the town of Aurora. Mrs. Annie M. Steele presided. Greetings were given by Mrs. Stanley, and response by Miss Hiller. Mrs. E. M. Wilcox read a paper on "Individual Responsibility," which elicited much discussion; a paper was read by Mrs. Stanley on "Literature," and one by Mrs. Burt on a "Mother's Duties." The latter also led a Bible reading, which was very helpful. Ten different departments of work were taken up. The local union at Aurora had a week of temperance lectures preceding election.

Pawnee county convention met in Table Rock, opening with a consecration service, led by Mrs. J. D. Nesbitt, of Pawnee City. A very interesting mothers' meeting, conducted by Mrs. S. B. McCoy, of Pawnee City, kept all attentive. A Bible reading of texts bearing on the topics was interspersed throughout the discussion. Rev. Bailey, of Humboldt, gave an able lecture, and Mrs. Nesbitt, the president, gave an address on "Woman's Kingdom and Influence." This was Mrs. Nesbitt's first attempt at a public address, and she is warmly congratulated on her success by friends and the press. Little Lucy McCoy and Pauline Wright gave recitations, and Misses Katie and Edith Wood sweetly sang a duett. Three honorary members were gained. Other papers were read with such interest that only the knowledge that trains would not wait compelled an adjournment.

Thayer county held its convention in Alexandria. Six little L. T. L. children sang; recitations were given. The W. C. T. U. of Alexandria presented a beautiful floral boat to "Mother Putnam," county and district president; Rev. Vincent made a short address, and a collection was taken.

The lines of work were discussed at the morning meeting. The hour from eleven to twelve was given to devotions. The afternoon was devoted to papers and reports. A short talk was given on the duties of franchise, and Mrs. Putnam spoke on "The Associate Member." A very fine set of resolutions was adopted, embracing a provision for a school visiting committee in each union in the interests of scientific temperance instruction; a single standard of morality and a vote of thanks to Mayor Weir, of Lincoln.

The evening program was very full and included addresses by Mrs. Putnam and Rev. Bean; a paper Mrs. Warner; recitations; and "Hans Dunderkopp's View of Equality," by Mr. E. P. Griffen. Excellent music was rendered.

Merrick county convention was held by its president, Mrs. L. K. Gibbs, of Central City. It was also favored with the presence of its district president, Mrs. S. M. Walker, of Surprise. Subjects of papers and discussions: "Christians and Temperance"; "Unconscious Influence"; "Economy of Time and Strength"; "Influence of Hymns." The last two were from the manuscript of the late Miss Mary Ripley. A W. C. T. U. experience meeting and a question-box brought out some good ideas. An instructive talk on parliamentary usage was given. At the evening session, "Crumbs from our National Convention" was given by Mrs. Gibbs. The oft-asked question, "What is the W. C. T. U. doing?" was ably answered by Mrs. Walker, in an address listened to by a large and attentive audience. Resolutions strong for prohibition, equal franchise and church assistance were passed.

Saunders county convention, held at Ashland, was called for the purpose of electing officers and again taking the form of an organization. Two years ago the county union was left without a head by the removal of its president. Through the persistent efforts of the district president, delegates were assembled and officers elected, of which the president is Mrs. S. N. McIntyre of Ashland. Mrs. Walker gave an address; Rev. Miss Townsley, a Bible reading that was truly a word of hope and spiritual uplift; Mrs. McIntyre a paper on "Benefits of County Organization" and Mrs. Allen one on the "Signs of the Times." Reports from unions were helpful, and the occasion was felt to be one of encouragement and profit.

Butler county convention was well greeted at Ulysses by Geo. P. Reynolds for the city, Rev. Ingham for the churches, Mr. Challis for the press and Anna E. Ritchies for the union. The president's address by Mrs. Anna M. Bunting, followed. The following day papers were read on "Social Purity" and "School Franchise," followed by discussions which brought out many new ideas. Superintendents for departments were selected and a new department for our state organ. On the next day other papers were given on "Postmortem Praise," "Our World-Round Missionaries," "How to Make a Home out of a House," which were all good. Editor Challis of the Ulysses Dispatch, was introduced as a friend who believed in and advocated in his paper, equal rights. The last evening was pleasantly filled by a lecture by Mrs. S. M. Walker, who also sang by request, "There are bands of ribbon white, around the world."

Douglas county convention was held at Omaha. The Omaha women report they have been having "such rousing good times in our W. C. T. U. work," that it is not to be wondered at that they are saying, "This is the best county convention we have ever held." There were representatives from all the unions of Omaha and South Omaha, and reports from Valley union. Devotional exercises opened the first session. The welcome was extended by Mrs. G. W. Clark, in her usual bright and hearty manner. This was briefly responded to by each local president or her representative. Short but pithy speeches were made by several of the workers and by visiting brethren. Mrs. W. B. Smith led the noontide hour of prayer, Devotional exercises in the afternoon were led by Deaconess Hester Miller, who is district superintendent of evangelistic work. Then addresses by the ladies upon the subjects, "What are the most important lines of work to be taken up in Omaha?" "Food and dress; their relations to the surrounding conditions." Reports were heard from state superintendent of parlor meetings, Mrs. M. M. Pugh, who also reported plans for county fair work. At this time the newly organized Y union presented a most refreshing program of reports, recitations, songs and a delightful little speech from its acting president, Mrs. T. H. Waltemeyer. Great help was also felt in the presence and address of Rev. Miss Chapin, D. D., pastor of the Universalist church of Omaha. At the suggestion of Mrs. Clark, committees were appointed to ask the county commissioners to place a matron in the woman's department of the county jail, and to plan a crusade against the wine rooms of the city.

The faithful women of Omaha feel that God is answering their prayers. As they prayed on Crusade day that they might have the coöperation and sympathy of the pastors of the city, the thought of a lunch party came to sister Clark, to which the pastors and their wives should be invited, and where the desires and plans of the women should be presented. This was carried out. At this conference meeting one of the pastors moved that a committee of three women be appointed in each church to confer with the W. C. T. U. and in turn lay its plans before their respective pastors for approval and coöperation. This was carried, and the result has been the preaching of a temperance sermon in nearly all the churches on March 18, the passing of the pledge and teaching the temperance lesson on that day, while seven temperance mass-meetings were held in different parts of the city on that day, some in the afternoon and some in the evening, and one grand meeting in South Omaha. At these meetings the pastors participated and usually some W. C. T. U. women presented our work. The ladies have since been invited to hold their own distinctive meetings in two of the churches, which invitations were promptly accepted. The church committees meet with the W. C. T. U. once a month in the union of unions. Any movement bringing the temperance work more into the churches should be looked upon as a gain. We trust great good will be done in Omaha through this union of church and W. C. T. U.

Shop meetings are held on Tuesdays and Thursdays at Union Pacific car shops in Omaha, Miss Hester Miller, superintendent. These meetings are well attended by the men and warmly endorsed by officials.

For one week previous to April election for license or no-license, meetings were held each day at the noon hour at Burlington & Missouri shops at Havelock, Mrs. S. K. Dailey and Mrs. S. M. Smith, local and state superintendents, coöperating. Both the employés and officials gave much help. Mrs. Dailey has led the work for the last fourteen months most faithfully. Mrs. Woodward, National superintendent, attended the noon meeting at Omaha shops, March 29, and the day following at Havelock.

Seward W. C. T. U. held a very fine meeting on Neal Dow Day in the M. E. church, auditorium and lecture room being crowded. A number of choice selections and musical numbers were rendered by ladies and gentlemen not members of the union. Mrs. C. M. Woodward gave an interesting address. The Mandolin club also furnished some choice music. Neal Dow's birthday was quite generally observed in the state.

Later reports from Lincoln correct some statements in my last letter regarding the rescue work in that city in connection with Mayor Weir's enforcement of the law against the social evil. A committee of the ministers took the work in charge and secured Mrs. French, of the Salvation Army, to assist, opened up a rescue home, one of the ministers standing responsible for the expense of the first month. The work has since been carried on by the pastors and interested ladies who have come to their assistance. The union has had no responsibility in the matter since presenting its memorial to the ministers asking them and their churches to take up the work.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

THE QUARTERLY MEETING

was held March 30 at the Vermont Avenue Christian church, and was conceded to be one of the finest ever held; almost as many delegates were in attendance as at the annual convention. Devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. M. Merrick, superintendent evangelistic department. Rev. W. H. Schill delivered the address of welcome. Mrs. S. M. Hartsock responded, and captured one and all by her impromptu remarks. Rev. W. B. Matchett and Rev. Mr. Varvter were introduced, and gave us words of encouragement. Mrs. Anna Rice, of Batavia, N. Y., led in the noontide devotions. The corresponding secretary reported a great deal of work accomplished; an increase of thirty-one active and six honorary members; beside paying quarterage, $104.39 has been spent in the unions.

Mrs. Griffith, the District president, has had a quarter of untiring labor. A new work has been inaugurated among the messenger boys of our city. A mass-meeting was addressed by Mrs. M. E. Griffith. A temperance convocation was held in March. A lecture by Hon. Luther Benson, of Indiana, had a large audience in attendance.

Mrs. Mattie McClellan Brown lectured on the "Problem of Progress."

The Neal Dow celebration was held at Convention Hall, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. and Anti-Saloon League. It was, without doubt, the largest temperance gathering ever held in this city, five or six thousand persons being present, Protestant and Catholic, white and black. There were representatives from all the temperance organizations; some came in a body, with regalias and banners; the Junior Rechabites, little lads in white jackets and red caps, created enthusiasm.—[This great meeting was fully reported in THE UNION SIGNAL of April 12.—ED.]

March 21 Mrs. Brown spoke at headquarters, and in the evening a mass-meeting, held in Georgetown, was addressed by Luther Benson. March 22 temperance prayer-meetings were held in many of the churches. Friday evening an entertainment was given by the literature bureau; Saturday a children's mass-meeting.

A number of new members were introduced to the convention, and warmly welcomed. The devotional exercises of the afternoon session were conducted by Rev. Mr. Patch, followed with prayer by Rev. Mr. Johnson. Hon. Hiram Price and Judge McDowell were introduced; the former gave a stirring address, in which he laid considerable stress on Christian and temperance people dealing with grocers who deal in intoxicants.

The treasurer's reports showed receipts, $485.71; disbursements, $445.73. Mr. F. M. Bradley was introduced and spoke of the urgent need and made known his plans for obtaining a permanent home for our organization. Mr. Bradley was made chairman of an auxiliary to which this work was referred.

The superintendents then reported.

Legislative and petition:—Asked Senator Fry to present a remonstrance, prepared by Mrs. Mary Woodbridge, from all the state W. C. T. U. presidents, in regard to an increase of the tax on whisky. Assisted the National Reform Association by securing the signatures of our general officers to their petition, for the acknowledgment of God in the Constitution and forwarding the same to the proper Congressional committee. Assisted the Anti-Saloon League in circulating a petition addressed to the Senate committee in charge of the Babcock amendment to District liquor laws. The above amendment has since been favorably reported to the Senate by the committee.

It has been recently said by some of our senators that they did not know if the religious and philanthropic element of our city desired prohibition of the liquor traffic; that if they were assured that the churches and pastors favored it they would vote for it with a feeling of security that such a law would be enforced. We are now planning to let them know by getting the voice of the churches on the subject.

Juvenile work:—The Neuman Legion gave three hundred responsive readings to the First Congregational Sabbath-school and forty picture tracts to the primary class, three hundred Neal Dow letters to the mass-meeting of children March 24. A new Legion has been organized at Gurley Presbyterian church. The Neal Dow mass-meeting for children was held at Wesley Chapel M. E. church. The day proved all that could be desired and the L. T. L's, Bands of Hope and Junior Templars were represented. The Capitol Hill Band reports better work done this quarter than since its organization; have had an accession of twenty-four members, held nine meetings, six regular, three extra; talks have been given by Rev. E. O. Eldredge Mrs. H. A. Gillenwater, superintendent narcotics, and Mrs. Hartsock, superintendent scientific temperance instruction. Mr. Stahl entertained the band with songs and recitations from his Sunday-school temperance organization and we returned the visit with one hundred of our members, taking charge of their meeting for them. During the month of January held the sixth anniversary at which the children rendered a good program. At the District mass-meeting, Mrs. S. D. La Fetra read petition which was carried unanimously by the children.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

We, the children of the District of Columbia, representing various juvenile temperance organizations, respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to pass a bill prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in this District and to affix a penalty to the law prohibiting the sale of tobacco and cigarettes to boys and girls under sixteen years of age.

Unfermented wine?—Have been systematizing the work so that we may ascertain just which churches are using the fermented wine. Since the last report another Presbyterian church has adopted the use of unfermented wine. One hundred and sixty pages of literature distributed.

Mothers' meetings are held in some of the unions; however, we may term all the meetings such, for light is being continually shed on the path of all mothers who attend any W. C. T. U. meeting.

Sabbath observance:—Have gained a new local superintendent. Have sent requests to a number of the city pastors asking them to preach on the observance of the Sabbath the first and second Sabbaths in April; also, that as far as practicable the churches join with the Christian world in the union of prayer February 15. A bill was introduced in the United States Senate by Hon. Galloway, and in the House by Hon. E. Morse, to protect the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, as a day of rest and of worship in this District.

Evangelistic Department:— Three prayer services conducted; ten Bible readings given; clothing and provisions given to the poor; papers sent to the jail; visited a number of sick persons and prayed with them; visited two presidents of unions urging upon them greater activity; twenty-eight meetings held; ninety-seven pages literature distributed; nineteen postals written; thirty-two dollars expended; communicated with six pastors in regard to holding temperance prayer-meetings. A man who has been a slave for years to tobacco, has taken Christ as his deliverer, several others have professed to live different lives; sixty-nine visits have been made; a number of persons have promised to send their children to the L. T. L. and themselves attend church. Our missionary in Willow Tree Alley reports that some of the most desperate characters have professed faith in Christ and left the alley, others have passed from this life rejoicing in redeeming love.

Prison and Jail:—Almshouse, jail and hospitals have been visited; pages of literature distributed, 8,904; ten copies of the Changed Cross and one Testament given; letters stamped and mailed. One who is condemned to death declares himself a saved man through the grace of God; now he is anxious that his wife and children should become Christians. The prisoners are willing to listen to our Christian advice.

Literature Department:—The members of the literature bureau have been very busily engaged in preparing for an entertainment which was given March 23. Much literature has been purchased and used, there has been a revival in this department and we are expecting to see good results. At the Neal Dow anniversary over five thousand pages were distributed. Total number accounted for, 63,353.

Flower Mission: — Hospitals, jail, almshouse and the sick in their homes visited; literature distributed, 2,257 pages; money expended, $13.68; fruits and other delicacies given: 5½ dozen oranges; 79 bouquets; potted plants, 3; 6 dozen eggs colored and taken to Children's Hospital on Easter, also 85 colored picture cards on another occasion; 51 visits to the sick.

Narcotics: — This department has been pushed as vigorously as possible under the existing law, which unfortunately is defective in that it attaches no penalty to the one buying the cigar or cigarette; then, again, many want us to do something to punish those who are selling to minors, but are not willing to testify in open court against the venders of the weed.

Y. W. C. T. U.:—The Y's were very helpful at the New Year's reception held at headquarters, entertaining the guests and providing some of the refreshments. Our girls have been kept busy with the Moody meetings and the work in their own churches; seventeen meetings have been held by the unions. Vermont avenue reports forty-six active and thirty honorary members; fifty-seven adults have signed the pledges; Crusader Y numbers fifteen. The evangelistic and flower mission departments have done excellent work. First Baptist Y has thirty active members, and has induced many to sign the pledge. District superintendent has attended eight meetings, written ninety-seven postals and thirty-eight letters.

Heredity and Hygiene:—Gave an address from chart to the Capitol Hill union. Gave a talk to a mothers' meeting under the auspices of the King's Daughters; have distributed 100 pages of literature, also half-dozen copies of Good Health, and secured two new subscribers for the publication.

Messenger Boys' Department:— Two entertainments have been given, at which a large number of boys have been reached, in all about one hundred. The socials are held weekly, with a different audience each time, in order to reach all under this head. Our headquarters are not large enough and imperative need is felt for a recreation hall, reading-room and gymnasium, which we hope to have in the near future. A number of the boys have already signed the total abstinence pledge; with such an efficient superintendent as Mrs. Nellie Bradley we expect to report progress in this new department right along.

The following resolutions were adopted at the quarterly meeting:

Resolved, whereas, the late United States Senator, Alfred H. Colquitt, has been promoted to higher realms to do further service for the Great King of kings,

And whereas, it was largely due to his good offices as governor of Georgia in the early days of our National society, that our honored President, Miss Frances E. Willard, had the gateway to all the South thrown open to her and her coadjutors.

And whereas, Senator Colquitt was always a strong and consistent advocate of total abstinence and prohibition as well as a loyal Christian and pure patriot.

Therefore, resolved, by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the District of Columbia in quarterly session assembled, that our organization, through his death, has sustained an almost irreparable loss.

Resolved further, that we deplore his loss to the United States Congress as well, since never in the history of the nation were pure and unsullied patriots more needed than now.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

ASHLAND, Ore., union is having most profitable mothers' meetings, using "Unanswered Prayer," as a text book.

SIXTEEN members of the Franklin, Pa., Y went recently to the Micklen church, a few miles out of town and organized a Y union.

A FLAG drill was given by the Loyal Temperance Legion, of Dunbar, Pa., at the stirring Neal Dow celebration in which the W. C. T. U. and Y united.

THE names of all delegates to the Michigan state convention to be held May 22, 23, 24 and 25, at Ann Arbor, should be sent at once to Mrs. W. W. Wetmore, chairman of entertainment committee.

ON the morning of April 17, after a brief illness, Mrs. Clara Bird, an active and honored member of the Woodstock, Ill., W. C. T. U., passed into rest. "God calls the workers but the work goes on."

MRS. HOFFMAN and Rev. Eugenia St. John will present the "Economy of forces through organization" in the department of philanthropy and reform at the Social Science Federation meeting in Kansas City, Mo., May 3.

AT a recent entertainment given in Addison, N. D., forty-nine signers were secured to the pledge. A young school-teacher, whose genuine enthusiasm will lead her to yet greater things for the cause, was mainly instrumental in the success of the gathering.

FLOWER mission work will be aided by the results of the recent necktie social, given by the Dunbar, Pa., Y's, who find these socials easy to arrange; an excellent plan to get members and keep them interested in the work; and also to secure funds for their treasury.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., W. C. T. U. has connected with its work a mission whose meetings are largely attended by young men and boys and are productive of much good. On March 18 the pastor of one of the churches preached a temperance sermon by request of the union.

MISS BELLE KEARNEY has been wonderfully sustained during her first two weeks of labor since her illness, having delivered eleven addresses, organized four unions, held four business meetings and formed one L. T. L. She will be ready for service in the North a little later in the season.

EVANSTON, Ill., Y's held a public meeting, April 21, at which Miss Clara Parrish, National Y organizer, gave the address to young women, and Dr. Delano presented the financial aspect in his own inimitable manner. A number of young people expressed their intention to aid the society's work by giving their names as members at the close.

AT a meeting attended by seven hundred women only, in the South Eighteenth Street M. E. church in Philadelphia, April 9, eighty-six new members were obtained for the first Y. W. C. T. U. through the efforts of Major Geo. A. Hilton, who spoke upon impure literature, drunkenness among women and social impurity. It was a wonderful meeting, such as never before known in this city.

THE president of Lansing, Mich., W. C. T. U., Mrs. Malone, writes: "On last Sunday afternoon our W. C. T. U. held its monthly gospel temperance meeting. The largest audience of the season assembled, as it had been announced that Rollo Kirk Bryan would give one of his chalk-talks. Mr. Bryan clearly has a mission, and those who contribute to making his work known, that his chalk may constantly be kept busy will serve the cause of home and country."

"WE find the serpent's trail in this Eden of loveliness," writes a correspondent from the healthful pine regions of Florida. "Wherever the white man goes a saloon is found, called, and rightly too, by the denizens of these forests 'The Tiger.' We are told that seven negro men have been shot in this place since Christmas. These graves are within sight of us and yet there is no law to investigate these crimes. Or if a law it is not used. Will not God bring us again to judgment for this crime to fellow men?"

AN address by Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, state president, is announced for the evening session of the seventh Franklin county, Me., convention, May 24, at Shorey Chapel, Allen's Mills. The inviting program promises to be of varied interest and more than usually representative of the county work.

AN unusual audience greeted the Y's annual convention at Oakland, Cal., April 20. Three-fourths of the two hundred and fifty members of the California industrial army being in attendance. Every one raised his hand when asked if he would assist to oppose the saloon, and all joined in singing, "America," at the close.

THE Illinois Eastern Hospital for the insane at Kankakee, Ill., which has over two thousand patients, asks that all who read this and who have copies of illustrated magazines for which they have no use, will donate the same to the institution and send them boxed by freight, the charges on which the institution will pay.

OVER five hundred pounds of temperance and religious literature were placed in a druggist's store at Creighton, Neb., last fall, by Mrs. Ellen Dayton Blair, National W. C. T. U. chalk-talker. In six weeks it had all been distributed and numerous calls were heard for more, showing the demand for literature, which should be met.

A MEMORIAL window was placed by the Stanhope, N. J., W. C. T. U. in the Methodist church there, March 7, 1892. The necessary funds were raised by a social affair —a supper being given at the home of the president, at which one dollar admission for two was charged. This also helped to gain public sentiment for the temperance cause.

MRS. M. L. T. HIDDEN, the valued state organizer for Western Washington, has just closed a six weeks' work in the state, including the annual convention of Pierce county in Tacoma. She gave nine addresses in the different churches of Tacoma on "Woman's Place in the Temperance Reform," and also gave an address to the women of Seattle in the Chamber of Commerce at that place.

IN the city of Cheney, Kan., at the spring election of city officers, prohibition was the issue. Notwithstanding the dust and wind storm, nor the fact that they must use the Australian ballot system for the first time, fifty of the women went and voted, while less than twenty who were eligible as electors stayed at home. About two-thirds of them voted the prohibition ticket.

MRS. C. HARRISON, president of Central division, Texas, W. C. T. U., passed away peacefully San Jacinto's day, April 21, in Fort Worth, Texas. She had no relatives nearer than England, but the W. C. T. U. sisters had many tender ways of showing their love. She died among flowers and friends. Her works do follow her.

"Somewhere there is work to do."

JENNIE SMITH'S card "To Gentlemen" to be hung in railroad depots, barber shops, etc., is a striking setting forth of the evils of profanity and drink in a simple and practical way. The card is printed in colors, measures nine by twelve inches and is an admirable means to catch the eye and arrest the thought of those to whom it is addressed. Copyrighted by Jennie Smith, railroad evangelist, Mountain Lake Park, Maryland.

THE calendar of the Moorestown, N. J., W. C. T. U. is a convenience which all active unions should adopt. This one measures seven by nine inches, and is of plain white cardboard, printed in black, good sized type. One side contains scriptural mottoes, list of officers and superintendents of work, place of meeting, pledge and other items of information. On the reverse is a list of weekly meetings giving exact dates and subjects for the year.

THE equal suffragists of the third congressional district, Kansas, were made happy recently by a gift of twenty dollars for use in securing speakers to agitate for the constitutional amendment now pending in Kansas. The donor was West Philadelphia W. C. T. U. If other friends of equal suffrage want to assist in sending an Anthony, Chapman or Shaw to help the workers for this amendment, they can address Helen L. Kimber, Parsons, Kan., president third district Equal Suffrage Association.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The thirteenth annual convention of the Texas W. C. T. Union will be held in Taylor, Tex., June 15 to 17, inclusive. Our work has gained in favor this year, and we expect a large attendance. Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman will be present, and all visiting friends of the cause will be heartily welcomed.

THE RESPONSIVE READING

for April, by Mrs. Helen M. Barker, on "Our Stewardship," is invaluable for the local unions in all matters of finance.

We have still in stock Mrs. Grubb's admirable reading on "Work Among Foreigners," and that of Mrs. Rice upon the Loyal Temperance Legion, also some copies of the Readings for January and February on "Purity" and "Literature."

These are quite as appropriate and helpful now as when first issued.

Price, one cent each; 50c. per 100.

The Best Medicine.

GRANULA, Originated by Dr. James C. Jackson over 30 years ago, is a scientifically prepared and twice-cooked food containing all the nutritious properties of the unequaled Genesee Valley winter wheat in such form and proportion as to be quickly digested and readily assimilated.

It has been called "The Perfect Food." As such it is a remarkable remedy for certain diseases, and if persistently used will remove Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and kindred ailments.

Granula should be eaten daily by children, as it builds up the tissues rapidly and clears the system of impurities. Manufactured by

Cor. Secy's Notes.

Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, our first round-the-world-missionary, who has spent the winter in the Hawaiian Islands, has returned to our own country, being in California, and during the summer will be addressed, "Care Messrs. Kidder, Peabody & Co., Boston, Mass."

A most spirited letter has reached us from Mrs. Hoffman who has been in attendance upon the Louisiana W. C. T. U. convention at Shreveport, where she presented many phases of the temperance work. In response to an invitation extended by prominent gentlemen of the city, she addressed the public the following Monday evening on woman suffrage, which was received with enthusiasm and applause. Appreciation of her labors was manifested by a reception given her the next evening at the house of the chairman of the meeting.

Mrs. L. M. Dodge, wife of Professor Dodge, of Berea, Ky., writes of their district convention held at Kirksville, at which attendance and interest were good; the reports from unions were encouraging, showing interest all along the line. Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp and Miss Laura Clay, of Lexington, were in attendance and added greatly to the interest of all sessions, especially the evening meetings which they addressed. The time was well occupied with papers, discussions and routine business. The Kentucky W. C. T. U. will hold its usual ten days' school of methods during the Chautauqua gathering in June.

Mrs. Clara V. Weaver, National superintendent of the department of state and county fairs, has issued her circular of the year, a rallying call, giving first, the object of the department. She then urges the erection of a tabernacle for permanent headquarters on all state agricultural grounds, where opportunity will be given for the presentation of W. C. T. U. work in all its lines. Also that schools of methods be there held, and gives the remunerative features of such effort, with admirable suggestions concerning decorations.

We heartily congratulate our friend, Mrs. W. Wakelin, nee Mrs. N. A. Hitchcock, president Nebraska W. C. T. U., and commiserate our Fremont friends who, because of her marriage must give her to the good people of Brock, where she with her husband, will be at home after May 1.

The supreme court of South Carolina having declared their dispensary law unconstitutional, let us praise God and join hands with the W. C. T. U. and all good temperance people of that state in an effort to establish legal prohibition.

We are again rejoiced to find temperance work particularly recognized in the program of a missionary meeting, by which is emphasized our unity in the work of the Master. At the second quarterly meeting of the Minneapolis branch of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. church the "noon-tide prayer for temperance" was offered by Mrs. L. W. Irvine, president tenth district W. C. T. U.

Gratitude was extended by the National W. C. T. U. to Mayor Hopkins, of Chicago, for refusal of the "Amusement License" applied for by Garfield Park owners, granting which, the place would have been of the most disreputable character. The mayor kindly received and acknowledged the words.

A saloon license was applied for in a new place in Lancaster Co., Pa., where it was not "needed to accommodate the traveling public," but urged as a necessity, under circumstances appealing to the sympathies of neighbors and friends of the applicant, an old and crippled soldier. A member of the W. C. T. U. did not, however, approve of assisting one person to the detriment of many, and to prevent it diligently circulated a remonstrance, to which she secured the signatures of men and women. This was presented to the license court by the union's attorney, who plead with success the cause he represented. The license was refused, and the item is given that others, seeing what may be done by our earnest women, may be encouraged to do likewise.

A friend from Spencer, Ia., writes with much commendation of the labors of Mrs. L. E. Bailey, of Michigan, during their campaign for prohibition. Many unions were organized, and members added to others, over two hundred having been added in the eleventh district alone. Our friend says she is a pleasant, logical speaker, and convincing in all her arguments.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

PREPARATIONS are being made by Catlin, Ill., Y to hold a grand temperance revival beginning May 8. This busy Y union served dinner to voters election day and cleared about ten dollars. This was the first attempt of the kind in the village.

Nat'l Temp. Hospt.

Conditions of membership in the Hospital Association: Signing of the temperance pledge, payment of $5 membership fee and $1 annually thereafter.

Needs of the Hospital: Members in its Association; Endowment of beds, contributions of money, blankets, towels, etc. (As quilts cannot be used to good advantage on hospital beds, it is better to sell them at home and to send the money thus received.) Acquaintance with its principles and purposes. Urgent invitation is extended to all interested, and especially to all physicians, to visit the institution and make full inquiries in regard to its workings.

At the last meeting of the Board of Trustees of the National Temperance Hospital, a vote of thanks to all who aided in the recent graduation exercises was unanimously passed and ordered published. Miss Alice M. Guernsey has removed from Chicago to Rutland, Vt., and still has charge of the L. T. L. work for the hospital. All communications and money to aid in furnishing the L. T. L. room and endowing the beds should be addressed accordingly.

The first occupant of the L. T. L. room, a little girl of eight years, was received on April 18. Ohio has applied for the admission of a child, and the case is now being investigated. The room is now in very good condition, some items of furnishings, having been added since our last report. Mrs. Wadham, of Irving Park, has donated some handsome hand-painted oatmeal bowls, white French china decorated with forget-me-nots—and her little daughters have sent framed pictures for wall decorations. It will take about eight dollars a week to keep a little child well cared for and properly nursed in this delightful spot. How many L. T. L. organizations will send enough for this purpose?

The hospital is recently in receipt of a generous donation from Dr. L. L. Gregory, of the medical staff, who sent a supply of magazines—Harper's, Scribner's and The Century, and a year's subscription to The Trained Nurse. The Silver Cross for one year has also been donated. Mrs. Dr. Gentry sent four dainty china cups and saucers and a silver sugar and creamer, for use in the diet kitchen. All interested tender grateful acknowledgments. The great need of the diet kitchen now is a supply of dainty oatmeal bowls and plates. An interesting case now in the hospital is that of a young man who came all the way from Butte, Montana, to the hospital of his choice for treatment. His mother accompanied him and is enjoying the restful, home life exceedingly.

Miss Ella Safford, superintendent of hospital work for the tenth district W. C. T. U. of Iowa, has issued a very interesting circular to physicians, giving comparative statistics regarding death rates under alcoholic and non-alcoholic treatment. Her conclusion is: "Therefore, sober reason seems to compel the conclusion that alcohol is not a beneficial or necessary adjunct to medical practice, and, therefore, I would ask you to refrain from its use in the cases that come under your charge, believing that the best interests of not only your honorable and humane profession, but of humanity in general, will be best served by such a course." Miss Safford has done well in making her appeal.

More and more is the fact impressed upon the board of trustees that the time has come when an effort must be made to secure the erection of a building adapted to the needs of the institution. A plan will be formulated at an early day for this purpose, and it is earnestly hoped will meet with generous response. A very small sum of money is now held by the treasurer sacred to this purpose. Temperance people of all sorts will doubtless be glad to aid this enterprise—the one scientific demonstration of their principles, and but a short time need elapse before the most sanguine hopes may be realized. The plans will be made public ere long.

WHITE RIBBON PORTFOLIO.

Part One

has an excellent likeness of Gen. Clinton B. Fisk. Of him Mrs. Stevenson says: "Clinton B. Fisk, our brother beloved, was a man cast in nature's noblest mold. He was an 'all round' character. Zealous without bigotry, intense without bitterness, uncompromising, and yet nobly conciliatory, he seemed the one man whom we could not spare from the ranks of the reform forces. But God saw otherwise, and on July 9, 1890, called the brave soldier home. He who had espoused the cause of the weak against the strong; who had dared to accept the leadership of the Prohibition party, did not shrink back from the last great enemy, but in death as in life he came off 'more than conqueror.' Heaven's song must be the sweeter for his voice, but earth is poorer since his loss."

WHAT OUR FRIENDS SAY:

"The White Ribbon Portfolio is just received, for which I cannot feel sufficiently thankful. As I look into these precious faces, I say how beautiful a thing is consecrated, Christian life! I believe these dear ones have consecrated all to God, and I earnestly pray that He may grant them many years to work for the temperance cause. I inclose 25 cents for another Portfolio to send to my niece and nephew in China."

"I think the White Ribbon Portfolio one of the most beautiful things I have seen. I have Part I; please send Part II."

"I am so much pleased with Part I of the White Ribbon Portfolio. I want Part II now."

"Have just received my White Ribbon Portfolio, Part I. Am delighted with it."

"Was more than pleased with White Ribbon Portfolio, Part I. It is well executed, and, as to the dear faces, I want my family to become as familiar with them as with our relatives. I prize it beyond all else I have received from the house."

"I was so greatly pleased with my White Ribbon Portfolio, Part I, that I am more anxious for Part II."

"I find White Ribbon Portfolio, Part I, most satisfactory. It is a pleasure to be able to possess pictures of so many well-known leaders, many of whom we have longed to see face to face."

Our Library Table.

BAYOU FOLK. A collection of stories and sketches illustrative of the types of character found in the country about New Orleans. Kate Chopin's style is uniquely picturesque, and often powerful. The pathetic, too, has a large place in her narrations, while delicate touches of humor relieve what would otherwise be a somewhat too all pervasive sadness of coloring. BAYOU FOLK is a collection of literary gems, each one shining with an individual beauty peculiarly its own.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York.

ANTI-HIGHER CRITICISM OR TESTIMONY TO THE INFALLIBILITY OF THE BIBLE. Edited and compiled by Rev. L. W. Munhall, M. A.

In the summer of 1893, Dr. Munhall conducted what was known as the Sixth Annual Interdenominational Seaside Bible Conference in Asbury Park, N. J. The object of this conference—one of many conducted by Dr. Munhall—was to direct its careful testimony against the "audacious and persistent assaults made upon the integrity of the Bible by many pastors, editors, theological professors and other educators belonging to the orthodox churches." The conference was attended by a scholarly and devout audience, and so well received were many of the addresses because of their clearness and convincing power that Dr. Munhall has gathered them into the compass of the book named above. Among its contributors is Howard Osgood, D. D. LL.D., Prof. Wm. G. Moorehead, D. D., Pastor James H. Brooks, D. D., William Dinwiddie, D. D., and others. The volume is rich in its testimony to the validity of the Book against which puny infidelism must one day unavailing spend its last strength and die.

Hunt & Eaton, New York; Cranston & Curts, Cincinnati.

A POET'S PORTFOLIO. LATER READINGS. By William Wetmore Story. These poems are "dished up" (if one may be pardoned so crude and unpoetical an expression) in a way something differing from the ordinary presentation of this class of literature. The poet who hides himself behind the impersonality of "he" sits down amid the congenial surroundings of blue skies, enticing woods and a murmuring spring beside a sympathetic "she," and the two hold a lazily-animated dialogue, touching all manner of themes, the poet turning now and again to his well-filled portfolio to read aloud to his friend and critic what the muse has confided to him of truth, beauty or idle wondering. Some of his poems are finely wrought, and all of them have a merit of true poetic beauty. The reader wonders a little as he reads whither the conversation-stream of this interesting "he" and "she" is tending, but the poet will not turn romancer, and just when the warm imagination of his reader is ready for a tender climax "he" turns to his portfolio and reads to his audience of one a beautiful little song of love and the curtain falls.

PATENTS
FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

WHITE RIBBON PORTFOLIO. PART I.

What a fine, spirituelle face is that of Miss Willard in the frontispiece of The White Ribbon Portfolio, Part I.

Mrs. Katherine Lente Stevenson, who has written the beautiful and chaste description of these noble white-ribboners, says of Miss Willard: "To write a new sketch of Miss Willard is well-nigh impossible. No woman has been more continuously viewed from all angles of vision, concerning no woman of this generation has so much been said—yet who has told the story of her life? Who can tell it? It must be viewed from the vantage-ground of history before its full proportions shall be known."

NEXT TO MY BIBLE.

I am pleased to be able at last to send money for our grand UNION SIGNAL. Next to my Bible I esteem it the most comforting, instructive reading.

The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association (The Temple, Chicago,) have just brought out in their "White Ribbon Portfolio" an interesting collection of prominent White-Ribboners, with brief sketches. The whole is intended to be artistic, rather than biographical.—New York Independent.

"DELIGHTED WITH IT."

"Part I of White Ribbon Portfolio came this morning. I am delighted with it. Enclosed is twenty-five cents for Part II. If the picture of our beloved state president is as good as those in Part I, I can assure you it will be in great favor in Maine."

Competent judges and loving friends say the picture of Miss Mary Allen West in part I. White Ribbon Portfolio, is the best she ever had taken. It is a reproduction of a photograph taken in Japan. It alone is worth more than the price of the portfolio.

Orders for the Quarterly Temperance Lesson for June 17 (prepared by Mrs. Helen G. Rice, National superintendent of Loyal Temperance work,) and issued as a supplement to The Young Crusader can be filled after May 1, i. e., orders for the supplement alone. The Young Crusader and supplement together will be ready May 21. The former arrangement is for the accommodation of state workers who wish to secure the lesson for early distribution among county and district superintendents, and it is hoped, will greatly facilitate the wide circulation of this most valuable aid to the teaching of the Word on temperance lines.

CAMPAIGN ECHOES.

A well-printed book, neatly and strongly bound, is "Campaign Echoes." It is the autobiography of Mrs. Letitia Youmans, the pioneer of the white-ribbon movement in Canada. It is written by the request of the Provincial Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Ontario, with an introduction by Miss Frances E. Willard, indorsed by Lady Henry Somerset. Though an invalid, Mrs. Youmans has written an interesting history of her life, and the movement in which she was engaged. This substantial and entertaining volume is worthy of a wide circulation.—Boston Star.

Signal Notes.

An addition of membership amounting to eight hundred and twenty-five was gained by the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America during March, five hundred and thirty-one of whom were women and girls.

That the one thousand seven hundred and fifty field officers in the Salvation Army of America reach some one million four hundred thousand people through indoor meetings alone every month is the statement made by Gen. Ballington Booth.

A commendable movement has been started to ask the legislature of Illinois to accept the Lincoln monument at Springfield, from the association now having it in charge, to complete it and put it in perfect repair, provide a suitable custodian for it and keep access to it, free and open to the American people forever. If this is not done the monument in a very few years will crumble to pieces.

The Children's Home Society is an organization for the purpose of finding homes for homeless children. It has headquarters in Chicago, and is already, in a short period of existence, organized in fourteen different states with application from twenty-nine others. It is a practical method to improve society by guaranteeing proper home training for friendless and homeless children.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary boards are beginning to include "temperance work in mission lands" among their topics and in the many papers which they so ably edit. This is a significant sign of the times. Ten years ago they would not have dreamt of doing it. The Century magazine, New York City, is about to publish a careful study of the scientific and statistical side of the drink question, which is another remarkable token of the progress of the movement.

A seven days' gospel temperance mission was held recently in the north of France at Boulogne-Sur-Mer, Calais and Dunkerque by the Société Française de Temperance de la Croix Bleue. Thousands of handbills made known to the residents the existence of this French temperance society. Professors in the technical colleges were present at several of the meetings, being in sympathy with the movement, believing it would be an additional aid in the solution of social questions. Earnest appeals were made by the speaker, Monsieur Ludwig, of Paris, calling attention to the fearful ravages of drink throughout France.

The National Council of Women, through its president and secretary, has called an executive committee meeting for May 7 and 8 in Philadelphia. Plans will be considered looking to the advancement of the work of the council as promulgated by its first president, Frances E. Willard; arrangements will also be made for the second triennial session, which will take place in Washington, D. C., next February, and altogether this business meeting will be one of exceptional importance to women. Communications from those desiring to attend the gathering should be addressed to Rachel Foster Avery, Somerton, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Artisan Expedition to America, sent out by the Dundee (Scotland) Daily News in 1893 has made its final reports, and a brief bulletin of the delegates' impressions has been issued for the press. Among other conclusions they arrive at are: That labor on the average is remunerated at about double the rates paid in the old country; that holidays are few in number and workingmen have little time for recreation; that houses of workingmen are more comfortably and neatly furnished here than in the old country; the standard of living is much higher; American workmen pay more for clothing and medical attendance but less for transportation; that the expense of keeping up a family is doubtless the reason why the native born Americans have as a rule, so few children, and that the conditions of abor, variable climate, long hours, quality of drinking water are all against America. The result of the expedition will doubtless be to spread a feeling of content among the British workingmen and to dissipate many a longing desire to emigrate to America, the land of the free.

WE desire to call the attention of our readers to the admirable report from New Jersey on page 11. It will be found especially interesting and encouraging to workers in the scientific temperance and legislative departments.

AN important gathering convened in New York's state capitol last Tuesday—the sixth constitutional convention. As our readers know, the most vital amendment to be presented to this body of one hundred and seventy-five delegates—to whom the people of the Empire state have intrusted the task of suggesting revisions of their laws—is the proposition to strike out the word "male" and give women full suffrage. Women everywhere and all sympathizers in political equality await with eager interest the outcome of this convention, which, if favorable, will give woman's cause an irresistible impetus.

A LEADING Democratic politician of Kansas, who says that his party is opposed to striking the word "male" from the constitution of that state, makes the sage remark that "the law never touches women except with tenderness and partiality." Sundry laws touching the interests of women occur to our mind and make us rather curious to know this eminent lawyer's definition of the words "tenderness" and "partiality"; but we will only ask Mr. Overmyer if he ever heard of "age of consent" laws? And does he not recognize the help that even woman's municipal ballot has been in raising that age in his own state of Kansas to eighteen years?

THE movement which promises so much for the protection of boys—the anti-cigarette crusade—originated in the public schools of New York and is rapidly becoming national in its scope. Its object is the creation of a sentiment against this vice among the boys themselves by pointing out the evils which attend and follow it. Not only is the moral and physical degeneration caused by cigarette smoking emphasized, but also the serious obstacle the habit invariably is to a boy's education and to a young man's business career. Members of the Anti-Cigarette League pledge themselves to abstain from the use of cigarettes in any form until they reach the age of twenty-one years. It is to be hoped that by that time they will be ready to forswear tobacco in all its forms forever.

AS WILL be noticed in our news from Canada on another page, the W. C. T. U. and Christian Endeavor Societies of Montreal are engaged in very practical temperance work. They are endeavoring to eliminate the saloon feature from the grocery. We have reason to know that in Chicago and, doubtless, in all places where liquor is sold by grocers, the result is, as in Montreal, increased use of alcoholic drinks among women. Surely it ought not to be difficult to secure legislation which would check the—alas, that we should say it—growing tendency to "alcoholism" among society women. For many a voter, while opposing sumptuary law for himself, would, under the same circumstances, deem it a good thing for the women folk. What male citizen (putting himself out of the question) would not vote for prohibition if that was the only way to keep his wife or daughter sober?

"WHETHER woman suffrage be in itself right or wrong," says the Presbyterian Journal, "the women would make short work of the liquor traffic. They suffer all its woes without the sensual pleasure of the corrupted taste which sways the men who have come under its influence and makes them helpless." And what of the men who have never come under its enslaving influence, the men who deceive themselves with the belief that if they let liquor alone liquor will let them alone? Are we to believe that because the liquor traffic exists a majority of the men of these United States are swayed by the drink appetite? No, it is not a corrupted taste, not the influence of sensual pleasure which makes the majority of men helpless before this great iniquity. It is rather the influence of party politics which makes them blind. Could they—nay, would they—but shake off the fetters of liquor parties, woman's ballot would not be needed in order to make short work of the drink traffic.

THE Temperance Congress Auxiliary to California International Exposition will hold an eight-day session commencing May 21. It will consider the question of temperance as related to education, philanthropy, religion and government, and will endeavor in this way to unify the temperance work of the coast. The president of each organization will have charge of the program on the days assigned to it, W. C. T. U. days being the 24th and 25th. We bespeak for this important congress the hearty cooperation of all interested in the protection of the home.

EMPLOYERS who oppose the eight-hour day for the wage worker would do well to inform themselves as to the result of experiments recently made along this line in England. A notable one is that in the great iron works at Salford, where for the purpose of experiment the working time was reduced a year ago from fifty-three to forty-eight hours a week. The report, as published in the London Times, of March 28, shows conclusively that as far as the output of that industry is concerned the eight-hour day is of decided advantage to the employer. As employers generally consider this question from the economic rather than the humanitarian point of view, this experiment will doubtless result in a more general adoption of the eight-hour system, not only in Great Britain (where the government itself has already introduced it to some extent) but all over the world.

ANOTHER great trust has through its insatiable greed and its arbitrary methods, brought upon itself the search light of legal investigation. The state of Illinois won a signal victory in its contest with the whisky trust; now it is attacking another mighty influence for evil, the cigarette trust. At the instigation of local tobacco dealers, Attorney-general Maloney has entered proceedings against the American Tobacco Company for alleged violation of the statutes. This mammoth combine is said to manufacture ninety-eight per cent of all the paper cigarettes in America and has a capital stock of thirty-five million dollars. Its dividends last year were twenty-five per cent, while retail dealers were only allowed to make thirty-five cents on every thousand. The court is asked to restrain this trust "conceived in fraud" and living by vampirism—preying upon the very life blood of the nation—from selling cigarettes in the state of Illinois, and local dealers from handling its goods. This is a good illustration of the truth that evil sooner or later brings about its own destruction.

A STRAW which significantly indicates the trend of popular thought on the saloon question is the decision of Postmaster-General Bissell that no applicant shall be appointed to the position of postmaster in a town where at any time he has sold liquor. As almost every member of the present Congress has one or more applicants for these offices, who have at one time or another either sold or supervised the selling of liquid "refreshment," their surprise at this ruling is mixed with consternation, and they are anxiously awaiting the result of a case now pending in which the would-be postmaster once kept a hotel and leased the bar to outside parties. Mr. Bissell does not regard the matter from a temperance or moral, but purely from a business standpoint. "From my observation and experience," he says, "I am convinced that any man directly or indirectly interested in the liquor business is in a measure unfitted by his occupation to fully and capably discharge his official duties in any branch of the postal service." It speaks of good times come, and better times coming, when those in authority decide that connection with the saloon business interferes with the proper discharge of official duties. The day is undoubtedly near at hand when this "business" rule will be applied, not only to the postal service, but to all public offices whether in the gift of the President or the people.

"HIS WILL OUR PEACE."

BY MIRIAM E. BIRD.

"My peace," I said, "dear Lord, my peace I seek;
Amid life's tossing tides the heart grows weak,
And faith grows faint. Is there no star,
No voice, to guide me, Lord, beyond the bar?"

And still, like seaweed in the surf, my soul
Had neither rest, nor purpose, nor a goal.
No weird star shone, nor any angel spoke;
Life's tides alone the awful silence broke.

But far away a radiance on them shone,
As from a moon whence passing clouds have blown.
At last I understood. If life for me
Has only tides, then these His message be!

"Thy peace," I sobbed, "give me, O Lord, thy peace."
That prayer He heard and bade the tempest cease.
One shining star on the horizon hung,
And lo! a singing shell the waves upflung.

Delaware, O.

THE GINGHAM GUILD AT CLIFTON.

BY MRS. F. M. HOWARD.

Clifton is a manufacturing town of a respectable size, located between the two oceans and on American soil. Quite naturally, there are to be found in it the extremes of riches and poverty which enter into the society of every town, and especially where the greater portion of its population are the employed, while the small minority are the very wealthy who furnish capital and employment.

As might be expected, these two classes knew very little of each other. The laborers saw the rich few apparently enjoying every good thing in life without a care, and the socialistic among them had hard, bitter thoughts; the wealthy looked on at the toiling hundreds with pity for their hard, sordid lives, still not knowing just when or how to extend a helping hand to them; while the middle class contemplated both sides, seeing how much good might be done could the two classes be brought together in intelligent harmony.

Here, as everywhere, the octopus of social life in all grades, the liquor interest, had settled itself and its feelers were reaching out, up, down, drawing the poor laborer, the sons of the wealthy manufacturers, as well as of the middle class, into its clinging grasp, and yet public sentiment seemed almost paralyzed.

There were a few faithful souls however who kept stirring the waters of temperance thought, and praying earnestly for light to break in on the dark prospect. Mary Carver was one of these, a broad-minded woman who, in lieu of matrimonial cares, had given time and thought to economic questions.

Mrs. Hilton, wife of a foreman in one of the mills, was another earnest soul, and Mattie Sloan, who from a light-hearted, gay girl of fashion had been transformed to an earnest, discriminating woman by a drink tragedy in her family was a third.

These three met one day with the earnest, prayerful, question upon their lips, "What can we do?"

"We must organize," said Mrs. Hilton, "and cultivate public sentiment. Enlist all our Clifton ladies in the enterprise, rich and poor together, and present a solid front of opposition and influence to rout the enemy. Mrs. Blunt will join us I am sure; she is a good woman when she sees any special need of active goodness."

"I see a snag upon which our enterprise will catch at the first trip," said Mattie Sloan. Mrs. Blunt in her rich garments would drive the really needy ones out of our circle, or whatever we may choose to call ourselves, by very force of contrast."

"You are right, Mattie," replied Mary Carver, thoughtfully. "We must have an equality rather than a quality club if we wish to accomplish the best results. I have it. Let us level dress distinctions at the first sweep and organize a Gingham Guild. Then Biddy Mulrooney can come to our meetings as well dressed as Mrs. Blunt, and sure it is she needs our help far more."

"Mary Carver, you are a Solomon in skirts," cried Mrs. Hilton, enthusiastically. "The very novelty of the plan will insure its success and I can foresee that dressed on an equality, we shall naturally come to a closer intimacy than would be possible where a part of us were feeling humbled by the richer costumes of others. I am anxious for Mrs. Blunt, Mrs. Jackson and others I could name to become acquainted with some of the humble operatives whose labors are helping to build the fortunes they enjoy."

"I can see the wisdom of your thought," rejoined Mary Carver, "yet who can blame the woman in a cotton mixture for shrinking from contrast with the dresses which these ladies wear ordinarily. The hand clad in a faded cotton glove does not reach out heartily to meet the kid of the millionaire proprietor's wife. It takes a strong mind to rise above social distinctions, and little as I care for the item of dress in the main, I confess I do not relish sharp contrasts myself."

The idea met with a warm welcome from all classes when it is broached by its three earnest sponsors. Mrs. Blunt saw at once the possibilities which it opened up. As Mrs. Hilton had said, she was a good woman at heart, with reasonably correct ideas, and she had felt the barrier existing between herself and some of her less favored neighbors.

It is a pity that clothes are a help or hindrance everywhere. Christ, clad in kingly robes of purple, could never have reached the class which so sorely needed His uplifting hand. Mrs. Blunt in silk and jewels was illy equipped to counsel patience and fortitude in others tried and tempted through poverty and its train of life, and she felt it; hence had meddled very little with the affairs of those outside of her "set"—to the dwarfing of her soul.

"I think you have struck the key-note of success, Mrs. Hilton," she said quite warmly, "and while we will in no sense regard our gingham as a uniform, yet I recommend that we carry it into our social gatherings as well as into our purely business meetings, and I anticipate very satisfactory results."

Mrs. Blunt set the fashions for her set, and her name as a member of the Gingham Guild drew in others whose money and influence were useful for a complete success. The first meeting was largely attended. It was not a shabby-looking gathering, either, by any means. The majority of the ladies had not bought a yard of gingham in years, and their fresh gowns had all the charm of newness, and were made as tastefully as a richer material might have been.

Mary Carver was made president. Mrs. Blunt had been tendered the office, but she wisely declined, saying that she could do better service in the ranks, at least until she had demonstrated her ability to lead.

"It is very pretty in you to ask me," she said smilingly; "but if we preserve the true spirit of equality in our enterprise we must give brains and ability the lead, while mere social status occupies the rear until it has earned promotion."

Hetty Grey, the pale dressmaker, who felt like a down-trodden social worm, because of a drunken father, was elected secretary, and her gray eyes were like stars as she took part in the proceedings. Hope opened up delightful possibilities if her father's case could be reached, for she remembered the time when he had been honored among men, beloved in his own home, where he was now only a burden and disgrace.

"We must reach the young," said Mrs. Jackson earnestly, as ways and means were discussed. This lady had a young son reeling home to her at night, and so it came to pass that Mrs. Jackson's elegant home was the first to be thrown open for a temperance social.

With a life-long training in the fashionable customs of thoughtless society, it seemed to her, at first, almost impossible to entertain without the sparkling accessories which make temperance work a necessity.

"Mother must be a goose, father," Harry Jackson said, with as much of a sneer as he dared. "See how naturally she takes to water."

"It might be better for us if we all took to it as readily," the elder gentleman replied firmly. He had cherished some grave doubts of late in regard to an accepted theory that if one brings up a child to drink his glass and play his game at home, that he will have no desire to carry those things to excess away from home. He had the best of evidence (the late payment of an alarmingly large gambling debt) that his young son had wearied of the tame excitement of a quiet, home game. He had sown tares with his wheat, and a troublesome harvest was coming on.

"I had no idea that such a mixed company could be so agreeable," said Belle Johnson, after it was all over and the participants were hanging up their ginghams at home. "I believe I have found a congenial friend in that shy little Lottie Cramer. There has always seemed to be such a barrier between us, but to-night she was like another person."

"It was the gingham that did it," replied her sister. "I believe that Gingham Guild is going to overturn some social notions in regard to dress, besides correcting moral mistakes among us. For my part I haven't enjoyed anything so much in years."

"And Grace," whispered Belle under her breath, "Harry is in bed, his own sober self. How good it seems. I saw him talking earnestly with that sweet Mary Hilton this evening. Long live the Gingham Guild if it gives us back our brother."

It was simply astonishing with the leveling of dress distinctions, how other social barriers gave way to a warm personal interest between women who would otherwise never have known each other, and how harmoniously they worked side by side, for the good of great causes. Dispensers of strong drink began to regard the Gingham Guild uneasily.

"I tell yer, them vimmin is mightily in airnest," said one to another, "ven dey kin lay h'off furpelows for the sake o' routin' us. I ain't skeered when a passel o' white-banded vimmins gets togedder wid their pest clothes on, an' make up some resolutions an' py-laws; that hurts nopody; no more does the talkin' about the evils o' drink an' that sort o' thing, so long's the mayor, the lawyers, an' jutdges are on our side; talkin' don't hurt nopody, but I'm skeered when I see 'em takin' holt like this. Dey're 'takin' der var into Ahfrica,' and shust pefore we know dey'll have de mayor converted and de dickens vill pe to pay."

"We shall have to work harder than ever to get the boys established in their habits or our business is doomed," was the reply.

This second speaker was a man of better education than his competitor, more guilty because sinning against greater light.

"I am going to offer a prize to the boy who buys the most cigarettes at my place. Cigarettes are the best bait I know of to catch fish with—just enough opium in them to keep up the craving, you see. Maybe it isn't business-like to tell my plans, but union is strength, you know," with a sly wink. "My customer to-day may be yours to-morrow, and vice versa. It's all for the good of the trade."

"Dem pesky vimmins is runnin' a crusade against cigarettes, don't ye tink? Consarn vimmin, anyhow! So long's dey stay to hum an' cry an' blead wid de men to let liquor alone, dey're harmlesser dan doves. I don't care how much dey tinker away at de spigot so dey lets me have de runnin' of de punghole."

"I owe them a grudge for robbing me of one of my best customers," growled the second speaker,—"Harry Jackson; he was worth a fortune to me in drawing the other boys in, as well as by his own trade; but I'll be jiggered if they haven't straightened him up like any old Puritan. If I can get hold of him once more I'll give him a dose that'll fix him for them," with a threatening shake of his head. "I've lost old Grey too, but that ain't so bad. He was gettin' to be a disgrace to me. I keep a respectable place, you know, an' I ain't so sorry to be shut of a man after he gets ragged an' noisy. I like fresh stock."

But the Gingham Guild fortunately was hedging the "fresh stock" about with safe guards. A handsome reading-room and library had been opened for their benefit, and coffee rooms in other parts of the town, and games where no stake was allowed, lured many away from the enticing saloons. The gloomy predictions of the saloon-keepers had come true, and Mr. Jackson was in time elected mayor, and the strong hand of municipal law took the liquor industry and gambling by the throat and shook them out of existence.

Three years after its first organization, there was a question before a meeting of the Guild. The social necessity which had given rise to its name and nature at the beginning had passed away, as all were acquainted and working together in harmony.

"Shall we discard our name and dress as a club?" asked the president, Mrs. Blunt. "I think there are none of us who need ocular demonstration of the willingness of all our members to lay aside distinctions of dress, means or station for the good of the cause, and if the ladies wish it, we may return to our conventional dress without injury to our social interests."

But the proposition was voted down almost unanimously and the Gingham Guild which had done so much to level the towering battlements of a nefarious trade, and the artificial barriers which socially separated heart from heart, went on its serene way, content with a unity in usefulness which substituted communal ties for selfish interests.

FATHER MATHEW'S MISTAKE.

BY REV. J. H. GAMBRELL.

While the question of prohibition is having extended review through the well merited honors heaped upon the man who crystallized it into law, it seems but just to remember a more distant prophet of prohibition whose augury was forced from him by the heart-break of the incompleteness of one of the grandest works ever done by a single man. This hero, born ahead of his time, has been recalled by re-reading an editorial in a New Orleans Christian Advocate from the pen of Bishop Charles Galloway in 1883, then editor of that paper, now recognized as the father of the Mississippi local option law. The editorial as well as Father Mathew's opinion, is well worthy of record and repetition in the light of to-day, and is given in full, as follows:

"The name of Father Mathew will ever command the grateful homage of all generations. As an apostolic champion of temperance he wrought righteously, and reared for himself a monument lasting as the eternal hills. The movement he inaugurated "swept over Ireland like some great wave of the sea," and effected a reformation amounting to a revolution. His temperance apostolate was begun at the suggestion of a Quaker. Into it he flung the energies and sympathies of his whole being, with no ambition but the redemption of the fallen, and no hope of reward but their benedictions. Through his labors thousands were reclaimed from besotted habits. Desolate homes and hearts were made to blossom as the rose. Crime decreased everywhere until jail-keepers were almost without an occupation.

"In the course of five months in the city of Cork he administered the pledge to 150,000 persons. In Limerick thousands flocked to him even "from the furthest parts of Connaught." At Galway 100,000 signed the pledge in two days. In recognition of his reformatory labors Queen Victoria gave him an annuity of £300. To more accurately estimate the strength and popular influence of his reformation note the following facts and figures: Criminal offenses of all kinds in 1837 amounted to 12,096; in 1838, 1,097; while in 1840 there were only 173. The Father Mathew movement began in 1838. During these three years the consumption of spirits fell from 12,296,000 gallons to 5,290,000, and the excise on brandy decreased some £750,000. The number of prisoners confined in the bridewell and Dublin jail in one year fell from 136 to 23, and 100 cells stood empty. The Smithfield prison closed its doors.

"What a grand and gratifying achievement! But just there was Father Mathew's fatal mistake. When he held a nation in his hand he let the supreme moment pass unimproved, and Ireland again lapsed into whisky and crime. Just then a prohibitory law should have been passed, which would have perpetuated the reformation and sealed for all time the redemption of the land of the Shramrock! Seeing the enthusiasm chilled and the cause declining—a cause inaugurated and sustained by his personal magnetism and popularity—Father Mathew acknowledged his mistake and bitterly recognized the necessity of prohibitory legislation. He said: "The principle of prohibition seems to me to be the only safe and certain remedy for the evils of intemperance. This opinion has been strengthened and confirmed by the hard labor of more than twenty years in the temperance cause."

"That is the mature judgment of one certainly authorized to speak, if man ever was, by a career of unparalleled achievement. The convictions and enthusiasm of a people must be crystallized in statutory and constitutional law to make them permanent. But for its wonderful checks and restrictions—formulated by the prescience of a marvelous statesmanship—our national constitution would have been torn to shreds long ago. Ireland could not and did not long endure the strain of that enthusiasm. But if repressive legislation had immediately followed, that land, so sorely scourged with drunkenness, would have rejoiced in a blessed deliverance.

"We hope, therefore, that in all states and communities where reform is agitated, the lesson of Father Mathew's mistake may not be unheeded and unimproved. When the people are aroused let them petition for legal protection. Let public sentiment once be expressed in constitutional law, with its provisions faithfully enforced one year, and no people will ever return to license or free liquor."

MOHAMMED WEBB AND CHRISTIAN WOMEN.

BY MRS. O. W. SCOTT.

The great and "only" Mohammed Webb was called to this small city in the "Land of Steady Habits," to lecture before a woman's club, composed of "leading women." So far as this club is concerned it sustains a good reputation for intellectual achievements, and is noticed here only as the medium through which the American Apostate was introduced to the public. Our aim is to examine some of Mr. Webb's statements with a desire to show their inconsistency, and also, if possible, to call attention to some perils peculiar to American women.

Mohammed Webb was expected to lecture on Orientalism, but concerned himself largely with advocating and explaining the doctrines of Islam. His remarks were naturally in commendation of the system as a whole, but we turn to those bearing upon its social life. Of this he said: "Life among the better class of Mussulmans is very pure, although the missionaries do not seem to discover that fact, since they seldom come in contact with the more intelligent." "Polygamy never was, nor is it to-day, a part of Islam. The Koran does not refer to polygamy, except in one place, and there I cannot interpret it as being in favor." The speaker considered that plurality of marriages often arose from a desire to give a homeless and defenseless woman, "a local habitation and a name!"

Oh, my countrywomen! It is possible that Mr. Webb thought that since he was in New England with its thousands of "superfluous woman" he was perfectly safe in advancing this comforting theory!

In his address before the Parliament of Religions this gentleman said: "The chief objection and the first one generally made (against Islam) is polygamy. It is quite generally believed that polygamy and the Purdah, or seclusion of women, is a part of the Islamic system. This is not true. . . . I never met but two Mussulmans in my life who had more than one wife. . . . The Koran places her (woman) on a perfect and complete equality with man, and the prophet's teachings often place her in a position superior to the males in some respects."

"Ah! how we have been deceived respecting the character of this great religion!" exclaim susceptible hearers. "We have actually been sending missionaries to these happy and fortunate beings!"

But what are we to do with the published statements of missionaries and travelers upon these points? Mr. Webb states that missionaries "seldom come in contact with the more intelligent." Dr. Butler, in India during the Sepoy rebellion, and many years afterward, in his "Land of the Veda," referring to the Emperor and his "allowance" from England which had become insufficient says: "Fifty years of idleness, and the license of a sensual creed which permitted unlimited polygamy, made that which would have been easy to virtue, impossible to vice."

Still further: "The Mohammedan is allowed by his Koran to take up four wives or concubines, and few of the wealthy among them limit themselves to less than this number, while it is notorious that they use their facilities of divorce with so little scruple that license under their law is practically unlimited."

Miss Thoburn has been a missionary in India for twenty-five years, with opportunity for wide observation. She says, in her chapters on the "Women of India," in Bishop Thoburn's book, "India and Malaysia," Islam is to blame for the (parda) system. Oriental women always lived more or less in the background, but Mohammud shut them within walls and turned the key. When his religion came to India this custom came with it. The invading kings and their courtiers forcibly added Hindu women to their harems, and, to protect their wives and daughters from such outrages the Hindus kept them indoors. . . A devout Mussulman may never have more than four wives at once, but he may be married twenty times.

Dr. Murdoch mentions an Arab who had been married fifty times. It is also allowed them to marry for a period of time—a year or six months according to their pleasure. These customs have degraded every family instinct, and home life and character have suffered immeasurably. . . "The wives and daughters of both Mohammedans and Hindus are for the most part wholly illiterate." From a recent India paper we clip this item:

It is marvelous how little love of purity and righteousness there is in the average Mohammedan! Last Sunday a Moulvi began bazaar preaching about an hundred feet away from our usual preaching place in front of our city church. He kept a large crowd nearly an hour, and went on pouring out a stream of the vilest language and thought that the most degraded would hesitate to use.

And yet Mohammed Webb sounds the praises of the false prophet and his "elevation of women" in the ears of refined, "cultured" American women, and is paid for so doing! It will not be surprising if he learns to think that we are ready to welcome the crescent instead of the cross, and thus strengthens the idea of some Orientals that we are weary of our faith. Mrs. Van Petten, who has recently returned to Japan after a year in the home land, says in a letter given in the April Heathen Woman's Friend:

It seems strange that the idea of the Parliament of Religions should be so misconstrued, but it is said to have been convened because Americans were dissatisfied with Christianity and wished to learn of something better. The applause which greeted their speakers gave them the notion that the doctrines were approved, and Buddhist missions to America are being discussed.

And if the Buddhist priests appear, there are women who will listen to their "Orientalisms." When Pundita Ramabai was in Boston during her short stay in New England, she said that several young and effusive women gathered around her at the close of her address, and one of them said: "How nice it must be to be a high caste Brahmin. Oh, I wish I were a Brahmin!" Ramabai repeated in fine, though unconscious, imitation, the words of the "innocent"; and then her face grew solemn as she added: "And I wished she could be one, just twenty-four hours. She couldn't bear it any longer!"

There are perilous times before us, if women who owe everything,—home, position, education, salvation, everything to Christ, turn from Him to the vapory, vague, but cultured—oh, so cultured!—"isms" which now fill the atmosphere. In their desire to avoid Puritanism, denominationalism and "fanaticism"—as they are wont to term any degree of spiritual fervor—they have grown so flabby in their religious texture as to awaken fears of a return to original bioplasm.

What God thinks of such sad abuse of unequaled privileges who dares imagine? It would seem that a reaction must follow. Humanity demands something positive. The crushed and outraged women of the Orient—in spite of Mohammed Webb—reach imploring hands toward us. Could they come to America, from zenana, harem and hovel, and tell the story of their wrongs, we believe there would be a revival of common sense, of sympathy toward them, and of loyalty toward that Friend of women, who made His own kingdom of grace a free country for her.

Meanwhile, we enter our humble protest against Mohammed Webb, the belated disciple of a false prophet, and beg our "clubs" to study the stars until a "time of refreshing" from on high shall fill hearts and hands with good, honest work for suffering humanity.

ECONOMIC PRINCIPLES.*

VI.

Distribution—The Single Tax.

BY ELIZA STOWE TWITCHELL.

The previous lessons have emphasized two facts. First, the more laborers, and also the wider and freer the exchanges are, the cheaper and more abundantly will wealth be produced; and were this wealth justly distributed, the tendency would be toward more equal conditions among laborers, which, in turn, would bring about a closer association purifying public morals, advancing refinements, knowledge and culture. Did nothing interfere to prevent this natural growth toward equality and freedom the amount of wealth that should be produced annually, even with present methods of production, would astonish the most incredulous. Present methods would soon give place to new inventions and greater subdivisions of labor, till, not only wealth, but what are now termed luxuries, would be within the reach of all.

The second fact is the opposite of this. As numbers increase, as labor-saving machines multiply and cheapen production, the value of land rises; moreover, this value fairly represents the benefits of coöperation to each member of the community. This enormous privilege now goes to a few. Could it be enjoyed by all equally, benefits conferred by each to society and benefits received by each from society would be equal. Land values would then operate in adding the strongest force possible, both in the production of wealth and in its equitable distribution. But going as it now does to about ten per cent of the population, the effect is to not only check production enormously but to broaden the gulf between classes, resulting in such contradictions as too much vacant land, too many people, too much poverty and too much wealth.

Had the Creator fashioned the earth entirely uniform, the same soil, surface, climate, products, everywhere, one place had been as advantageous to man as another. And then, had He formed man without the social instinct, since he could obtain his food as well in one place as another, mankind would now be scattered, solitarily, over the whole earth, elevated but little above the brute; for it is by the added powers that come to man by association that progress is chiefly made.

These two divine laws—social instinct and diversity of soil and climate—are the chief cause of rent, which now acts as a barrier to further progress, creating inequalities and preventing association, enslaving the masses and blinding the few to their perilous condition. As Nature provides the newborn infant with food from the overflowing breast, so Nature has provided this growing organism, Society, with a fund—land values—which is always sufficient for its growing needs. What more clear than the fact that when this fund is not put to its divinely intended purpose, the result in both cases is the same,—congestion, disease, decay, starvation. Does this not show that the Creator took thought not only of man's individual needs, but of his social wants also, and included society and government in His divinely intended plan; that "there are no classes nor races, but one human brotherhood?"

The question of questions, of importance alike to rich as well as poor is: How shall this fund be distributed equally to all? For if it is right and just there must be a way, and whatever is right must benefit not a few, but all. To do this is easy. We already collect annually, some of this economic rent to defray public expenses wherever taxes are levied upon bare land according to its value. We have only to remove all taxes from labor and capital, placing instead one single tax upon land values to collect this economic rent for public uses in which all will share equally.

But we must accustom ourselves to look upon taxation in a new light, as a payment of each to the community, for only such benefits as are received by each, and so is no tax. Our present system of taxation is a relic of barbarous ages, which endeavors to tax each citizen in proportion to his wealth and consumption; to squeeze out of each as much as possible. It is nowhere fairly or justly levied, but savors of robbery, breeds corruption and fraud, for it puts a premium upon lying and evasion.

*Copyrighted.

The proposed new method is as much an improvement upon the old, as the art of printing is over that of making books by the process of writing them out with a pen. And the train of improvements which will follow its introduction will not be short of the blessings humanity has received from the invention of printing. Since all men are equally entitled to the use and enjoyment of God's bounties, and also, to what is gained by the general growth and improvement of the community, which their presence has created, no one should be permitted to hold such special privileges without giving to the whole a fair return for so doing.

The value of the land in every community exactly represents such privilege. Not the privileges of the past, but of the present. Farmers living where land has little or no value, would pay little or no tax. But should one man or a few men choose to own all the rich coal fields of a state, another, the oil lands; should railroad corporations own, as they now do, land enough to make six large estates; or foreign syndicates own nearly as much of American soil; in short, should one man desire to own the whole round globe, there would be no objections, provided, he paid the inhabitants of the world the full market price for his special privilege of appropriating their inheritance. This is the only way in which God's bounties, and that value which is created by the progress of society can be equally distributed and enjoyed by all.

Land values have been compared to the drifts of snow after a blustering storm. The value being represented by the depth. The single tax would shovel all this snow, (economic rent) annually, into one pile (the public treasury), and then distribute it equally, by using it for public revenue. We would do this, first, because it is just, but more especially to break the power of monopoly in land values—the one great monopoly upon which all others rest, making it forever impossible for idleness to produce a scarcity by force, when there is no scarcity in nature; thus placing the farmers and honest mechanics at the mercy of monopolists—honest labor begging for employment as a boon, labor idle and capital idle, till people everywhere forget that if labor had its rights it could not only take care of itself, but would keep the wheels of industry and capital constantly and profitably employed.

The labor question? It is far more than a question of rents, or of wages; of the gulf between the millionaires and the slums! It is a question of human rights! the contempt of which has led to present conditions. "But if, while there is yet time, we turn to Justice and obey her, if we trust Liberty and follow her, the dangers that now threaten will disappear."

A PICTURE OF THE FUTURE.

Imagine for a moment the single tax in full operation. The value of land is highest in great cities and where all such industries exist as are now monopolies, such as mines, railroads, telephones, telegraphs, gas, electric-roads, power, light and heat. This value alone (without taxing capital or anything labor has produced) would be sufficient for most public expenses, beside keeping all steam and electric railroad beds, electric wires, telegraphs and telephone lines, in good working order, and as open and free to the public as our country roads now are; yes, far more than that,—sufficient to extend electric car lines, light, power and telephone service freely to every fair-sized town in the country, knitting them all together by easy and cheap access, uniting city, town and country in one pleasant society with advantages for all. Steam and electricity would thus relieve man and horse alike from severe drudgery, and the luxury of a gentle, fine blood horse for each member of every family to ride or drive at pleasure would, at least, be within reach of all, while subdivisions of labor would put the care of such horses in convenient livery stables where kindness and gentle treatment would prevail.

The next greatest land values are in manufacturing centers. These would tend toward coöperation, each laborer either owning some share in the mills; or electric power being distributed throughout the town to each home; work would be done at home and paid for by the piece. The tenement house, as now known, would disappear, for the crowded city would flow out to the pleasant country, filling it with life and cheer.

Farming lands have the next highest value. This industry would also tend toward coöperation for more and more machinery would be used. The homes would be built along the great highways, where every advantage of electric light, power, car service and telephones would be so cheap as to be nearly free to all, and thus bring farmers into neighborly proximity to all social advantages, such as city schools, libraries, museums, churches, concerts and deep lesson of life from works of art and plays by great masters. The life of the farmer would become easy, pleasant and attractive with leisure for culture and travel. Such a state of society, where freedom and increasing sociability abound would promote morality and culture. Would not even the present millionaires make a good bargain to give half their wealth for citizenship in such a state?

And this picture is by no means a fanciful one. Such a condition is a faint limning of what would follow the right use of God's bounties to all, just as now the wrong use breeds injustice and misery, poverty and crime. A young mother with a child at her breast is a picture which inspires the most tender emotions, for it represents unselfish love, trust and repose. A society in which all shared equally in the bounties of a Heavenly Father would soon develop a most unselfish spirit and brotherly love among its members as well as an unfaltering trust and repose in Divine goodness that had rescued and redeemed it. The way there is certain! but the road is steep. Who will lend a hand?

A WOMAN OF ACTION.

BY REV. EZRA HURLBURT STAFFORD, M. D.

"For woman is not undeveloped man
But diverse; could we make her as the man
Sweet Love were slain: his dearest bond is this,
Not like to like, but like in difference."

A hundred years ago the only possible future to which a woman could look, was a satisfactory marriage, and the subsequent oblivion in domestic life. The present century has widened the field for woman's work to proportions never before dreamed of. Women now are filling the professions and holding their own with men. In mercantile life they are even preferred to men for many positions of delicacy and trust. The same preference is extended to women in educational work. Into politics, too, they are now finding their way in person where they have for so long had only an indirect influence, and during the last decade it has been women who have come before the whole world as philanthropists in the widest sense of the word; what Harriet Beecher Stowe did for the abolition of slavery, the women of America and England are now doing for the temperance cause.

But perhaps one of the most singular instances to be found in history of activity among women is that of Lady Aberdeen, the wife of the present Governor-general of Canada. The daughter of Sir Dudley Majoribanks, she spent her childhood in the free, fresh air and wild scenery of the Scottish highlands. Here she met her future husband under rather romantic circumstances, while she was yet but eleven years of age. The young man had lost his way among the hills and at nightfall made his appearance at her father's castle, requesting shelter for the night. It soon transpired who he was and a warm welcome was extended to him. Nine years afterwards he returned and took the young girl away with him as his bride.

A chief friend of her father's was Mr. Gladstone, who made him frequent visits at his estate in the Highlands, and upon these occasions the young maiden was the great statesman's companion upon his out of door excursions, accompanying him upon a pony and listening in wonder to his accounts of the busy world in which she, too, was destined soon to play a conspicuous part.

Upon her accession to wealth so great and to a social rank so high this brilliant woman never yielded to the impulse, if, indeed, she ever felt it, to devote her life to pleasure and indulgence. Moreover, when she became afterward the mother of five children and burdened with all the cares and responsibilities of domestic life, she does not make even this an excuse, as many would for no greater reason, to live in selfish retirement. She is lavish of her immense store of energy, and her hand is felt in every direction. She combines in herself the rare faculties of conceiving, in the first place, and carrying out in the second.

The social duties of the hostess of the vice-regal palace at Ottawa are constant and onerous, yet while no one has enjoyed as great a popularity as she has since the days of Lady Dufferin, she has found time to extend her influence to all parts of the Dominion. There has been no convention of women, no college commencement, no public movement of any kind where women are concerned but what she has inspired it with her presence and her influence. A score of societies have been set in motion by her, and, gathering force as they go, it has been her hand which has directed their course.

A conversation in a drawing-room suggested a thought which led to the "Onward and Upward" society, with its thousands of members. The object of this society is, primarily, the amelioration of the condition of the poor and hard-worked.

A great idea has fastened upon this brilliant woman. The poor and half-starved really do not need advice so much as sympathy and bread and butter. The "Onward and Upward" society therefore, instead of providing tracts and free lectures, aims to augment in every practical way possible the comforts of those who lack comfort altogether. Its object is to cheer, not to dispense moral aphorisms.

Visitors to the World's Fair will remember the "Irish Industries Association," which had its headquarters at Blarney Castle in the Midway Plaisance. This is a national movement, while the "Onward and Upward" is wholly charitable.

Nor are these enterprises carried on by agents. Lady Aberdeen was present in person at the Columbian Exposition, and superintended to some extent the construction of the Irish Village. At the inauguration of that great pageant, President Cleveland lingered for a few moments in conversation with the Countess, who gave him a handkerchief of real Irish lace as a gift for Mrs. Cleveland.

Again, there is the "Woman's Liberal Federation," with nearly a quarter of a million members. The object of this is wholly political, not to tell women how to vote, but to teach them to take an intelligent interest in the political questions of the day.

Though Lady Aberdeen has only been in Canada a short time she has already organized a "National Council of Women," whose object is religious and industrial, and which already has a very large membership.

Besides these she has inaugurated many movements which have been a boon to particular classes of the community. Who but such a woman, for example, in crossing the continent upon the train would think a second time of the dreary life which must be led by the lonely settlers on the far plains of the west. She, however, did not rest until she had instituted a medium for the circulation of reading matter among the settlers. To the lot of the household servant also she has given careful attention.

The fearlessness of this gifted and unselfish woman shows what a woman can do if she will; shows that no hard-and-fast line can separate a woman's field of usefulness from that of a man. There are a few words that have for centuries been a menace to honest and sincere effort. Such a word is Utopian. Railroads and telegraphs and baloons were Utopian until they succeeded. A woman's place in the forefront of national activity was something Utopian, too, until women came forward who could do as good work as men—and did it.

In the meantime, let women learn calmly to look upon the world as their province, and not upon a mere section of it—the home alone.

The participation of women in the greater questions of life and civilization and religion will not lead to confusion, but, on the contrary, to a greater dignity of state and to a more profound stability of religion.

WILLARD HALL NOON MEETING.

BY JANE E. ZIMMERMAN, SUPT.

The two young men mentioned in my last notes, continue serious and interested, one of them leaving me a few days ago with tears in his eyes. As they both have work now, they can only come in occasionally.

The other case spoken of in my last article, has been saved. As he was really ill from long continued drinking, we got him into the Washingtonian Home, temporarily, through the influence of a noble Christian worker, Mr. J. L. Whitlock, who is one of the directors of that institution. There he proved himself so helpful and willing as a watcher with the sick, and also ready to turn his hand in any direction needed, that the authorities are glad to have him remain for a time. He is rejoicing in the forgiveness and favor of the Lord, and has secured work. This man had not been without from ten to twenty drinks a day for ten years.

Another young man through an uncontrollable thirst for drink, has fallen several times, but always comes back to us for help. He has been attending one of the churches very faithfully all winter, and had as he supposed, many friends there. Not long ago he went to a consecration meeting held in this church. He was somewhat intoxicated, and not one of his friends would speak to him, but passed out, leaving him alone in his anguish of self-condemnation and repentance. He remarked, in telling me of this incident: "This (Willard Hall) is the only place where a man can get any help." This incident is mentioned, not by way of arraignment of church Christians, but as a reminder that the servant of Christ must not, like the priest and the Levite, "pass by on the other side," but like the good Samaritan, take hold and help him who has literally fallen among thieves. If a drunken man goes into a church, be assured he goes for help which he knows ought to be obtained there. This young man has a fine position and many friends, but tries to avoid them as much as possible, as they are all drinking men. He goes to church and seeks his boarding place persistently among Christian people, in order to surround himself with the influences which he feels he needs.

A good Christian man, plain, quiet, unassuming, has been coming to the noon meeting all winter, never saying anything, but having always a deep interest in the exercises. Not long ago, we had a drunken young man in who was hard to deal with. This man sat down beside him. Others came up to talk with him but he was inclined to be quarrelsome toward them. This other he clung to all day. When he went to sleep the quiet Christian brother,

Mr. A., put his arms about him and drew his head down on his breast, holding him there throughout the service. We kept the young man till late in the afternoon. Nothing would soothe him until I began reading God's word in low tones. Then he grew quiet and attentive. Before leaving us he offered the most humble, childlike prayer I ever heard.

A day or two ago I asked Mr. A. if he had looked after our young friend any since we had parted with him. "No," he said. I replied: "God never gives us influence with any human creature but He intends we should use it." Seizing his hat, he answered: "That's right, hit me again, Mrs. Zimmerman; I'm going right off now to look him up."

A letter from a mother whose son comes to Willard Hall states: "My every breath when I have any leisure is a prayer for the conversion of my dear son." This young man has become very earnest and attentive since he began attending our meetings. Letters from mothers and friends of young people continue to come in. These are a source of anxious care and earnest prayer, as it is not always apparent what is the best course to pursue to make their acquaintance. We have a few sincere and earnest Christian workers, however, who are willing to be made "fishers of men." These I am sending out to devise ways for reaching the dear ones committed so prayerfully to our care.

THE W. C. T. U. IN PARIS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In the United States where one is almost always in the midst of good work being done to lift up humanity, to right wrongs that have built up while our country has been growing in real greatness, where women do so much and where they have so much encouragement, it is not difficult to say something of interest as to the real work in the cause of temperance.

But on this side it is difficult, because one is so amazed at the quantity of liquor used that he is deprived of the ability to realize advance. People drink here at dinners, at small evening parties, when calling, at receptions, concerts, the theatres, in the dining cars, while the restaurants and cafés are always filled with imbibers of both sexes, until one unused to such sights almost concludes that Europeans subsist upon drink. This is confirmed in examining the statistics of France which show that a little more than four per cent more is spent annually for drink than for rents. In Germany and Belgium this per centum is enormously increased.

Quite a notable meeting in Paris took place not long since at the headquarters of the World's W. C. T. U., No. 205 Rue St. Honoré, and was conducted by Mrs. Homer A. Nelson, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., the president of her county union. On her acceptance of the invitation to give or conduct a Bible reading, we were both curious as to the possible size of the audience. However, the meeting, held in a lovely salon of the headquarters, was largely attended and a charming affair. Mrs. Nelson's remarks on the subject of intemperance were timely and tactful, and her interpretation of the Bible subjects were earnestly listened to by all. Thanks to God there are those to be found who will listen to the Bible. But it is often a subject of much interest to the French, who are such lovers of eloquence and oratory, and who listen with attention, especially to many of the sweet and promising stories of the Bible, notwithstanding their indifference and infidelity. I have not yet found a French women who does not drink wine, though of course there are teetotalars, and I have known but one Frenchman, and he has never used any kind of liquor in any form.

Number 205, Rue St. Honoré, Paris, is designated as "A Home from Home," and is the office of the Paris branch of the World's W. C. T. U. In the windows one is attracted by two large open Bibles, French and English, Scripture texts, etc. This is a temperance refreshment room, also the office of Miss de Broen's mission, that lady being the president of the Paris W. C. T. U. In addition to this room there are a large number of apartments, some furnished nicely, others simply, and all nearly always occupied. There is also the large salon already mentioned, beautifully furnished and lighted. For all this the union pays $2,000 per year rent and all profit goes to the great mission of Miss de Broen, situated at Belleville, not very far away.

At this home may be found kind ladies ready to give the advice needed by one in a strange city. Many Americans and English frequent the home and find it remarkably reasonable in prices and especially pleasing as to care and security. Here are found all the leading publications of the day and the kindest of friends and full information about Christian work and churches in Paris. It is hoped that many American workers abroad will not fail to visit there.

This mission of Miss de Broen's has had this unusual woman's undivided attention for more than sixteen years. Her devotion was aroused in 1871 while visiting the great cemetery, Père la Chaise, that place of burial known to the whole reading world, as being established in 1790, soon after the enactment of a law prohibiting the burial of the dead in churches, for which Voltaire is given credit. This cemetery is one of the most interesting and beautiful spots in the world, because here are the names of the great who have shaken the world and to whom the world pays the homage of remembrance. Miss de Broen was there the day after the execution of an order given by M. Thiers, which resulted in the shooting by the troops of five hundred communists, the dead being buried in one common trench, around which surged a crowd in grief and rage, burdened women almost mad with desperation.

The workers and Miss de Broen are everywhere and by all classes greeted as friends, and many eminent men of Paris have been known to declare that this brave woman's work, and that of her noble helpers, because of her situation in the very heart of the communist element, from which Paris has suffered so much, has saved the city from another revolution. This mission is situated where it will do the most good, and is one of the safest houses in all Paris because Miss de Broen has the love and respect of the people by whom she is surrounded. Much of this noble work is the result of temperance women's organization and the godly sympathy with which they are bound together in the circle of the white ribbon.

In Brussels, another but smaller Paris, the same drinking is seen among all classes. If you speak of it as an evil you are looked upon by women as if you were losing your reason. When they come to you with a tale of wife-beating by a drunken husband, or a case of wife and children being shut in a cellar by a drunken husband and father, and left without food, or of a wife who has had an ear cut off by a furious wretch, they expect you to express sympathy. A drunken old woman staggering along the street fills you with horror; they smile and pass on. A small boy of twelve years is found wildly drunk and a policeman is called. The boy is carried home to sober up—and do so again if likes.

At their public balls, which commence at a very late hour, generally at twelve o'clock, nearly all are under the influence of liquor long before the usual hour for closing. A gentleman said to me, as something to boast of, "Yes, Paris gives four gay balls each season at the opera, but you will see far more gayety in Brussels at our opera, which, too, is a state institution the same as that of Paris. In Brussels we drink champagne until many roll under the tables." Yet some of these very people are dreadfully shocked when a German writer tells them that Americans are far ahead of any in Europe as to a sane and healthy life, and in a degree even superior intellectually, morally and physically, and that they, more nearly than any other people, realize a truly economic, social existence worthy of the name. THE SUFFRAGE QUESTION IN SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—With regard to the letter, "Adult Suffrage in South Australia," published in your columns of February 1, we desire to state: The position of womanhood suffrage was never so good as it is at present, and never so well understood. The justice of woman's claim to the franchise and her fitness for it are very generally acknowledged, both in Parliament and out of it.

The early friends of the movement wanted to carry a bill giving the vote to women of property only, which was, they said, the thin end of the wedge and would lead to full suffrage. But the Woman's Suffrage League, of which Miss Spence is a member, as are also several of our own executive, including our president—who is also superintendent of the W. C. T. U. suffrage department—has uniformly and always stood for the principles declared, as follows:

"That your petitioners are impressed that the women of the country should have a voice in the choice of representatives to the House of Legislature.

"That they consider that the qualifications entitling women to vote should be the same as those which apply to men.

"That while women's suffrage is desired, no claim is put forward for the right to sit as representatives."

Thousands of signatures have from time to time been secured for this petition. Deputations have waited on the government year after year, and last year for the first time womanhood suffrage was made a government measure, but was imperiled by having the Referendum tacked on to it.

The government would not yield the Referendum, consequently many members who voted for the second reading, hoping to be able to eliminate the Referendum in committee, voted against the third reading.

After the bill was thrown out a large and representative deputation waited on the Premier, asking to reintroduce the bill without the Referendum. The reply was that if the government could be assured of a sufficient support they would consider the matter. The deputation then adjourned, and it was resolved that sub-deputations should wait on those members who had voted for the second and against the third reading to see if they were prepared to support the government. To suit the convenience of those members they were waited on at Parliament House, at a time appointed by themselves, and were courteously received in a committee room, to which they were conducted by Mr. Caldwell.

This is the sum and substance of the alleged "lobbying." These members chiefly urged the lateness of the session, but strongly advised that we should support them next session by sending in a monster petition. At the last meeting of the council of the Woman Suffrage League it was resolved to do so, and the petition was drawn. This will be largely circulated by our unions.

At the Wesleyan Methodist Conference held recently the following resolution was adopted unanimously, and with enthusiasm:

"That this conference believing that the extension of the franchise to the women of this colony would result in the improvement of our laws, more particularly in connection with the drink traffic, gambling and social purity, declares its cordial sympathy with the effort now being made to secure that measure, and further desires to express the earnest hope that our people will accord the same their hearty support."

With regard to the elbowing out, etc., we simply say that Mrs. Robin, whom we all revere, resigned her position as treasurer owing to severe personal affliction. The others mentioned, together with the writer of the letter, resigned their positions on the council for other and varying reasons to the regret of the officers and members, but the work has never faltered for a moment.

He that oppresseth the poor to increase his riches, and he that giveth to the rich, shall surely come to want.—Prov. 22:16.

Our "Mother Thompson" speaks a timely word in saying, "I hope Mrs. Carse will remember that 'a horse is a vain thing for safety,' until her grand mission is ended, as she seems to think it will be when the Temple is paid for. We are greatly comforted by the reports of her success. When I hear of generous souls here and there, with means under their control, who turn over something to the Temple, I sing a doxology, all to myself, in my cozy corner."

Drafts for $10 each come from Mrs. C. P. Manee, president of the Youngstown, O., union, and from the Orion, Ill., W. C. T. U. and Good Templars, the latter amount the result of an entertainment in which both societies united. The union of forces is never a "featherweight" matter, you see. Mrs. D. S. Leonard, of Hampden, Mass., sends $30, $10 of the amount being the gift of Mrs. B. A. Leonard, "saintly Mother Leonard," eighty-six years of age, who says: "I have faith in Mrs. Carse and want the Temple to stand free of debt, a monument to her untiring devotion." Mrs. Annie E. Harper, of Fayette, Miss., sends $5, with the wish that it were $50,000 for the Temple, "that sublimest instance of faith in modern times. The starting out of one heroic woman to raise that vast sum is worthy a place in the history of the country. Every woman should make it a personal matter to see that she does not fail by sending her at least $1." Mrs. Lucy A. Brown, of Nyack, N. Y., has contributed the contents of her mite-box, $5. Miss Annie Ryan, Pacific Grove, Cal., empties her mite-box of $3.65 for the Temple treasury, and with abiding faith—and an eye to souvenir spoons,—sends for a new mite-box. Mrs. E. C. Ayer, S. Windham, Me., forwards the same amount, intending to make herself a present of a souvenir spoon on her seventieth birthday. Abby L. Loney, Evanston, Ill., also forwards $3.65 for a spoon, saying, "I earned the money selling molasses candy and ironing-holders. I want my baby cousin, Gertrude Reiley, to have the credit, as I have sent money before to the Temple." That girl is a treasure-trove herself in any community. Mrs. E. M. Niven, Dobbs' Ferry, N. Y., writes of her souvenir spoon: "It is much admired. It comes to my table continuously, for some special guest or favored member of the family, and is to me a pledge and obligation inciting to more trust and further effort for the emancipation of the Temple from debt."

Mrs. M. H. Wells, Wellsville, Pa., sends $10 to credit of memorial tablet, in honor of her brother, Dr. William Hunter, and expresses her intention of beginning another in memoriam as soon as this payment is completed. Mrs. E. L. Evans, Nat. assistant secretary of the Y's, sends $2.50 towards the tablet for the South African Y. W. C. T. U., realized from the sale of silver leaves from that country; $1 also comes from the Y's of Staunton, Va., for the Frances Barnes tablet, and $1 is received to place the name of Mrs. Harriet Judd, who died in Lockport, N. Y., aged seventy-three, in the Veteran Band.

Mrs. G. F. Martin, president of the Providence, R. I., W. C. T. U., sends $100 from Mrs. Freeborn Johnson, desiring a tablet in Willard Hall, and hoping to send another $100 soon for her husband's name. Mrs. Freeborn Johnson is 86 years old; she made a record on the anti-slavery movement, in the Washingtonian Temperance Society, and was leader in the thrilling story of the first no-license petition the Rhode Island women presented. She was afire in the Crusade, and says to-day: "If women can work but in one place, the temperance cause is more imperative than the church. Ministers and men will not vote right, and women must work and pray—as they cannot vote for the success of the temperance cause. Mrs. Johnson is said to have originated the name of our great organization—Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Winchester, Va., W. C. T. U. sends $51.10 to complete its $100 pledge, having the second name on the Virginia tablet, and much grieved not to have been first. The sum of $10 comes from each of the following names, all payments on $100: Colfax, Wash., W. C. T. U.; Y. W. C. T. U. of Evanston, Ill.; Alfred Centre, N. Y., union; Frances E. Willard union of S. W. Harbor, Me.;—$6 of this amount being from collections taken at medal contests and Neal Dow meetings, the balance from the mite-boxes of Misses Katha Freeman, Julia Kittridge and Miss Emily Freeman,—being $28.25 paid in full by this faithful little "Downeaster." The Ingham county, Mich., W. C. T. U. sends $56 on $100. Amherst, Mass., union makes a second payment, $45, on its pledge, and $30.75 completes the pledge of the Wisconsin W. C. T. U., for a tablet to be inscribed to Mrs. Amy Kellogg Morse, the president of Wisconsin union from 1884 to 1892. The Frances E. Willard W. C. T. U. of Helena, Mont., sends $25 as a credit for its tablet; $15 each comes from Carthage, Ill., and Union No. 1 of Washington, Ia.; from Kinsman, O., $5, and $14 from Syracuse, N. Y.,—all credits on $100 pledges; also $17 for the Winchester, Mass., W. C. T. U. Mrs. M. A. Ward of that union has already paid $8 toward their tablet and promises to increase the amount to $25 if the union will raise the rest—all hard earned money. She rightly believes that home work prospers all the more for this out reaching.

All money orders and checks should be made out in the name of William D. Preston and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, the Temple, Chicago, Ill. All orders for mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

DEEDS.

Words are cheap, and very plenty,
When men need help, not talk;
Puffed up with cant and cold advice,
Would-be advisers stalk.

These windy trumpets toot aloud
How this and that should be;
While modest workers of the world
Do good deeds silently.

The years roll on; the words of men
Have vanished into space;
While Christly deeds, on history's page,
Have found a lasting place.

WHAT DOVERDALE DID.

BY LOUISE W. BUNCE.

Doverdale was experiencing a summer sensation. It was entertaining—this little country neighborhood—a family of city guests. It had never been much given to benevolent works for the simple reason that there was no one at hand who needed benevolence,—not a case of real destitution seemed existing in all the country-side. But its opportunity had come in the following way: Early in the spring Miss Caxton, an invalid, bemoaning the uselessness of her thirty-five years of life, had been moved to importune prayer that she might be shown some Christian service fitted to her feeble strength. As a genuine heart-cry like this quickens to alertness every faculty of the petitioner she soon found what she sought.

"I've hired the Messenger farm another year," her brother said, one morning, about this time. "It's a pretty good thing for me with that west apple orchard, the twenty acres of good meadow land, and all the planting ground. I'd like to do something with the house—a good, comfortable house like that—but I don't see as I need it. Seems kind of a pity, I declare, to think of all the good house-room being wasted on New England farms, especially when city folks are so huddled together."

The idea of superfluous farm-houses was certainly not new to Miss Caxton, but that morning it somehow fell into direct connection with her longing prayer, and from thence to the letter just received from her cousin Belle, of New York, wherein a continual combat with the suffering and poverty of the city's masses was described. It was then that in her mind a thought, a purpose, a plan followed each other in rapid succession, while in direct co-relation circumstances were being shaped in a city more than a hundred miles away.

It was the back room of a crowded tenement house in New York—a clean little room, but bare of anything except necessities for the humblest housekeeping. Fanny Thayer, an invalid during the seventeen years of her life, was the only occupant of the room. Her old rocker had been drawn up to the window of the room that she might perchance get a stray waft of spring air. Sounds of boisterous children, oaths of coarse men and women, odors of numberless suppers, and of cheap tobacco and whisky were borne in with it to the intense disgust of the sensitive invalid. She turned wearily away from it all as her mother entered from her day's work at Madame Graeme's dressmaking establishment.

"Poor mamma!" Fanny pressed the hard-working, needle-pricked fingers to her lips. "How tired you look! It's too bad for you to sew all through these warm days. Oh, I wish, I wish I could do something to help."

"It isn't the work altogether, Fanny," Mrs. Thayer was making quick preparations for supper as she talked, "but I'm almost discouraged. Your father was at Belloe's playing cards as I came past, and he told me he had not found work yet. I don't know how much he tries to get it but I do know he is at Belloe's a great deal more than is good for him. It almost kills me to see him going on so. Then there's Jimmy! Why Fanny, he is getting to be an actual little 'tough' among the others. I saw him to-night in a fight with another newsboy, and Fanny,—it is too dreadful to even think of—but he was swearing too, the most horrible oaths! Dear little blue-eyed Jimmy, only nine years old and so familiar with evil; I never had thought a child of mine—"

Sobs choked the words, and mother and daughter mingled their tears over the new affliction that was added to their poverty. In the midst of Fanny's helplessness, she, a child of God, turned, like Miss Caxton in her far away country home, to her Father for guidance. Thus it was that in her heart too, a purpose was soon formed. She had not long to wait to carry it into effect, for it had to do with the sweet Christian lady who was a monthly visitor from one of the great churches to this especial district of the city.

"Miss Caxton," she said, for the lady was the "Cousin Belle" whose letter had so stirred the heart of her country cousin, "we're in such trouble that I've made bold to ask your kind advice." With Miss Belle's kind eyes smiling assurance the shy little girl told the whole story.

"This is certainly no place for you," exclaimed her adviser, "and I cannot believe matters will improve till you get away from it."

"Oh!" Fanny's tone was full of regretful dismay. "I thought you might know of something father could do and Jimmy, too, perhaps, in some respectable place, away from temptation; but we couldn't go away, we couldn't afford a rent in a better place or to pay for moving either."

Miss Belle's mind was trained to clear, rapid thought and she replied almost instantly: "Fanny, how would it do for you all to go into the country for the summer?" The country! Green fields, bird songs and flowers everywhere! Fanny had never seen it, but her mother had been a country-bred girl and had told wonderful stories of her girlhood's home. Fanny clasped her hands in delight.

"Nothing could be more lovely," she said, "but it never could be done. We don't know of any such place, and shouldn't have the money to get there if we did."

"A cousin of mine in Doverdale," said Miss Belle, "has just written me that very near to her home a house is to stand vacant all this beautiful summer. She has gained permission to use it and has written to me to send her tenants. There is no one for whom I so desire the privilege as for my friends, the Thayers."

But could mother be released from her sewing at Madame Graeme's? Or would father wish to give up his fitful quest for work? And could the enormous sum of ten dollars ever be raised for the traveling expenses? There was a medley of talk and plans when the family came home later.

"Our busy season is nearly over," said Mrs. Thayer, "and Madame is already discharging the newer hands. I've been afraid every day my turn would come."

"There isn't much use in trying to get work at my trade till fall," said Mr. Thayer, "I never knew it so dull. I'd like to go into the country first rate. I was at my grandfather's farm a good deal when I was a boy and I guess I haven't forgotten how to hoe or to rake hay."

"A fresh-air feller told me he caught a string of fish up in that country, that long," piped up Jimmy. illustrating with his hands, "caught 'em with worms, he said. I hope they've got a fish pond up in Doverdale."

In short, it was the unanimous wish of the family to go to Doverdale, and preparations were at once begun. Miss Belle loaned them the needed ten dollars, and also a trunk quite ample enough for the scanty family wardrobe; their furniture was gladly accepted by neighboring tenants until called for, and the rent relinquished.

In the meantime energetic preparations were going on at Doverdale under the direction of Miss Caxton. A letter from her to her cousin Belle referred to the matter in this wise: "The whole neighborhood has aroused to interest. Such a searching of attics for old furniture! Such ingenuity in repairing and beautifying it! Such overhauling of trunks and closets! After nearly two weeks of this united work our neighborhood home stands to-day in readiness for its occupants. We have a parlor, kitchen, pantry, and three bed rooms plainly but comfortably furnished. On the bare floors are home-made rugs, at the windows are low-priced shades and sash curtains of muslin and silkoline, and with the loan of crockery and some articles of furniture I think our guests will find everything needful for their comfort."

"Ah, my dear, how happy you look!" was Miss Caxton's greeting one morning a few weeks later, as she found Fanny reclining in the hammock under the wide-spreading elm. "You are writing, I see. Do I intrude?" For answer Fanny put into her hands the paper she had written. Shy as she was, Miss Caxton's sympathy had swept away all barriers of reserve and prompted to this revealing of her heart-thoughts. Miss Caxton read with careful attention.

"Why, my dear Fanny," her look and tone told her unfeigned astonishment, "this is exquisite! It is a poem, child, really deserving of the name. How could you give such beautiful expression to your thoughts?" In her sweetly modest way Fanny told of her life-long love of beauty, and how, amid nature's revelations, expression had been a necessary outcome. From that moment Miss Caxton made it her especial aim to guide this rarely beautiful soul into its best estate.

The summer passed to the whole family like a beatific vision. At its close the neighbors watched their departure with real regret. "The best investment we ever made!" exclaimed a farmer, as he explained matters to a by-stander on the railway platform; "the change has done the whole family good. Thayer's a good fellow and a worker. He takes to farming, and he's hired the Bunnell farm for another year. Says he and Jimmy can run it and make it pay. They say the girl is turning out a real genius. I ain't much judge of poetry, but I know the boy's a smart one and a reg'lar born farmer."

The neighborhood home harbors other guests this summer, and Doverdale has evidently begun a permanent system of work in this line. Miss Caxton says: "Abandoned farms are numerous enough, but we in Doverdale have found that they may be made an all-around blessing instead of an evil, if they are rightly used."

ONE RESULT FROM THE MOTHERS' CLUB.

BY MARY WOOD ALLEN, M. D.

Mrs. Hall went home from the meeting of the club with a lighter heart than she had known for many a day. She had not sent in her son's name, for she had not wished to hear his faults recounted, and that is what she had supposed would be done. But when she heard the sweet and tender prayer offered in his behalf, it gave her a feeling of courage and of hope that his life might not end on the gallows, as so many had prophesied. When he came home that night at supper time it was with the expectation of receiving the accustomed scolding, which made no impression but to arouse rebellion. Great was his surprise when his mother said smilingly, "My son, I think I could have supper ready sooner if you'd bring me some water and wood." For the first time in his remembrance, he felt self-reproach that he had neglected his home duties, and quickly responded to the needs of his mother.

At the supper table she ventured quietly to remark: "I was at the Mothers' Club this afternoon."

"Well, I don't know as that makes any difference to me," was the ungracious response.

"Did you remember that this is your birthday?"

"No, and nobody else remembered it, I guess."

"Yes, they did, Jimmy. I remembered it. The club are going to pray for all the children on their birthdays, and they prayed for you to-day."

Jimmy gave an expressive growl of disgust, and said: "I suppose they told the Lord what an awful bad boy I am."

"No, they didn't. It was Grandma Benson who prayed, and she thanked the Lord for you; that He had given you so good a brain, and that you had so much courage, and she said they should expect you to be one of the best citizens of our town."

Jim looked at his mother in astonishment. That anyone could expect of him anything but mischief was a great surprise. He ate the rest of his supper in silence; then, rising, he took his hat and started towards the door.

"Where are you going?" asked the mother, who had hoped the boy would stay at home this evening after what he had heard.

"Oh, I'm just going out awhile. I'll be back pretty soon."

On his way home that evening he had seen the light shining through the window of Dr. Benson's house, and, seized by the spirit of mischief, he had thrown a stone with so accurate an aim that it crashed through the glass, and he knew must have caused considerable consternation.

Indeed, it was not impossible that it had injured some one. Maybe that dear old lady who had thanked the Lord that he had so much courage was even now suffering pain from an act of his that was not courageous but cowardly. There was some manliness in his heart, and his mother's report had aroused it. He was going to confess his guilt.

He knocked at the door, and Grandma Benson herself opened it. She smiled pleasantly at him, although she knew that it was he who had thrown the stone. "Come in," she said, kindly.

"Is Dr. Benson at home?" inquired the boy.

The doctor, hearing his name, came forward, and Jim stepped into the room. How much courage it took for this almost outlawed boy to report his own misdeed you may imagine. But he did not hesitate. Bravely he looked up into the doctor's face and said: "Dr. Benson, I broke your window to-night, and I have come over to tell you that I'll pay for another one, and, if you'll let me, I'll come and put it in. I know how. I have done it often at home."

Dr. Benson was his mother's son, and he did not think it wise to give the boy a lecture, but to accept his voluntary confession as all apology needful and as a tactic promise for the future; so he said in a pleasant, off-hand way: "Well, my boy, it will be a great accommodation if you will come and put it in. What time will be convenient for you, wife?"

The hour being appointed, Jim turned to go. "Won't you sit down?" asked Mrs. Benson.

"No, thank you," answered the boy, more embarrassed than he had been during the conversation. "No, I think I'd better go home."

Grandma Benson opened the door for him, and, giving him her hand, said gently: "I knew you had a brave heart."

Those cheering words rang in his ears all the evening, and obliterated the plans for mischief which usually employed his evening thoughts.

At breakfast the next morning he asked, somewhat abruptly, "Mother, what women belong to the Mothers' Club?"

Mrs. Hall named them over, wondering why the question was asked, but the boy made no explanation. His thought was, however, "All these women are praying for me and thinking that I have brains and courage." Somehow, the thought gave him pleasure, but it also, in a queer way, embarrassed him. He felt that these women were his friends, and yet he did not want to meet them. While he knew them to be his enemies he faced them boldly, but the feeling that they thought him to have some good qualities took away his bravado. As he went to school two or three women who met him spoke kindly to him, a most unwonted courtesy. His teacher, who was a member of the club, gave him a proof of confidence in trusting him to do an errand for her, and he justified her trust by a prompt and reliable acceptance and execution of the commission.

It must not be supposed that Jim Hall became at once an immaculate model of goodness. He was a human boy, passing through the physical changes which are generally, even in the best boys, accompanied with evidences of original sin; his temptations to return to his former pranks were sometimes yielded to, but the public feeling in regard to him was greatly modified, and instead of general reproach and doleful prophecies concerning his future, he found many friends who drew out, by their trust in him, his better self, and in time he learned to take a pleasure in doing unseen acts of kindness greater than he had ever felt in mischief. To-day, in the promise of a noble manhood, he blesses the influence of the Mothers' Club.

SAMMY'S IDEA OF THE SILVER QUESTION.

Little bits of silver,
Little grains of gold,
Make a lot of trouble—
How the people scold!
If we only had some—
Just a few you see—
We'd know how to spend 'em,
Johnny Bates and me!

First, we'd buy some candy—
Half a pound or more;
Then we'd buy some cookies
Down at Kneadham's store.
When we'd done a-feasting,
In some shady nook,
Then we'd wash it down with Water from the brook.

Little grains of silver,
Little chunks of gold,
Make a lot of trouble
Where strong drink is sold.
But we'll never buy it—
Just you wait and see—
Rum or gin or brandy,
Johnny Bates and me!

A RAINY DAY MAY PARTY.

BY MABEL GIFFORD.

Eight little girls looked out from eight windows on May morning. Eight pairs of eyes grew as misty as the sky, and eight girl voices wailed, "It rains!"

No run in the woods, no May flowers, no May queen, no merry games, no May party, no fun, because "it rains!"

Belle Bly's mother was the first to come to the rescue. Oh, these blessed mothers, who are always thinking up something to comfort the little Belle Blys!

"Have a house party," said Belle Bly's mother.

"But eight of us!" said Belle, "we couldn't run or anything, but just sit still." Notwithstanding Belle began to brighten.

"You might ask grandpa to let you go into the hall."

The hall! that almost took Belle Bly's breath. But mother had proposed it. Yes, she would go right away and ask grandpa if she might have the May party in Pickering Hall.

Grandpa Pickering had built a big brick block with stores below, then offices, and over the offices the hall. What a delightful place it would be for a party!

Grandpa Pickering had rather a stern face, and he expected a good deal of children. He expected them to always mind what they were told. Grandpa's bushy gray eyebrows started out quite alarmingly when he heard Belle Bly's request. Then he stopped, and looked at her; put his hand in his pocket and drew out a bunch of keys, detached one and handed it to Belle. "You may have your party in the hall," he said, "but you must not make any noise."

Now it was not every little girl that Grandpa Pickering would have given the key to the hall. He trusted Belle. "Belle is a pretty good girl," he was often heard to say. Perhaps if she had stopped to think of it a little she would have done a little differently.

As it was, she ran off to tell the good news to her seven friends, and the long faces shortened in a twinkling and hands and feet flew so that in a very little time the May party was transferred to Pickering Hall.

When they were all there and chattering like blackbirds Belle remembered grandpa's warning. "We mustn't make any noise, that is, not much," she said.

"Why?"

"Oh, I don't know. Perhaps he was afraid it would trouble the folks below."

There was a silence; the girls looked at each other, and suddenly it seemed that a May party without any noise would be no party at all.

"I don't think he meant any common noise," said Belle. "Of course, we shan't make any great noise; we don't want to. I don't believe the folks below can hear us."

All the faces brightened then, and Belle, with a run and a skip, slid across the hall; the rest followed, and a merry time they had on the waxed floor.

After that the table on the platform and another in the cloak room were put together, and the May dainties were spread on it. One had brought honey, another lady-fingers, another jelly-roll, and somebody contributed sweet pickled pears. There were golden sponge cakes, and olives and cunning slices of bread. Belle and Conny Hastings had taken their tea sets out there, and it looked so tempting that after Esther Donham had placed a tiny bouquet of red geranium blossom and rose geranium leaf at each plate, the girls voted unanimously to have their treat then and there. So they did. What appetites they had, and how clean the dishes looked when they had finished!

They were in most excellent spirits now and ready for exercise. They played all the "ring a round" games they knew, and then to get their breath they played school. The class was very saucy and missed in every lesson and so it was soon dismissed. Then they had a concert and sang songs and spoke pieces. They were getting very gay.

Once in awhile a little tremor of apprehension would steal over Belle Bly, and she would wonder if they were making very much noise.

At last they played a game without any name. This is the way they played it: All the girls climbed upon the platform and one after another jumped to the floor, ran around to the end of the platform, and climbed up ready for another jump.

Belle Bly grew nervous, but disliked to interfere with the fun, fearing they would look at each other again in that queer way that made her think they were all going home. But when they joined hands for a jump altogether, Belle spread out her hands and opened her mouth to stop them, but before she could say a word down they came, laughing and shouting and scrambling to their feet as fast as they could.

And then something terrible happened. The hall door came open with a bang and a great, tall, wild-looking man strode into the room. He was in his shirt sleeves and his bushy yellow hair stood on end all over his head, his eyes were red and he frowned at the girls in a terrific fashion.

"Get out of here, get out of here," he roared, in a voice big enough for a lion, and he spread out his great claws of hands at them; "Get out of here, get out of here!"

How frightened they were! How they ran for the china dishes, and tumbled them into the baskets, snatched their hats and jackets and ran by the wild man, down the stairs helter skelter and out into the street.

"Who is he? Where did he come from? How did he know we were in there?" questioned the May party when it got its breath.

"Oh, I don't know. I think he must be a crazy man," gasped Belle Bly.

"Well, anyhow, I think your grandpa might have told us if there were any crazy men around," said Esther Donham, tossing her head high and looking as if she were much too good for Pickering Hall.

"I never'll go into your grandpa's old hall again, see if I do," sobbed Conny Hastings, still shivering from her fright.

"Won't you come into the house?" asked Belle, feeling very miserable, and knowing they would not have any more party that day.

No, they wouldn't go in; they would all go home, and home they went.

Belle went to mother and told her all about it. "Now why," said she, "didn't grandpa tell me if there was a crazy man around?"

"He gave you fair warning; if you had obeyed him you would have been safe," was mother's answer.

When grandpa came in Belle went to him with her doleful story. "I told you to keep still," said grandpa.

But when Belle came to the description of the wild man, grandpa could look severe no longer, he burst into a hearty "ha, ha, ha!" that quite amazed Belle Bly.

"Jenkins don't like to have his slumbers disturbed," he said. "Poor Jenkins! you were coming down on him like a thousand of brick."

"Jenkins? who is he?" asked Belle Bly.

"Jenkins? he's the night watchman."

"And does he sleep there?"

"Right under the hall."

"And you never told me," said Belle Bly reproachfully.

"I told you to keep still."

"But I didn't think there was anything so particular."

"You don't want to think," said grandpa, "you want to mind."

Then he walked off trying to look very severe, but Belle Bly caught the twinkle in his eye.

"Oh, dear! he thinks it is a good joke. I don't see any joke," sighed she, and she went away by herself to think it over.

"I'll pay particular attention next time," said Belle when her reverie was ended. "How glad I am we had the honey first!"

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Such a variety of letters I have had this week! I wish our Corner space would permit me to print them in full. But you know how it is in large gatherings—only one can speak, and but a few minutes, at a time.

First is our Marion Irwin with a "poser." She asks, "Won't you tell Cozy Cornerers how many of us there are?" How many? I give it up! You have flitted in and out and clustered round about so thickly that I would as soon think of numbering the stars in the sky!

Fletcher McFadden, an Illinois cousin, hopes that because he has not written for a long time he is not excluded from the Cozy Corner circle. Indeed not! Aunt Jane's nephews and nieces come in "for always."

A new niece, Menia Beswick, wants to know if there is really no liquor sold in Maine, adding, "We ought to praise Neal Dow forever." I am sorry to say that liquor is sold in Maine, just as many other evil deeds are done, contrary to the laws of God and the government. But the offenders are very often found out and arrested. Then the liquor is confiscated and emptied on the ground, as was done on one occasion when Lady Somerset and Miss Willard visited Neal Dow at his home in Portland. Some jugs and bottles emptied at that time were carried away as trophies by the white-ribboners and now bear our significant badge, which redeems them from such base service.

Let us hear from the cousins who are planting seeds for flower mission work; from those who have wandered after wildflowers in field and wood. How many welcome the springtime?

Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

THE SITUATION.

The developments of recent months along the lines of the financial and labor questions are of the gravest character. Strikes are general. Coal miners to the number of one hundred and twenty-six thousand have stopped work all over the country, and the end is not yet. From new districts reports are coming in daily of additions to the strikers. Other strikes of varying dimensions and importance are reported from every direction and in some cases these have been attended with violence and bloodshed. Whatever may be the ultimate result of these strikes, their immediate effect is to increase the suffering of the laborers, injure capital and prolong the financial depression.

It is useless to descant upon the folly displayed in this paradoxical situation; of the absurdity of an army of the "unemployed" marching to Washington to petition the National Legislature to provide work for those who have no support and no means of obtaining it, while the army of the "employed" refuse the work offered them unless wages be raised. It is equally futile to reëcho the cry of the current political economies that the working class always chooses the most unpropitious time for its contest with capital; that invariably laborers strike when business is depressed and capital can well afford to lie idle, instead of timing their demands when business is prosperous and employers making money. Without regard to the wisdom or justice of the parties in the contest we are obliged to face the facts as they are.

He must be a prophet, indeed, who would venture at this time to predict what the outcome will be or to offer with confidence a remedy for the serious evils which confront us. It is difficult to decide just what were the causes that precipitated the existing disorders upon us. Republican leaders, of course, lay the blame upon the free trade principles of the Democratic party, and say, triumphantly, "We told you so." We do not deny that the uncertainty concerning the action which the Democrats would take upon the tariff may have had something to do with our troubles. Whatever may be said in favor of free trade, it is certain that the sudden transition to it from excessive protection would involve ruin to many individuals and serious temporary injury to the financial interests of the country.

Yet, making due allowance for all the disturbance that must be caused by a sudden change of policy, and still more from uncertainty as to what the policy is to be, it hardly seems that this one thing alone fully accounts for the severe, long-continued business depression which came upon us at a time when it was least to be expected; in the midst of good crops and flourishing business and when the great Fair promised to bring millions of dollars into the country; at a time, in short, when there seemed every reason for confidence to be firm. But, if it is impossible to determine with certainty the causes which brought about our financial troubles, still less is it possible to point out the remedy. As usual, the leading political parties are ready to assure the country with all the confidence of the patent medicine vender, that their election to power will speedily restore things to their normal condition, and again we do not deny that a clearly defined policy along either line (especially, perhaps, an assurance of the continuance of what has been during recent years, the policy of the country) will have a decided effect in restoring confidence, which seems to be the main thing needed.

In the meantime, while business is regaining its equilibrium, the distress of the poor must be tided over. This is a matter of serious gravity for it has outgrown local treatment. No one has a clear cut method to offer. The army of the commonweal demands for the present, work; for the future a different distribution of wealth, but so far as we have seen, has very few and very inadequate suggestions to offer as to how these desirable ends are to be reached. For ourselves, we recognize the justice of both demands but fail to see how either of them can be complied with, except to a very limited extent, without first a complete reconstruction of our social system, and that cannot be accomplished in a day. It is exceedingly improbable that the government or the nation is ready yet for any very radical measure, and under existing conditions neither of these two demands can be granted permanently. The state cannot long invent needless work and unless it controls the work of the nation it cannot employ the workers of the nation; nor is anyone so foolish now as to desire a wholesale confiscation of private property, or so insane as to suppose that were such a confiscation to take place and an equitable distribution to be made, such a distribution could be maintained under our present system.

In the meantime the army of the commonweal is bearing steadily down from all quarters upon Washington. In a way it reminds us of the mobs of Paris, which marched through the streets of that city demanding bread or work. Our readers will recall the outcome of that reign of terror, the useless bloodshed, the final return of the poor to be ground down pitilessly as before beneath the oppressor's heel. True, the leaders in this army of the commonweal and the principal members are law-abiding citizens who do not intend that disorder or violence shall disgrace them, but we do not see how they can prevent their ranks being filled with the tramps and vagabonds of the land, or how they can control this element when once it forms a considerable part of their force. Yet there are many points of hopeful contrast in the situations. Our laborers meet at Washington no despot or class of despots whose position depends upon keeping their heel on the necks of the prostrate people. They meet, rather, fellow-citizens who are not so far removed from them that they cannot appreciate the real hardships from which these petitioners seek relief, but who, on the contrary, have a keen sense of those hardships and an honest desire to do what is possible to relieve them.

On the other hand, there is not in the "army" marching as we write to the nation's capital, a wild French mob, knowing nothing of self-government. Though, as is natural, a good representation of the tramp element is to be found in its ranks, it is composed largely of clear-headed American citizens who comprehend the difficulties of government, who understand that great changes cannot be wrought in a moment, who know how to abide by the decision of the majority and who have been pronounced more than once by foreigners "the most patient people on earth." If this element can maintain the ascendency nothing but the most extreme injustice can arouse them to acts of violence.

Very much depends upon the treatment of "industrial armies" by Congress and the more fortunate class of people generally. As we have already indicated, there is reason to hope much from the relation sustained by our national representatives to the members. Whatever means should or should not be taken to satisfy the requests of these petitioners there is only one course to be followed by Congress and the nation at large. In this case, as in every other, "the soft answer turneth away wrath but grievous words stir up anger." If the laborers who have suffered so much during the last year feel that the sympathies of their more fortunate fellow-citizens are with them, that the nation as a whole is ready and anxious to do the utmost that can be done to assist them, they on their part will be ready to listen to reason and yield to the judgment of the majority even where it conflicts with their own. But if they are made to feel that all that the rest of the nation cares is that its own interests do not suffer, they will be driven to desperation.

Their views may seem impractical and foolish, but it is well to remember that the problems before us and them to-day are exceedingly complicated. Who can say he has reached the solution of any one of them? It behooves us to acknowledge that after all what seems to us the path of error may be the path out of our difficulties. He who has not had some of the political principles which he had supposed established shaken by the events of the past few years has either been most unobservant of the trend of events or began far in advance of his contemporaries. It is one of our chief sources of strength as a nation that we can make experiments without endangering our institutions. In the months of business depression through which we have already passed the chief sufferers have been the laborers. They, if any class, should have the right to ask that their views receive the most serious consideration. We cannot afford to let the working people feel that their interests are disregarded. Any experiment in our nation is safe except the experiment of setting class against class or subjecting any portion of our people to oppression.

WOMEN AS WAGE-EARNERS.

Mr. Walter Besant, in the interview to which allusion was made in our issue of April 12, goes on to disclaim against the admission of women into industrial fields upon the following grounds. "Each woman drives out her own or somebody's else husband and there is consequently a destitute family. Then they take small salaries and so lower wages."

"But," suggests the interviewer, "there are women who must work." "Yes; but there are also many who work and have no need to do so. Girls become dissatisfied with a quiet life in the country, and they seek for literary work. They write to me by the hundreds. In journalism the entry of women is proving most disastrous. They take half the pay of men. That must be stopped somehow. Certain religious societies are notorious sweaters of women."

There is a certain truth in these assertions of Mr. Besant; a much needed lesson which should be drawn from them. With his premise we take issue; with his conclusion we are forced to agree. That a woman should take the place of a man in the industrial field is not, in itself, a matter to be deplored; ince, unfortunately, she possesses the same need as to food and clothing, and not infrequently must look to her individual efforts as the only supply for those needs. But that any class should enter the industrial field under conditions which make it possible for that class to accept less than a living wage, thus lowering the price of labor for both men and women, is certainly a thing to be deplored, and that is what many women and more girls are doing to-day.

Mr. Besant well says that "there are many who work and have no need to do so." It is this "many" which is the menace of the more who work because they must. Whatever are the underlying causes, whether the greed of parents, or the unrest and dissatisfaction of daughters, it is true that the class of women wage-earners, who are not wholly dependent upon their wages, who have homes and parents, those to whom the payment of board is unnecessary, but who work for better clothes, or more pocket money, is constantly increasing, and its increase means a corresponding decrease in the amount of wages paid, not to them alone but to all workers.

Here are some cases in point. A young girl recently called upon a prominent woman physician and asked for employment in type-writing. She offered to do her work at one-half the usual price paid per one thousand words, stating that she was not dependent upon her labor, having a comfortable home, but she wanted to earn money for a long trip in the summer. The doctor being the woman she is, saw the glaring injustice, and instead of engaging the applicant at once, as we fear too many women needing a type-writer would have done, told her that the only ground upon which she could rightfully seek employment would be that, doing her work better than other stenographers, she could charge one-half more and thus rob no other girl of her necessary wage.

We have in thought a teacher in a city public school, who is doubtless only one of many. Her parents are comparatively wealthy. She not only pays no board, but she does not clothe herself, nor is her salary in any way applied to present necessities. Regularly each month the whole amount is banked. Thus she is growing rich, but not from the fruits of her labor so much as from the life and hope, yes, the very flesh and blood of some other girl who needs that place, to whom it may stand as the only alternative to starvation, or to something infinitely worse.

But we need not multiply instances in proof of our position. The facts are too patent to be denied. What makes it possible for the employers in large firms to offer to girls applying to them for situations a salary barely covering the cost of board, answering the girl's remonstrance, oftentimes, with the damnable suggestion that she must "look to other sources for clothing"—if it be not the fact that the girls who have homes, who do not need to pay board, can and do accept such salaries?

What is to be done? It is very much easier to discover an evil than to discover and apply the remedy, but there are certain things which suggest themselves as being at least the first steps toward righting this manifest wrong.

1. Impress upon the restless girlhood of our land that to "do something" does not necessarily imply the going away from home or entering upon some avocation demanding wages. In the rebound from the old ideals when it was counted almost a disgrace for a woman to technically "earn her living" we are in sore danger of reaching the other extreme and counting it almost a disgrace for her not to do so.

One sighs, sometimes, for the old type of a home, where the daughters were content to remain by the mother's side, lightening her labors, filling that niche in the home life which is always sadly vacant if there be no daughter there. Now the daughters go out into the world and the mothers are left too often with burdens far heavier than they can bear and without the sweetness and gladness in their lives which comes from a daughter's sympathy and help.

We are not arguing that the daughters should remain at home idle, nor that, having a distinct fitness for some other line of work and a call to it, she should accept house-work and home life as a woman's only vocation; but for the great class without special fitness or special call, we are claiming that the work a girl does at home is as legitimate work as any she can find out in the great world, and that very often, in leaving the one to go to the other, she is "omitting the weightier matters of the law."

2. The second remedy, if applied, must rest for its application with the parents themselves. If the thousand nameless duties which fall upon a true daughter in a true home—whether that home be rich or poor—constitute legitimate work, it should be recognized as such by the parents, and treated as such upon the basis of sound finance. A girl should be spared the humiliation of looking upon herself as being "supported." It is that more than anything else which drives the daughter out of the home. How women have lived through the centuries as wives, mothers and daughters, under that intolerable stigma, one is at a loss to know. "Supported!" The very word makes one's blood tingle; the state of society it stands for is little less than barbarous. The idea that men are to be sole manipulators of household finances, and women are to look to them for every penny received as a special and particular favor, is at the bottom of the unrest and dissatisfaction in women's hearts to-day. Never until it is fully recognized that the bread-makers place is beside the bread-winner in the evolution of a home, can the "woman question" be settled.

Let it be understood from the first that the daughter's place in the home is one of independence—that she receives full value for services, if it be only the service of entertaining guests in homes of wealth. Let matters be upon a business basis, as well as a basis of sentiment. If you dislike the word salary as applied to your child, call it an allowance; but let it be understood that she is entitled to that allowance if she conscientiously discharges the duties attendant upon her high position as daughter. There would be fewer selfish daughters, fewer shirks in the home, as well as fewer girls going forth from its safe doors, if this principle were but universally accepted and lived up to.

3. In cases where the parents are poor, invalid or otherwise unfortunate, and the daughter's assistance is needed, let her demand the same pay for her services that she would need if altogether alone in the world. Let her pay her board in her own home as her brother would do in his. If the women wage-earners would but combine upon a uniform rate, whether they have homes or not, Mr. Besant's argument would soon loose its force.

We recognize fully woman's legitimate place as a worker in any industrious field. We recognize the fact that many women must work for themselves and for others. We recognize also that, where there is no imperative necessity, a woman has the same right to go into the world of toil that a man has if she chooses so to do. But let her go as a man goes, not seeking special immunities, nor underbidding other workers. Let her be a help to the world of workers, not a stumbling block.

Work is one of the divinest gifts God can give to humanity, but work is a generic term admitting unlimited species. The violet works as well as the tornado, when it fills with perfume the spot in which God has set its life. Being is infinitely more than doing, and it is the awful danger of the age in which we live that, both for men and women, we are risking the exaltation of doing at the expense of being. A "career" is less than a life. Too often a career may be at the expense of a life.

It is time to send the John the Baptist cry, "stop and think" out into the dusty highways where women congregate, as well as into the quiet homes. Stop and think whether after all it shall profit you to "earn a salary" if at the same time you miss doing the duty which lies nearest at hand. Stop and think whether a finer dress than you could otherwise afford, or a longer vacation is worth your while, if to obtain it you take the place of some other girl who needs food and clothing.

Justice, the most needed thing in this universe to-day, is especially needed in woman's relation to woman.

"It is very good for strength to know that some one needs you to be strong." Think of the pitifulness of a life shorn of such needs, the emptiness of a heart that has not the sweet task of urging itself onward and upward for other's sakes. We are not meant to be thus set apart. If in the course of nature the house be left unto you desolate, the human ties removed or severed, count on it there is a need elsewhere for you to "be strong." Especially is this true of woman to-day, when woman's war is "on" against the forces that have invaded and destroyed her sweet seclusion. Drunkards' children, suicides' wives, criminals' families, saloons' victims are crying to her on every hand, for vain, indeed, had been the help of men. Here is a tonic for strength. Let us write it on our walls that we may see it as we pass in and out —"It is very good for strength to know that some one needs you to be strong."

The satanic genius of the saloon quite outdoes itself at times in its attempt to name these resorts suggestively and truthfully. Riding in open cars every day through the length and breadth of the great city, we are often moved to a smile—with more of pathos than humor therein—at the names displayed on the windows and doors behind which destruction and death are bartered for man's best. Here are a few illustrations: "The Slip Inn," and we think of the degraded drinker, slinking away from the honest gaze of wife and children and slipping down ruin-road. "The Pearl Exchange," where the pearls of purity, self respect, intelligence, manliness, aye, the "pearl of great price," itself is exchanged for everything that pertains to impurity, degradation, befuddled brains, unmanliness and eternal loss. "On the Quiet," yet we can imagine the powers of darkness making the night of their Inferno hideous indeed over the poor soul that is going their way "on the quiet." One window particularly noticed bears the cabalistic letters, "M. U. M.," and "mum" must be the word, for what heart-sick wife or mother can expect to learn from any one inside those doors how she may trace and find her lost one, and "misery upon misery" is the true translation of the illy-made joke. But they are hardly worth the space accorded to them unless it be to mourn the fall of the once keen wits whose flashes were wont to adorn a worthier cause than that of the saloon.

It is a happy thing that sometimes at least men who dare to be in the right with "two or three" can stand true to their highest convictions and yet be made the recipients of what are called "worldly honors," but which ought to be rewards of honest and faithful service to their fellowmen. A prominent illustration of this is afforded in the recent appointment of Canon Wilberforce to a Canonry in Westminster Abbey, and of Canon Leigh to be Dean of Hereford. Both these true Christians are teetotalers and radical temperance men, they are also Liberals in politics. Mr. Gladstone appointed Canon Wilberforce, and Lord Rosebery's first appointment was good Canon Leigh. It is significant that the latter's new and high position will make him a most influential church officer in the diocese in which Eastnor Castle is situated, and which has been for many years in charge of a man pronouncedly conservative in all his views. The recent death of Prebendary Pulling, who for forty years had occupied the rectory at Eastnor, and who was also of the old regimé, has given Lady Henry Somerset the opportunity to appoint the Rev. Mr. Hird, for many years secretary to the Church of England Temperance society, a devoted teetotaler and progressive in every good sense of that word. The temperance work and the recognition of woman as a factor in religious work, not only as a hewer of wood and drawer of water but a recognized leader, will both receive a strong impetus from the incumbency of the trio of teetotalers whom we have named. As The Union Signal is the organ of the World's W. C. T. U. it is fitting that these facts should be known for the encouragement of our constituency.

Grief should be
Like joy, majestic, equable, sedate,
Confirming, cleansing, raising, making free,
Strong to consume small troubles; to commend
Great thoughts, grave thoughts, thoughts lasting to the end.

I must take things and people more or less as I find them. Here is a piece of walnut the size I want, the peculiarity of grain I have been looking for, but there, also is a gnarl I did not want. However, I must accept the gnarl-marked beauty or lose the whole, and after all, the gnarl is the least part of my treasure unless my vision become distorted. Have you never been turning the leaves of a book and come to one which, before the press had laid its mighty hand upon it, had a crease across the corner which the workmen had failed to notice? Your instinct of perfection makes you attempt to smooth out the folded page, when lo, in the attempt you find you are destroying the harmony of the print, and making your narrative unreadable; it is too good to be lost, and you are forced to leave the page with its imperfection that the greater good be not spoiled. I have met souls like that, just a little warped, very beautiful save for a gnarl here or a twist there. But upon them, and through them, is a beauty and helpfulness of character-writing I cannot afford to lose, and I must accept them as they are. And the strange part of it is, the more I dwell upon the loveliness the smaller the defect grows, until I wonder at last if it were there at all!

People are wont to say, "If it would not be the least trouble or take a minute of your time, would you kindly do me a little favor?" Against this form of speech I urge the following considerations: 1. It takes as its major premise the position that a person would do nothing for you if it caused him any trouble, i. e., it presupposes universal and complete selfishness. 2. It is not genuine thus to use the expression, for one must know that the favor asked will take time and give trouble, else in the nature of the case it cannot be a "favor" at all. 3. By making use of this expression, the doing of whatever is asked is altogether bereft of being a kindness, for if it is "no trouble whatever" it is no kindness, there is no heart in it. Doubtless no one who ever used the expression thought that it was unworthy of human lips. I have had it said to me a thousand times, by friends good and true, but have always resented it in my heart. Better say, "If it is not too much trouble," always acknowledging that as a matter of course you have asked what would not be done except for reasons based on our universal brotherhood, which is itself based on the principle, "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ."

Mr. T. J. Alley, one of the missionaries of the Jewish Relief Mission at Jerusalem, has discovered in that far-away city, a new use to which tobacco is put, and tells this sad story: In what is known as the "Box Colony" the rickety shanties of the very poor are built principally of scraps of old boxes and tin cans, affording but little protection against the terrible winter storms of howling wind, rain and snow. Sometimes there is not a dry thread to be found upon the inmates, and the floors of clay are turned into deep mud. Sometimes clothing of any kind is conspicuous by its scarcity, and the poor creatures, aged, sick, starving, shivering, herd together like animals to economize natural warmth. The missionary going to them had a check to his feelings of pity by the sight of the tobacco pipes to which many of them clung, and would have turned away with a rebuke, thinking if the tobacco had been foregone there might have been bread or fire. But upon investigation he found "that the stuff they were smoking was refuse stems and scattered waste which the wretched creatures—God's creatures—gathered up about the government tobacco house to deaden the pangs of death from starvation and cold." "The sad experience has worked something of a change in me," writes Mr. Alley. "Hereafter I shall have a shade more of kindness in my thought for tobacco as thus ministering to the dying than for 'Christians,' so-called, who worse than squander God's means to use it as a foul luxury and thus leave others of His creatures to resort to its use for so pitiful a purpose."

RETROGRESSIVE PROGRESS.

"For freedom's battle, once begun,
. . . . . .
Though baffled oft, is ever won."

The temperance battle of the last month has been fought and won in what is often called the "garden of Canada," Prince Edward Island. Physically beautiful, this province has now placed itself in a position to become morally so, for it is the one clean spot in all Canada which is throughout the entire province under the temperance act, commonly known as the Scott act.

Charlottetown was the scene of war, being situated in the only county which had not already adopted the Scott act. The fight was fierce and bitter. For three weeks previous to the vote being taken both sides worked their hardest. How close the contest was is evidenced by the small majority of two, the vote standing 714 for, 712 against.

The W. C. T. U. helped nobly, many of the women pledging themselves to give all their spare time for weeks before to this work. Mr. F. S. Spence, of Toronto, secretary of the Dominion Alliance, also materially assisted in the result by his talent for organizing and brilliant and telling speeches.

The contest excited much interest throughout the Dominion, and at the crowded thanksgiving mass-meeting, which was held in the Charlottetown Opera House the next evening, it was the pleasing duty of Mr. Robert Angus, secretary of the Scott act committee, to read many letters and telegrams of rejoicing and sympathy.

Certain combinations of water, snow and ice, sometimes make in our roads a condition of things in which walking is best described as "two steps forward and one back." It is not a pleasant method of locomotion, although progressive in the long run. Temperance workers in Canada are suffering from a counterpart of this condition at present. Elated by the cheering results of the Prohibition plebiscites all over the Dominion, and feeling a powerful backing in public sentiment, a large deputation waited on Sir John Thompson and his cabinet, representing the Dominion Government of Canada, and requested their serious consideration of the abolition of the traffic in strong drink. Messrs. Spence, Buchanan and other leaders made forcible addresses, and Mrs. Alexander spoke on behalf of the ten thousand women of Canada whom she represented. A courteous reception was no disguise to the hopeless nature of Sir John Thompson's answer. He gave them to understand definitely that they could expect no aid from government as regards prohibition.

This check, discouraging as it is, has not cast down temperance workers; on the contrary, never was there such an awakening in every department of work as at present. The Dominion superintendent of franchise, Mrs. Edwards, has framed a petition to be presented during this session of Parliament, asking that full parliamentary franchise shall be granted to the women of Canada on the same terms as to the men. This petition will be presented to the Senate by the Hon. W. Scott, and to the Dominion House by Sir James Grant.

The Christian Endeavor societies of Montreal have taken up in earnest the very practical work of trying to dissociate the sale of liquor from groceries. Their method of work is to circulate petitions and do their utmost to get people to promise not to buy from grocers who sell liquor. Father McCallen, the Catholic champion of temperance, when interviewed on the subject, gave it his heartiest encouragement, saying he feared that drunkenness is on the increase among women, owing to this pernicious system.

It is always a pleasure to hear of new W. C. T. Unions being formed. Owing to the growth of Montreal westward, it has been thought advisable to organize in that part of the city. Miss Dougall, county president, and Mrs. Ella Williams, Dominion president, recently met a number of ladies in Welcome Hall, and amid considerable enthusiasm organized what will in future be known as the Western W. C. T. U. of Montreal. It was decided that temperance groceries would be the special branch of work the new union would undertake.

The Montreal Y's under the leadership of Miss Finley, held their annual meeting this month and showed a most successful year's work. They aim especially at the training of children in temperance work.

The Dominion W. C. T. U. will consider the question of affiliation with the National Council of Women for the Dominion, at their convention to be held in London, Ont., during the first five days of June.

Miss Lillian Phelps has been sent by the Dominion union on an organizing trip to the northwest territories, lying between Manitoba and British Columbia, comprising Assiniboia, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Athabasca. A faint idea of the energy and efficiency of Miss Phelps may be gathered from the bare mention of the fact that en route to the northwest, while passing through Western Ontario she gave seven lectures, organized two new unions and traveled two thousand miles in ten days.

Mrs. J. K. Barney, the World's W. C. T. U. evangelist, is expected to be present at the W. C. T. U. Dominion convention in London, June 1, and will deliver her lecture "Clean Hands." She will also give a gospel address on Sunday afternoon and a Bible reading next day.

Major Hilton, the evangelistic temperance worker so well known in the United States, is making a tour in Canada. He has made several engagements and will give a week to the work in Galt, Ont.

"Beautiful Joe," that new publication worthy of a place beside "Black Beauty," was written by Miss Marshall Saunders, who is connected with the W. C. T. U. of Halifax, Nova Scotia, as superintendent of the department, Band of Mercy.

Two Dominion W. C. T. U. leaflets have been recently issued, "Hints for Juvenile Work," by H. A. Brough, which is most helpful. "Facts! Sir, Facts!!" by E. R. A., gives some startling statistics in regard to the consumption of liquor and tobacco.

OHIO.

AN INTERESTING BUDGET.

Ohio women have at last secured the school suffrage ballot. The bill passed the house April 24 by a vote of 55 yeas to 26 nays. We do not expect to content ourselves with this small bit of justice, but by exercising it well, we expect to use it as a wedge to force the door to entire enfranchisement wide open.

"Deep Sorrow" is the headline in an Akron paper to an account of a public farewell reception given to Ohio's beloved Ferdinand Schumacher on the eve of his leaving Akron for a home in Chicago. Never before in the history of the city has a man been given such a public reception as was tendered Mr. Schumacher—an ovation, indeed, though full of sadness. The First Congregational church was filled with representative citizens, men and women, who have known and honored Mr. Schumacher.

Words of highest praise and appreciation were well spoken by those selected to voice the feelings of the people, and they found an echo in the breast of every one present. Hon. J. Park Alexander presided, and gave an interesting address. The mayor of the city spoke in behalf of the city, stating that the name of Mr. Schumacher and the name of Akron are synonymous. The president of Buchtel College spoke for that institution, for which Mr. Schumacher has done so much. The "Business Men" were represented, and spoke of Mr. Schumacher as the creator of business in that city. "Woman's Suffrage" responded feelingly, as Mr. Schumacher has been an active, sympathetic member since its organization. They commended him heartily to the women of Illinois. The "Professional Men," the "Cereal Company," "Education," "Merchants," "Temperance," the "Ministry," "United Charities," the "Woman's Christian Temperance Union," "Citizens," all paid highest tribute to an honored friend.

Hundreds took Mr. Schumacher by the hand. As the people were leaving the church the Eighth Regiment band appeared and rendered two beautiful selections, closing with "Auld Lang Syne," after which they gave three cheers and a tiger for Mr. Schumacher. Not only the Akron citizens and societies regret the departure of Mr. Schumacher, but also the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Ohio, which pays a tribute to one whom it honored as a hero in all reforms and as one of the most faithful friends and sympathizers of our cause. May he soon return!

Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, National superintendent of this department, has spent two years in careful work to gather valuable literature on this subject, and she now has a department envelope prepared that contains 250 pages of important matter without advertisements. This is being extensively used by the workers in the department. Mrs. Leiter is giving many lectures on this subject in Ohio now, and has received quite an ovation in many places. She is now making careful study of the cadet system.

Canton union has issued a tasty little shopping list souvenir for 1894–5. It gives the history of their union from its organization, the directory of their membership, officers, trustees, advisory board, superintendents, etc. Each left-hand page is devoted to the information regarding the W. C. T. U., and the right-hand pages to valuable advertisements of business houses of the city. It closes with several blank pages for memoranda. This union conducts an industrial school of eighteen classes of girls and one of boys. Instruction is given in sewing to 140 scholars. They have a large L. T. L. that meets every Sabbath afternoon, having three lessons in scientific temperance and one in mercy each month. They own a building in a prominent business part of the city, valued at $10,000, which is a home for women and girls, and is always open for use. A good library, the daily papers of the city, and conveniences for writing, are always open. Canton is in every sense a model union.

Green county union held a meeting at Osborn, April 12. The reports from local unions of work done, and being done, were very encouraging. Good papers on equal suffrage and prohibition were read, and followed by interesting discussion. The state president, Mrs. Monroe, was present, and did much by her timely remarks and suggestions to lend interest and help. The day was beautiful, and an inspiring audience was present throughout the meeting. The delegates returned to their homes feeling that they had had a profitable convention, and much enthusiasm for renewed work was kindled. Osborn is a place of historic interest to the W. C. T. U., having the honor of having the first W. C. T. U. in the world organized there by Mother Stewart, December 1, 1873.

Athens union has sent one hundred dollars to the Temple. Under the direction of Miss Augusta Morse, jail and evangelistic work have been systematically carried on for two years past. They will soon have Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, National superintendent, give an address on physical culture.

Mrs. Willis Boughton, wife of the professor of English literature in the Ohio University, is president of the Y. W. C. T. U., organized four years ago by Miss Jessica Morgan. It has ever since carried with it the spirit of her faith and enthusiasm. There are upwards of seventy active and thirty honorary members, many of whom are college students. Three professors and the instructor in German are among these. Parlor meetings have been one of the special lines of work. These have been largely the means of the steady growth of the union. A drinking fountain is about to be erected on the public square by these loyal Y's.

At the late convention of the Hamilton county union, a most interesting account was given of the work among the colored people of Walnut Hills by that union. Lockland now has a junior Y. Rev. Peter LeClar, of Cincinnati, read an excellent paper on "What shall we do with the liquor traffic?" Mrs. Mygatt gave "Experiences of a worker." The president gave her semi-annual address. They resolved to make early preparations by prayer and plans to celebrate the 21st anniversary of the Crusade, next December.

NOTES.

Flint union has a dear white-ribboner now past one hundred years of age, probably the oldest in Ohio.

Marlboro held a very successful Neal Dow celebration, after which their people were much better informed as to the good results of Prohibition than ever before.

Finley chapel union, Union county, held an interesting Neal Dow celebration continuing all day and evening. They had an excellent program, a full house at each meeting, and one man present stated that he would not have missed it for ten dollars.

Van Wert union is about to take from the infirmary and give a business education, a young man who had his arm crushed by an accident, while working in a stone quarry. He is a worthy and friendless boy.

Mrs. Rev. Faris Brown, president of Muskingum county union, visited five of her local unions, giving addresses on social purity. She will soon visit the other unions of the county. At each place a package of literature was left for special distribution. Ten dollars for this purpose had been contributed by a few good women.

Ripley union is one of our most persistent, meeting once a week no matter what the discouragements. Their flower mission work is an example for all to follow. Last fall by a very enjoyable chrysanthemum sale (the flowers raised by the members of the L. T. L.) a sum was raised that at Christmas tide brought joy to many families. The L. T. L's sent an orange to each inmate of the Children's Home, fifty little ones. The W. C. T. U. also sent Christmas remembrances to the inmates of the infirmary. They strive to keep in touch with the Master by ministering "to the least of one of these."

Bethel Chapel union consists of thirty women scattered over a territory of six miles. Scientific temperance is taught in all their schools. Literature is freely distributed, a parlor meeting was of much interest; a great amount of missionary or flower mission work is done.

Milford Center reports union temperance meetings held in their churches one Sunday evening in each month the past winter. They had felt quite encouraged about their work until the spring election was held, when the voters showed their appreciation of these efforts by electing their two saloon-keepers members of the council. The union is now looking for woman's enfranchisement with renewed earnestness, as the only hope of Prohibition.

FLORIDA.

ELEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING.

Kissimmee, cosily nestled on the shore of her beautiful lake, gave royal welcome to the gathered clans.

Thinking of the financial stress so keenly felt throughout our land, we had scarcely dared hope for an average attendance, but when all were there and "noses counted" we found more unions were represented by a larger number of delegates than usual. So we "thanked God and took courage."

The meetings of the first day being of an informal character, the real opening of convention did not occur until the evening. Mrs. E. A. Hill, president, called the meeting to order. After usual devotional exercises and music the addresses of welcome were given. Hon. E. D. Beggs, mayor of Kissimmee, on behalf of the citizens; Mrs. Kate A. Lewis, president, on behalf of local union. The response was rendered by Mrs. Alice C. Brown, of Fort Reed. These were all pronounced of unusually high order, gems of thought.

The president's annual address was in perfect touch with all advanced ideas of the times, and was delivered in a clear voice. It was listened to appreciatively.

The first hour of every morning session was a prayer and praise service, bringing benediction upon all the business of the day. "That blessed convention," writes a sister, "its blessed influence will follow me through the year."

The usual memorial service was substituted by one of praise, conducted by our evangelist, who sounded a clarion note of rejoicing for the "dead who had died in the Lord." Are they not blessed, even more than we?

The report of corresponding secretary, Mrs. M. E. L. Herrick, was lengthy but not tedious, showing an encouraging increase numerically; seven new unions reported. We regret that so faithful and efficient an officer is unable to serve longer, for she goes North to rest. The treasurer's report showed a small balance on the right side.

Elizabeth Springer Oliver, organizer and evangelist, delivered an address one evening, her subject, "The Bible in Temperance." Other interesting features were a stirring paper by Mrs. N. E. Arnold, upon unfermented wine and a spirited address upon elective franchise for women by Mrs. Mary V. Miller, late of Baxter Springs, Kansas.

In convention among our new members we found a number who had recently come into the state. It was encouraging to see they had not laid the armor down but were going right along in the work.

An important paper carried to convention to be read was crowded out. I refer to the one noticed in your columns some weeks ago, written by Lillian S. Wells, of Tampa, and read, by request, before the association of Congregational ministers convened there. A W. C. T U. sister has had this excellent paper published in pamphlet form, to be sold for the benefit of the local work.

In the absence of a National speaker, as we usually have some one during convention, Mrs. Hill marshalled the presidents of unions, or their substitutes, for a five minutes' talk each. The talent displayed was truly surprising, and augured well for the future annual meetings of Florida's W. C. T. U.

It was decided, after full discussion, that Florida should invite a speaker on suffrage for the coming year.

A gratifying amount of work was accomplished in our four days' meeting. Three new departments were added, and new courage inspired, as the fruits have shown since.

The closing evening was given to the Y's of Kissimmee, a noble band. Miss Maggie Lewis presided gracefully. The feature of the evening was a spirited Demorest medal contest between six young ladies, resulting in the winning of the gold medal by Miss Oliver of the city. The music was exceptionally good, furnished by home talent.

Kissimmee has a vigorous L. T. L., which marched into convention one afternoon with flying colors, singing "Saloons, saloons, saloons must go," just as though they meant to help them go.

Neal Dow Day was observed by a number of unions in public meetings. Florida, in convention, voted to have sent a letter of greeting and a box of orange blossoms to this staunch friend and father of prohibition, on his ninetieth birthday.

Pensacola union met with much determined opposition in attempting to commemorate the day. Letters opposing their plan were openly published in the daily papers. The president of the local union promptly and effectually answered them every one. In spite of it all the meeting was held in the Y. M. C. A. rooms which were handsomely decorated, and much enthusiasm was manifested. Several gentlemen were converted to prohibition principles, among them the husband of the president. The right is bound to triumph.

Miss Muirhead, president of Pasadena Y's, writes that they gave a strawberry festival this spring, also an appropriate Dow memorial entertainment of literary character, the reading of an original temperance poem written by the president, being not the least of the evening's attractions. The proceeds were given toward a union church building—the district affording no house for worship. This band of young girls, rather isolated as they are, deserve commendation for their pluck and perseverance.

News comes of a union organized at Sarasota since convention. Also of a Y at Melbourne, on the Indian River.

During the late convention of Christian Endeavor in Tampa, an excellent paper upon the W. C. T. U. work was read by Miss Susie M. Frank, one of the Y's of Kissimmee.

Mrs. E. A. Hill writes concerning Somerset Park: "A few white-ribboners went out to the grounds and planted some century plants, resolving to begin a new century with faith and patience to wait." Hoping and believing that "All things will come to him who waits."

NEW JERSEY.

"REDEEMED."

Because of my long silence, is not a proof that work has not been done in my state, but rather that there has been so much to do, there has been no time to make a record, therefore I ask pardon of those who in the weeks gone by have sent me jottings, wherein I fail to represent them in these columns—for to do so now, would be such stale news—for each day's duties have been so full of complications, hopes and fears, alternating, that it has been impossible for me to do more than use each moment as it passed, then take up another that was passing, not stopping to question, but trying to "sow beside all waters."

Our work is not lagging but progressing, public sentiment is aroused as never before, license has had a setback in many places. Seed is being sown everywhere, and bearing good fruit already in places not looked for. The "winter of our discontent is over," we hope. Now that mills and factories so long shut down, greet us with the busy hum of work resumed, we take heart of hope that our finances, which suffered with the general depression all over the country, may soon receive the benefit of the revival of trade, and the lessons taught in the midst of suffering by our working brothers may be lessons remembered, that will help them to refrain from that which intoxicates, and thus by a reflex influence strengthen our cause.

Long before this sees the light in your columns you will have announced that New Jersey has been "redeemed" as Mrs. Hunt says, and is no longer among the states not compelling scientific temperance teaching in public schools—but a short resumé of how it was brought about may not be amiss.

The complexion of our legislature having changed from the year previous, the outlook seemed favorable, and Mrs. Hunt, National superintendent, called representative people to a conference in Newark, and after several meetings it was decided to push the work.

The arrangement of lectures for Mrs. Hunt and sending out petitions was our especial part of the work, and right royally did Mrs. Swan Brown, state superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, attend to the former, and Mrs. J. T. Ellis, our corresponding secretary, the latter.

The opening day of the one hundred and eighteenth session of the legislature saw Mrs. Mary Hunt and Mrs. Bourne, state president, at the state capitol, amid the surging crowd, surveying the field and taking their bearings—but lo! a stone wall met them! "A deadlock in the senate!" And thus for weeks it continued, but though trying and extremely crucifying to the flesh at the time, yet now we can see God's hand in it, for while the fight continued, petitioning, interviewing, correspondence from constituents kept piling up until, when the three months had passed and the final vote was taken, it was a surprise to the most sanguine. Only one opposing voice and vote against its passage in the house of assembly, and in the senate every senator answered "yea" to the roll call.

The following day, April 24, Governor Werts signed the bill, and thus gave to us a law which Mrs. Hunt says is "one of the best, with scarcely a weak point." Thus after nine years of sowing and working we reap a victory! In the afternoon of the same day in the governor's reception room a number of senators, assemblymen and a large sprinkling of our women stood by Mrs. Hunt while she directed the ceremony of taking off the black patch from New Jersey.

Senator Stokes, of Cumberland county, who championed the bill in the senate, cut the upper half, while Assemblyman Wilbur, who introduced the bill, and also spoke eloquently for its passage in the house, cut the remaining half, thus giving us a white place upon that illustrious map of scientific temperance instruction. Each of these gentlemen claimed a souvenir, Senator Stokes the scissors, which he purposes to have engraved and presented to the W. C. T. U. of his town, Millville. Dr. Wilbur claimed the black patch which so long has been a disgrace to us, and lastly, but not least, the governor presented the pen with which he signed the bill to Mrs. Hunt for her National collection. And we women, what did we claim? Thankfulness that we were permitted to work for Him who all the way had led us to such a blessed victory!

Now, who helped God's plans to be carried out? First came the thought from Mrs. Mary Hunt, who is constantly on the alert; then a ready response from the Presbyterian synodical committee on temperance and our own state president, for her six thousand constituents; then the Methodist clergymen and laymen; then the Baptist and Congregational churches; then the Christian Endeavorers; the Epworth Leagues; the Young Men's Christian Association, all in the work of correspondence and circulating petitions.

Who signed these petitions? Pastors and officiary for their churches, everywhere; mayors and council in a number of cities; school boards in cities and towns; in one city forty-three physicians and a number in others; seven college professors in one town, while Christian Endeavorers were to be found everywhere. Synodical, presbyterial and conference bodies appointed committees to urge its passage, until I can truthfully say no one bill during this session had so many petitions, letters and indorsements to give it force as this one.

Another element which contributed to success was the numerous letters from constituents, the memorials from conferences, and the interviewing by prominent laymen as well as ministers upon the floor of the house, as well as before the education committee, did much to down the opposition—for opposition there was at first—and for a time the cause hung in the balance. These all helped with God to bring about the result.

Who voted for it! Republicans, of course; but its only dissenting voice was a Republican, while every Democrat in house and senate voted for its passage, but whether from principle or policy I do not know. Nor do I care. Neither do I question the motive of its most eloquent advocate in the senate. (I only know he is not a total abstainer.) God can make the wrath of man to praise Him, and success is ours!

Neither do we care that the mildness of the measure in reference to total abstinence, which caused the Governor when he had signed the bill to say, "it certainly would not do harm," may have been why the party in power, and committed to reform, thought it "wise to pass it," though in the beginning they fought exceedingly shy. We only know it is a law, and our women will see that it is properly enforced.

Another factor which helped to success was the attitude of the state superintendent of public instruction, A. B. Poland. With his assistance Mrs. Hunt was able to frame a bill in accord with our school laws. From the first to last he has been Mrs. Hunt's ardent supporter, and will endeavor, so far as he has power, to see that its provisions do not become a dead letter.

Another element was the inspiring lectures of Mrs. Hunt while the cause seemed to be hanging fire; these lectures set the people to thinking and working, and results showed an avalanche of letters to their representatives that, "for very peace sake they demanded the vote." But not alone in the lecture field did Mrs. Hunt contribute to success. A woman with less endurance, patience, persuasiveness of manner, tact, indomitable will and exhaustive knowledge of the subject would not have been equal to the strange emergencies which so often (and did in this instance) arise in the political atmosphere; but at every point she met the enemy and they became hers!

Then the painstaking of the Trenton union, who personally received, sorted and made ready for presentation, the thousands of petitions; and who, day after day, took their turn in interviewing and requesting the different members to present their cause and vote for it when presented to their body; then silently watched the tiresome sessions to see that their requests were carried out. These all helped to carry out the plan so well mapped out. What I say of Trenton union, so far as in them lay, I say of all our women—they responded to every call whether pleasant or not. To them all our success is due, for in carrying out a campaign, the rank and file are just as essential as good generalship; one cannot do without the other.

Last, but not the least, was the constant response of our state president to every call from Mrs. Hunt; the carrying out of every command so far as possible. From January until 24th day of April she gave her undivided attention to this one work, and thus supplemented Mrs. Hunt as faithfully as it was in the power of another to do.

But over and above all was God, watching and helping His own! Blessing us far above we even dared to hope, and to Him we give thanks; for with His own right arm hath He gotten the victory! To Him we give thanks, that our children will bless us when we are resting from our labors, and they are the workers.

NEW YORK NEWS.

Just at present white-ribboners are working with a will on the petitions for the "Full enfranchisement of women," and the "Prohibition of the liquor traffic," to be presented to the constitutional convention in May. A fine meeting was held in Oswego in which prominent white ribbon workers took part, the county president, Mrs. S. M. Barker, making all local arrangements. Mrs. G. M. Gardenier, our state recording secretary, led in a discussion on "Why business women desire the ballot." Various phases of the question of equal suffrage were discussed.

Mrs. Mary J. Weaver has been holding successful evangelistic meetings in Fulton, Oswego county. Several new unions have been reported of late and the organizing work is going steadily forward.

Mrs. E. N. Burgess has given five lectures in the interest of peace and arbitration and two on general temperance topics, in Madison county. At Canastota a large audience greeted her. This county is preparing for its first gold medal contest. Franchise work is being pushed and the general outlook is good.

I am very glad to report some of the work done in Rochester, Monroe county, where seven unions flourish. These are called by the wards in which they are located. All are in good condition, the largest having one hundred and thirty members. They unite in a central organization for general city work. A board of managers, consisting of three representatives from each ward union has charge of the work, and they have now under their supervision a mission Sunday-school, comprised of poor and neglected children, and a rescue mission, which is reaching the fallen and degraded. The meetings are largely attended. Five unions conduct L. T. L's, all of which are in charge of a special teacher who is engaged by the board of managers, and is under their general direction, they bearing half the expense. The board calls a "rally" of all the unions once a quarter at central headquarters, when reports are given of local and general work. A canvass for funds is being made this winter instead of serving a "big dinner" for that purpose as has been done other years, and the prospects are that more will be secured in this way. Each union takes up the usual lines of work, and the rescue mission has for its superintendent, Mrs. L. A. Bosworth, who is present every evening in the week and also on Sunday afternoon. This she does in addition to the prison and jail work for city and county.

present and delivered a lecture in the evening. Reports were heard and all were satisfactory. My correspondent closes by saying, "now we are going to bend all our efforts in the direction of suffrage work."

Tompkins county held its semi-annual convention at McLean, with forty-four delegates present. Mrs. P. J. Adams, state organizer and evangelist, was with them and gave valuable aid. Encouraging reports were listened to. A "model mothers' meeting" was a pleasing feature of the convention. The evening address was delivered by Miss Barbara Buchanan, of Sage College, a native of Natal, South Africa, and the daughter of missionary parents. The pastor of the church where the convention was held, indorsed the work of the W. C. T. U. in strong words, bidding them Godspeed.

The Clara M. Selkreg union at Ithaca, will entertain the annual convention. This union is settled in pleasant headquarters, and has organized a Y and an L. T. L. Active department work is carried on and the superintendent of literature keeps wall pockets filled in the railroad depots. They were obliged to close their coffee-house but the Salvation Army has assumed control of it for the present, and good results are looked for.

Livingston county W. C. T. U. met at Mt. Morris, and pronounced it the best meeting ever held. No regular reports were given but two-minute speeches from the local presidents brought to the front the subjects most at heart, and furnished food for thought and action. The children's hour was one of rare interest. Another hour was given to evangelistic work and was especially helpful.

Several papers were read, all of them prepared by workers who had never before been called out in county work. Mrs. Van Benschoten gave a splendid lecture in the evening.

Orange county reports a fine convention held at Newburgh. The program had been carefully prepared. A very taking feature was the "Ten Minutes with Notable Women." Miss E. U. Yates, who was present and addressed the convention, is a great favorite in Orange county. Every hour was filled, no time wasted. An hour was given to the L. T. L., delegates being present with reports. There will be an L. T. L. graduating class this year. Several unions are conducting free reading rooms, Newburgh carrying on the work extensively and with much success.

The eighth semi-annual convention of Chemung County was held at Pine Valley this spring. There was a large delegation present at the opening of the convention, and they continued to come until the church was filled. Greetings were extended in behalf of the churches of Pine Valley by Rev. J. M. Langworthy. He said: "For twenty-six years my people have not had to say, I do not know how my pastor stands on the temperance question." He referred to what the W. C. T. U. had been the means of accomplishing in scientific temperance instruction, and also spoke of the omens of hope in the decisions of courts.

The conference on franchise was pronounced the best the county has had. A paper on "Committed to a great Cause—the Temperance Cause," brought out points best suited to help the W. C. T. U. in its work.

Mrs. Helen Bullock called the attention of the parents to the pernicious practice of administering medicine containing alcohol. Fathers were advised to be good examples to their boys. The temperance people were urged to become acquainted with the school teachers of their children in the hope that they might better aid the thorough teaching of scientific temperance instruction in the schools. I would like to report all that was said, as every word spoken was an educator to the people.

Fulton county met at Gloversville. Five unions of the six in the county were represented. All felt sad over the loss of the county president, Mrs. Frances Bentley, whose death occurred a few months since, and a touching memorial service was held. Mrs. Calkins, of Indiana, was present and gave an address, and also a talk on parliamentary usage. The department of mercy received special attention, and a general discussion followed.

Warren county convention was held at Glens Falls, the guests of the Y's of that place. The attendance was large throughout and the interest deep, while a devotional spirit pervaded the entire delegation. Very interesting five-minute papers were read and discussed. A question-box was a helpful exercise, as it always is. A program was arranged for the evening, and was followed by an address by the pastor of the church, Rev. W. A. Stearns, on personal influence.

Niagara county met in Lockport with ninety-two delegates present. This was a most interesting meeting and the commodious M. E. church was filled at every session. A Bible reading on "Compensation," by the county president, Mrs. Ruth A. Frost, was especially appropriate and helpful, as were all the devotional exercises of the convention. Miss Henrietta G. Moore, of Ohio, was present day and evening, giving a fine address at the evening meeting. A superintendent's symposium with "Laying the Foundation" for its subject was most interesting, and a paper entitled, "The Significance of the Constitutional Convention to Women." An Indian girl was present and gave a bright paper on physical culture, following it up with an exhibition of the same. She was heartily applauded and obliged to respond to a recall.

Erie county met in Richmond Avenue M. E. church at Buffalo. This county always has so many good things crowded into a two days' convention that it is impossible to mention all. The devotional exercises throughout were particularly uplifting. A school of methods was conducted by the corresponding secretary, and a parliamentary drill by Mrs. Dietrick, of Lockport, who also gave a talk on narcotics. Several clergymen were present and gave greetings. Rev. Father Zurcher, the Catholic president of Buffalo Union Temperance Committee, was earnest and strong in his ringing words. An hour was given to the L. T. L. and several discussions were called out on leading questions.

The W. C. T. U. of Schuyler county has just held a most successful convention at Watkins. Every union in the county was represented and all report increasing interest. Flower mission, Sabbath observance and mothers' meetings have all received special attention. A new union was organized at the close of the convention.

Tioga county W. C. T. U. held its semi-annual convention at Apalachin, with larger attendance and greater enthusiam than ever before. A parliament on "How to have a good Convention" brought out valuable suggestions that were put into immediate use. "Temperance in Medical Science" was ably presented. "The White Ribbon" brought out the fact of the existence in Owego of a "ribbon committee," who carry extra badges to supply those whom they meet on the street without them. Here's a thought for us all.

Mrs. Helen L. Bullock gave glowing word pictures of the work done for erring girls in the Anchorage at Elmira, and her appeal for aid met a ready response in a collection and pledges of money and supplies from different unions. Miss S. E. Margetts made an earnest plea for temperance work among the young men and women. Mrs. E. A. Spring was to have spoken on "Woman's Ballot," but ill health prevented. An able paper on "The duty of a Christian man as a voter" was presented. A telegram was received from Rev. Emily C. Woodruff and Mrs. E. T. Holland, ex-presidents of this county W. C. T. U., both of whom are now pastors of Congregational churches, the former at Little Valley, N. Y., the latter at Napoli, N. Y.

Ontario county met at Shortsville. The representation was not so good as usual owing to the fact that there were several cases of small-pox in a small village on the outskirts of Shortsville, but all who did attend felt well repaid, and so far as I can learn, the contagion has not spread. Excellent papers were read and cheering words spoken. Mrs. Yan Benschoten delivered the evening address.

Wyoming county convention was held at Castile in spite of a severe storm. Good reports, good music and everything good, was the order of the day. Several fine papers were read. Rev. Henrietta G. Moore was present adding greatly to the interest of the occasion. Excellent resolutions were adopted, among them, one heartily endorsing the petitions for Prohibition and for the full enfranchisement of women as sent out by the W. C. T. U., and one of thankfulness for the returning health of our beloved state president, Mrs. Mary T. Burt.

Seneca county W. C. T. U. held a school of methods at Waterloo. Miss Davis gave a talk on franchise in the evening.

If all other meetings held in honor of our "Grand Old Man" were reported fully, THE UNION SIGNAL would have space for nothing else.

Dwight Post G. A. R. has offered their hall, rent and fuel free, to the Sodus W. C. T. U. for their meeting. This looks as though the G. A. R. recognized the need of our G. A. R. (Grand Army of Reform) and were making room for our onward march.

FRANCES W. GRAHAM,
State Reporter, Lockport.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

TEMPERANCE papers would be put to good use if sent to John E. Lightbown, 10 Stanley avenue, Ellsmere Road, Eccles, England.

ONE of Michigan's earnest workers, and an original Crusader, Mrs. D. M. Garner, of Davisburg, has been very ill during the winter and obliged to turn aside from her accustomed activities in temperance work.

A BOX of welcome wild violets directed to editors of THE UNION SIGNAL, is acknowledged with thanks and appreciation on the part of the recipients to the unknown but kindly donor.

THE graduating exercises of the Covington, Ky., L. T. L. were held in connection with the Dow day festivities. There were ten graduates, the first to receive diplomas in the Blue Grass state.

AN L. T. L., numbering nearly one hundred and constantly growing, is the care of the Williamsville, Ill., W. C. T. U. This union is active in many good works, literature, flower mission and press being the other leading departments.

THE date of Wisconsin W. C. T. U. state convention has been changed to June 5, 6, 7 and 8, a week earlier than previously announced. The gathering will be in the Presbyterian church at Portage.

WEST HARLEM W. C. T. U., of New York City, believes agitation to be one of the best means of promoting the temperance cause. Six public meetings have been held in the last year with Col. George G. Bain, Miss Greenwood, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes and others as speakers.

A CORRESPONDENT pertinently asks: "Would it not be advisable for the white-ribboners everywhere to express themselves unmistakably on the single standard for morals?" The Florida W. C. T. U. has sent a memorial to the United States Congress, voicing the sentiment of the organization for the same purity in men as in women, and for a clean body of legislators.

THE Central union of Portland, Ore., recently reported as dead because it ceased to hold its usual meetings in the usual place for certain business reasons, was not even a case of "suspended animation," for vigorous efforts are being made in certain directions. Mothers' meetings are taking place in different parlors, thereby attracting attention in different circles; the special superintendent is meeting a group of mothers weekly at the North End Mission. On behalf of the union, (which supplies him with literature) Mr. Fletcher, an ex-sailor himself, does a grand work among sailors. The great bulk of the Refuge Home is carried on by the Central union. Every Sunday a gospel meeting is held there by the evangelistic superintendent. The same work is done at the jail.

A VALUABLE postal card designed for mailing to railway train men is sent out by Mrs. Charlotte Pittee, Michigan's superintendent of railroad work. It is headed "Greeting to the Railway Men from Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Michigan." Then follows this earnest appeal: "The white-ribboners, with their peaceful emblem, welcome to their ensign the R. R. T. A., with its white button, and unite with them in entreating you to join efforts for the best good of the greatest number. That intoxicants, more than all else degrade labor, destroy capital, break up the home, and ruin the soul, all thoroughly candid men must admit. To stem this flood of evil, we beg you to put your good wishes for our cause into execution, by your signature to the following resolution. When given a position on the road, you accepted, and then no matter how dark, and stormy, and cold the night, when called, you went—you got on board. Decision was needed, and is now, at the turn of the Y. Which way is your run? We pray that it may never be through the barren lowlands of infidelity, but up grade into the pure, sweet air of 'God and Home and Native Land.'" Beneath are Scriptural texts and the pledge, with spaces for address and signature, the whole forming a suggestive idea for other workers in this important department.

Publisher's Notes.

A COURAGEOUS WOMAN.

Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the brave woman who, in the face of the stringent times, has started out to raise the funds to finish paying for the beautiful Temperance Temple, is now in our state. Her plan is not to apply to the unions for assistance, but to the men and women who, of their abundance, can give to such a noble cause. She is meeting with success in our state, and it is to be hoped, before she returns to Chicago, the debt on the building she has labored so arduously for will be greatly decreased.—Pacific Ensign.

Part II of the White Ribbon Portfolio, has a fine, full-length picture of Mrs. Carse, well named "the brave woman."

CONVENTION TIME.

The season of conventions is at hand. Have you a full supply of the "White Ribbon Hymnal"? Think the matter over and order in advance. The songs from this unexcelled collection will be an inspiration to every white-ribboner, and help make your meetings a success.

Price only 35 cents.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

Goes regularly to Hot Springs for GOUT, RHEUMATIC GOUT, RHEUMATISM.—How this Water is valued there in BRIGHT'S DISEASE OF THE KIDNEYS and STONE OF THE BLADDER.

Dr. Algernon S. Garnet,
Surgeon (retired) U. S. Navy, Resident Physician, Hot Springs, Ark., says:

"My experience in the use of BUFFALO LITHIA WATER is limited to the treatment of Gout, Rheumatism and that hybrid disease, "Rheumatic Gout" (so-called), which is in contradistinction to the Rheumatoid Arthritis of Garrod. I have had excellent results from this Water in these affections, both in my own person and in the treatment of patients for whom I have prescribed it. Of course the remedial agent is its contained Alkalies and their solvent properties. Hence it is a prophylactic as well as a remedy in Nephritic Colic and forming Calculi, when due to a redundancy of Lithic Acid."

Dr. Wm. B. Towles,
Professor of Anatomy and Materia Medica in the Medical Department of the University of Virginia, former Resident Physician, Hot Springs, Va., says:

"I feel no hesitancy whatever in saying that in Gout, Rheumatic Gout, Rheumatism, Stone in the Bladder, and in all Diseases of Uric Acid Diathesis, I know of no remedy at all comparable to BUFFALO LITHIA WATER "Its effects are marked in causing a disappearance of Albumen from the urine. In a single case of Bright's Disease of the kidneys I witnessed decided beneficial results from its use, and from its action in this case I should have great confidence in it as a remedy in certain stages of this disease."

The late Dr. Wm. F. Carrington,
Resident Physician, Hot Springs, Ark., Surgeon (retired) U. S. Navy, says:

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER has signally demonstrated its remedial power in Gout, Rheumatic Gout, Rheumatism, Uric Acid, Gravel and other maladies dependent upon the Uric Acid Diathesis. It not only eliminates from the blood the deleterious agent before it crystalizes, but dissolves it in the form of Calculi, at least to a size that renders its passage along its ureters and urethra comparatively easy. Send twenty cases No. 2."

Dr. T. B. Buchanan,
Resident Physician, Hot Springs, Arkansas, says: "Send me five cases of BUFFALO LITHIA WATER I have made use of this Water for Gout in my own person and prescribed it for patients similarly suffering, with the most decided beneficial results. I take great pleasure in advising Gouty patients to these Springs.

This water is for sale by druggists generally, or in cases of one dozen half gallon bottles $5.00 f.o.b. at the Springs. Descriptive pamphlets sent to any address.

THOMAS F. GOODE, Proprietor,
Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.
Springs open June 15th.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

Miss Willard expects to sail for America June 13.

Miss Carrie Lee Carter, National organizer, writes of the acquisition to our ranks of an evangelist, Mrs. L. M. Woosley, of Coneyville, Ky., under whose ministrations a large number of souls have been led to Christ at Dexter, Mo. Mrs. Woosley is an ordained minister of the Cumberland Presbyterian church.

A call for blanks for the Polyglot Petition comes from Miss Cecele Grant, Terry, Miss., with the word, "We have had but one meeting of our union, having been just organized by Miss Kearney. I have been appointed to take charge of the petition work and we are all encouraged to persevere."

The Georgia union No. 2, sends encouraging words. The corresponding secretary, Mrs. M. A. McCurdy, is full of faith and confidently looks forward to the day when Rome, the city of her home, will be freed from the liquor traffic, the action of the city council in reducing the license fee from one thousand to eight hundred dollars, having greatly aroused Christian men and women.

Mrs. Louise M. Thomson, of Bloomington, Ind., is obedient to the command "Strengthen ye the weak hands and confirm the feeble knees." The words are as "apples of silver in pictures of gold." She writes: "As county president it is my duty to organize unions and upbuild the work. Letters to various points failing to bring replies, I was obedient to the command "go," which was clearly heard; and I truly realize that the Lord ordered my every step. Ministers received me kindly, while hearts, homes, churches and pocketbooks opened to me. Oh, it is true that 'when He putteth forth His own sheep, He goeth before them.'"

Mrs. S. A. Thurston, corresponding secretary of Kansas W. C. T. U., writes that the state executive committee issued a call to unions for the observance of May 1st, the anniversary of the day when the prohibitory law of the state became effective. The Kansas State Temperance Union also issued a circular address. The two organizations were preparing for mass-meetings on that evening and it was expected that temperance sermons would be preached from most of the pulpits in Topeka on the last Sunday of the month, with a view of arousing sentiment that may be somewhat dormant. "We realize that the enemy never lags even in a prohibition state, and we realize further, that the enemy is fighting the suffrage amendment, thinking that its passage will help the cause of prohibition."

"Dinna ye hear the" ring? It comes from the West Philadelphia union, Mrs. Henrietta H. Forrest, president. The vice-president at large, Mrs. C. E. Moorehead, in reply to the letter of the National corresponding secretary on page 5 of THE UNION SIGNAL of May 3, writes: "Our union knows no depression in works or money. Our treasury was never so full. We have just sent twenty dollars to Kansas, paid our state dues for the year, entertained the county union for a day, setting it down three hundred strong to a regal dinner and sent in seventy-five dollars for state entertainment in October. In short, we give to every and all objects presented. We have had Mrs. Muir, of Allegheny, working in the railroad round houses and are conducting weekly prayer and Bible meetings in the station houses for the officers and employés, furnishing books and organs."

Miss Jennie Smith has been steadily at work since our last National Convention, April 27 being only the sixth night of rest since that date. Her labors have been abundantly blessed, many souls having been gathered into the kingdom. She asks: "Do not our women need to be aroused to the faithful wearing of the white ribbon? If all were alive to the great need of more earnest, consecrated work and could realize the weight of their unconscious influence they could not forget this important factor."

Will not each state W. C. T. U. follow the example of Texas, where a copy of the new scientific temperance law has been neatly framed and presented to each school in the city by the Dallas union. Miss Sweeney has lately organized a union of fifty members and a Loyal Temperance Legion of seventy members. Mrs. Stoddard's diligence, perseverance and ability are clearly outlined by her work at Will's Point, where after rendering valuable service in a medal contest, she delivered four consecutive lectures, held a model W. C. T. U. meeting and gave a parliamentary drill.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

Treasurer's Corner.

The reason the corner was empty last week was because the occupant was in Michigan a few days for W. C. T. U. work.

At St. Joseph, Mrs. Armstrong, president, seconded by her good husband and a faithful band of white-ribboners, had arranged for a meeting that filled the M. E. church. Singing was excellent. Good work is being done.

At Grand Haven a reception was tendered the Cornerer at Mrs. Dr. Cummings' beautiful home, and beside the white-ribboners about fifty other women called and several ministers, and strange to relate, a few politicians, including the mayor of the city, whom we were informed by one of the leading men was elected by the better element of both the old parties, which united to elect a respectable temperance man. They seemed proud of the record, too. They were all out for the evening lecture.

When the wanderer reached her room, tired and dusty, she found a beautiful box of carnations and roses, fresh and sweet, sent to her by Mrs. Hancock. Immediately the lonely, weary feeling fled, and a wonderfully homelike sensation came over the traveler.

Mrs. Orr, the president of the union, has a brave band of good women that coöperate with her in making W. C. T. U. work in Grand Haven a success. The next morning we had the privilege of speaking to the girls at Akely College. The building is beautiful and the management excellent.

At Alma the county convention was entertained by an earnest lot of women, not one of whom were members, as Alma had no union. We had the privilege of organizing a good W. C. T. U., with Mrs. Bruske (wife of the president of the college) as president, Mrs. Rev. Jones, secretary, and Mrs. Nelson, as treasurer. Mrs. Waterbury, an educated and refined woman, is the efficient county president, and was unanimously reëlected.

Here I was the guest of Mrs. Sharpe, at the beautiful sanitarium, where every courtesy was extended. A talk in the parlors upon suffrage drew out a lively discussion by several intelligent gentlemen, if it can be called a discussion where the talk is all on one side.

From here we went to Mrs. Benjamin's, fifth district convention, at Grand Rapids. Mrs. Benjamin is known as an expert parliamentarian, and her management of a convention is excellent. She has many bright, active women in her district, that coöperate with her in all her intelligent plans. She had every vote of the convention for reëlection. Mrs. McKee gave me a quiet room in her hospitable home, and a home it was indeed.

The convention was held in the hall of the Y. M. C. A., and the meetings were largely attended throughout.

At Ionia, a union meeting Sunday evening filled one of the large churches and two or three hundred went away for lack of room. Mrs. Helen M. Wilson, president, demonstrated that she knew how to advertise and work up a successful meeting. Rev. Dickey followed the speaker with a strong plea for equal suffrage which was received with favor by the large audience.

I am receiving responses to my query as to dollar dues and shall give them a place in the corner next week.

HELEN M. BARKER.

Organizers' Corner.

January, February and March, with the exception of a few weeks at home, I spent in Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi, lecturing, organizing and strengthening unions and Y's. In each state an effort is being made for better organization and more systematic work and the outlook is encouraging. Early in May I shall "set sail" for Florida. Unions in Alabama desiring my services on return trip please address me at Dexter, Mo.

For many years I suffered from catarrh of the head and throat, which destroyed my hearing, and for twenty-five years I was so deaf that I could not understand conversation at all. Could not hear a clock strike by holding my ear against it. I had tried every known remedy, and nothing had ever given me the slightest relief. Last summer I obtained Dr. Moore's treatment, and had not used it three weeks until my hearing began to improve, and has steadily improved ever since, and now I can hear common conversation across a room without difficulty; can hear a clock strike in an adjoining room, 30 feet away, with the door closed, and I think I am entirely cured and my hearing permanently restored. I urge all who are afflicted as I was, to obtain Dr. Moore's treatment.

"The Perfect Health Food."

ORIGINATED by the famous Dr. James C. Jackson, founder of America's leading Health Institution, over 30 years ago. It is a scientifically prepared and twice-cooked food containing all the nutritious properties of the unequaled Genesee Valley Winter Wheat in such form and proportion as to be quickly digested and thoroughly assimilated by the entire body. IT IS A REMARKABLE REMEDY for certain diseases, and if regularly and persistently used will not fail to remove DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION AND CONSTIPATION.

Granula should be eaten daily by children, as it builds up the tissues rapidly and clears the system of impurities. Granula is sold under a registered trade mark and manufactured solely by OUR HOME GRANULA MFG. CO., Box 100, Dansville, N. Y.

Publisher's Notes.

Read that charming booklet by Evangelist Charles N. Crittenton, "Around the World With Jesus," describing his trip in the Holy Land. You will also be thrilled with interest in that startling book, "The Traffic in Girls and Florence Crittenton Missions." by Charlton Edholm, superintendent press of the World's W. C. T. U., which has been most highly recommended by very many eminent Christian philanthropists, in testimonials much like the following:

CHARLTON EDHOLM:

MY DEAR FRIEND:—I have read with intense interest your thrilling story of the barbarities practiced upon our poor girls by brutal lust.

All honor to Charles N. Crittenton for coining pity for these wrecks of womanhood into practical relief!

Your book ought to go on the wings of the wind over the land.

Yours in Christ Jesus,
THEO. L. CUYLER.

Both books only $1.50.

CAMPAIGN ECHOES.

A well-printed book, neatly and strongly bound, is "Campaign Echoes." It is the autobiography of Mrs. Letitia Youmans, the pioneer of the white-ribbon movement in Canada. It is written by the request of the Provincial Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Ontario, with an introduction by Miss Frances E. Willard, indorsed by Lady Henry Somerset. Though an invalid, Mrs. Youmans has written an interesting history of her life, and the movement in which she was engaged. This substantial and entertaining volume is worthy of a wide circulation.—Boston Star.

Price $1.25.

THE CRUSADER IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Mother Stewart, our Crusade historian, has given us another volume of Crusade reminiscences, this time an account of her wonderful work in Great Britain. The book is interestingly written, containing descriptions of scenes and people which are in themselves of much interest, and is illustrated with engravings of some of the noted English temperance workers.—New England Home, Hartford, Conn.

A GREAT MOTHER

THE ABLY-WRITTEN AND DELIGHTFULLY INTERESTING BIOGRAPHY OF

has just issued from the press of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, and is a rare acquisition to our literature. It is more than a biography; it is a setting forth of her sublime and a record of her wise, pithy sayings, as well as of the incidents in which she put her philosophy to the test of practical experience.

It should be in the hands of each Mother

while, at the same time, so vivid is its portrayal and so interesting the facts recorded, each child will find it full of interest.

A few Pennies on the one hand—ruined garments on the other. That will be the result of your trying to save money by using poor, cheap washing-powders, instead of Pearline. Just consider. How much could you save in a year if you bought the cheapest and most worthless? And how far would it go toward paying for the things ruined in a single month? You can't save anything by buying cheap washing-powders. The way to save money in washing is to use what has been proved to be absolutely safe. That is Pearline. Millions use it.

A GREAT MOTHER.

We take great pleasure in announcing, through our "Publisher's Notes" that "A Great Mother" is at last ready to deliver to those who have been so eagerly watching for its advent. The work has been put through with the utmost possible expedition, but, owing to the fact that advance notices were published as soon as the first chapters went into type, it seems as if there had been some delay. The book is everything that we could hope in matter of binding and execution, while the charm of its pages need only be seen to be recognized. "It looks just like Madam Willard," was the comment which delighted our heart as the first copy was passed about for inspection. It will have editorial notice in a forthcoming issue of THE UNION SIGNAL; meantime, we bespeak your prompt orders, for this is undoubtedly the most valuable book for mothers which has been issued during the current year by any publishing house. The illustrations are beautiful, and the price such as to bring it within reach of all.

Do not delay in sending in your orders. Price $1.50.

We are especially fortunate in having been able to secure for our Bible Reading for May a sermon by Rev. F. B. Meyer, the popular London preacher, on the subject, "Spiritual." We are sure it must carry a deep blessing to unions and to each individual to whom it makes its way. Back numbers of these readings may be secured if your name is not upon the subscription list, but it is much better to have it there, and so receive as soon as published.

"Where could another organ be found, where such a large amount of matter is treated spiritually, intellectually, with the deepest convictions of the immensity and profoundness of the matter published, be issued once a week, for one dollar?"

Orders for the Quarterly Temperance Lesson for June 17 (prepared by Mrs. Helen G. Rice, National superintendent of Loyal Temperance work,) and issued as a supplement to The Young Crusader can be filled after May 1, i. e., orders for the supplement alone. The Young Crusader and supplement together will be ready May 21. The former arrangement is for the accommodation of state workers who wish to secure the lesson for early distribution among county and district superintendents, and it is hoped, will greatly facilitate the wide circulation of this most valuable aid to the teaching of the Word on temperance lines.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 829 Powers Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Signal Notes.

It is authoritatively stated that there are 5,453 Young Men's Christian Associations in the world with a membership of half a million.

Four tons of grapes have been gathered from a single California vine in one season. The land of horticultural prodigies ought to be able to furnish pure fruit juices in sufficient quantities and cheaply enough to supply the thirsty citizens of the rest of the world.

A lady of Philadelphia has bequeathed sixteen thousand dollars to religious and charitable organizations in that city; the remainder of the estate is to constitute a unique fund from which Philadelphia ladies in reduced circumstances can draw a pension of twelve dollars a month.

New inventions in military pharaphernalia all point to the coming of the reign of peace. A bullet proof coat is the latest production of a German tailor. In this he dressed and offered himself as a target for bullets. The missiles were imbedded in the material, which is some new resisting substance, whose composition is not yet divulged.

Christian Endeavorers are looking forward to their thirteenth international gathering at Cleveland, O., July 11 to 15, and are preparing extensive plans for its consummation. The committee of '94 in the beautiful forest city of Ohio, is determined that this shall be no less brilliant and satisfying than the previous conventions of this great young Christian host whose yearly gatherings are of world-wide import and stimulus.

The Good Templars of England celebrated their twenty-fifth anniversary this spring at Portsmouth, with a large attendance and delegations from Scotland, Wales, India and Australia. The year's work was reviewed; about ten thousand public gatherings have been held, petitions sent to Parliament, and the order has been represented in the great temperance demonstrations, the passing of the amended act prohibiting the liquor traffic among North Sea fishermen, and in the parish and district councils act against holding meetings in public houses.

Munich, which is renowned for its beer "industry," has a new organization worthy of note—an Association Against the Abuse of Alcoholic Drinks. Ecclesiastics, high military officers and professors are among the promotors who think "the consumption of beer ought to be restricted" because its use "undermines the resistibility of the body and the mental energy." The researches of this well-meaning body will soon demonstrate to them that something more than restriction against the abuse of alcoholic liquors is needed if their labors would avail.

A timely petition to the newspapers which is being industriously circulated in Arizona by the W. C. T. U. and other reform organizations, will meet the warm approval of Christian people in general. Here is the gist of it: "We approve of our papers in their energy and enterprise, but we believe the time has come for them to take a higher stand on the question of public morals. We deplore in them 'sensationalism,' not the exposure of crime. We deplore 'personalities,' not the public announcement of personal acts. We believe that it is a minority of your readers who demand sensational, personal or immoral details, rather than the clean statement of facts and truth. There is too often a minuteness of detail in the reports given of crime, wickedness and sensuality, which can gratify only prurient and vulgar curiosity, or awaken such curiosity in innocent and inexperienced minds. We feel that spreading broadcast vicious and debasing news in our homes and among our children, and the consequent knowledge and easy familiarity with crime in all its forms, has a tendency to lower the tone of thought among the best of our people, and to strengthen the worst instincts among the morally lower classes."

GOOD NEWS FOR ASTHMATICS.

We observe that the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa, is now in reach of sufferers from Asthma. As before announced, this new discovery is a positive cure for Asthma. You can make trial of the Kola Compound free, by addressing a postal card to the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, who are sending out large trial cases free by mail, to sufferers.

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

Philadelphia was the scene of the second biennial convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, last week, Mrs. Charlotte Emerson Brown presiding. Three hundred and fifty clubs are reported to have joined the federation, which is making its way into foreign lands.

THE opposition to Colonel Breckinridge's reëlection to and present prominence in Congress, as chairman of the sub-committee on deficiencies, has not weakened in the least. The protests received from his clientele by the Texas chairman of the general committee on appropriations shows the attitude of the men of the Lone Star state toward social purity and the resolutions of all large bodies of women, as well as the active resistance in Mr. Breckinridge's legislative district, indicate how thoroughly the womanhood of the country is aroused. The women will "carry the day" without a doubt.

IT must afford great comfort to such political economists as are not humanitarians to know that be the times hard or good, there is one business which never fluctuates —and that the all-powerful saloon. In Chicago there were seven thousand two hundred licensed saloons during the World's Fair season, but it was said, "Oh, a large part of them will fail and go out of business when the Fair is over." On the first day of May the new licenses for the current year were granted at the city hall and the number issued was six thousand seven hundred—but five hundred less than during the height of the Fair. Hard times have not affected the saloon—but the saloon has wonderfully affected the hard times.

THE annual meeting of the British Women's Temperance Association was held in London last week, and the last night, May 10, was fittingly devoted to a farewell meeting for Miss Willard. Only the cable message has reached us yet, but it is refreshing to see the convention reported by the International Press, and to realize that Miss Willard is strong enough to address a meeting. Antoinette Stirling sang and Canon Wilberforce and Sir Wilfrid Lawson spoke the eloquent words of appreciation and Godspeed. Miss Willard said that during her two years' visit in England she had observed nothing so gratifying as the power of English women to combine for a great cause. The dispatch adds: "The meeting throughout was very enthusiastic!"

THE past week witnessed a ceremony of much significance in the unveiling of the noble monument erected over the long neglected grave of Mary Washington in Fredericksburg, Va. For more than half a century the idea of building this monument has existed. It was first inaugurated as a private enterprise by a prominent merchant of New York city, Silas E. Burroughs, who was obliged to relinquish it because of financial reverses. Later it was considered by the state of Virginia and the Federal government, and after much discussion and procrastination was abandoned. Then it was that the pluck of the womanhood of the country asserted itself and in 1890 organized a Mary Washington Memorial Association with Mrs. Chief Justice Waite as president, and the work was begun in earnest. Orator Daniels' review of the enterprise was brief and telling. He said: "Men attempted it and left it half accomplished. Our noble women undertook it and it is done." The ceremony was witnessed by fifty thousand people, the special guests of honor being President Cleveland and Vice-president Stevenson, with the Cabinet and their wives and the Daughters of the Revolution. President Cleveland declared: "I believe that he who thinks it brave and manly to outgrow his care and devotion for his mother is 'fit for treason, stratagems and spoils' and should not be trusted." Since George Washington, the foremost figure in our nation's life, ever freely and proudly admitted, "All that I am I owe to my mother," it is not amiss for us to regard Mary, the mother of Washington, as one of the most potent characters in American history. It is a cause for rejoicing that this tardy recognition has been made to the honored mother of the "Father of our country," and that the ceremony was conducted with all the official dignity of our national government.

THE outcome of the liquor battle in South Carolina was certainly anticipated by no one. It is nothing more or less than total, absolute prohibition. First, the dispensary law was declared unconstitutional, and every one supposed that South Carolina was to have free whisky until the legislature should meet again. But two cases which have just been decided bring out the following results of the foregoing decision. The court states that the dispensary law has been declared unconstitutional in all points save the one which forbids the granting of licenses. The bill as a whole being unconstitutional, the clause repealing the previous liquor law is also unconstitutional, therefore it is still illegal to sell liquor without a license. But if no one can sell without a license, and there is no power in the state that has authority to grant a license, the liquor traffic is prohibited. This is an unexpected victory, and it remains with Prohibitionists to hold the fort that has fallen so easily into their hands.

NEARLY two years ago we issued a special memorial number of THE UNION SIGNAL in memory of Madam Willard, the sainted mother of our editor-in-chief. That number was in great demand and the extra supply was exhausted long before the orders could be filled. Miss Willard's protracted illness and her long absence from this country alone prevented the early appearance of the fascinating volume which only this week arrived from the hands of the binder and bears upon its beautiful cover the magnetic title, "A Great Mother." If the reader expects to find a mere biography in this book, he will be disappointed, for while its three hundred pages give a comprehensive sketch of the life of Madam Willard and her immediate family, they also most deftly and delicately set forth the inner motives and outward methods of consecrated motherhood. As Lady Henry Somerset so concisely puts it in her charming preface: "Whatever may be the immediate reception of this book, of one thing I feel assured, that its pages will be sought in future times by those who would trace the source of that mighty inspiration which has led to the significant and far-reaching organization of Christian womanhood, at the close of the nineteenth century, which the historian will be called on to explain." Aside from the exquisite analysis which the authors, Miss Willard and Mrs. Norton, have made of her great mother-heart, Madam Willard is frequently permitted to speak for herself in extracts from her journals and in well remembered sentences that fell so frequently from her lips. Here are two illustrations: "Motherhood is life's richest and most delicious romance, and sitting now in the sunshine calm and sweet (seventy-six years old) with all my precious ones upon the other side save the daughter who so faithfully cherishes me here, I thank God most that He ever said to me, 'Bring up this child for me in the love of humanity and the expectation of immortal life.'" "Don't put your child in a dark room and let it cry itself to sleep; it would be more motherly to hang it to the limb of a tree like an Indian baby, where it could see the light and feel the gentle motion of the breeze." It is of the highest gratification to our publishing house that this truly remarkable book has so beautiful and artistic a setting. Not only is the binding—a delicate silver gray—most appropriate to the age and character of the subject, but the clear type, heavy paper, excellent illustrations and methodical arrangement and beautiful setting of the chapters, each introduced with a choice illustration, bespeak the very best workmanship and editorial supervision. We congratulate Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, the editor, and the W. T. P. A., the publisher, as well as the gifted authors, upon the production of a book in every way worthy the noble character it delineates. It is a volume which will ever be in demand, and will sell as well a decade hence as now, but we are confident that every white-ribboner and consecrated mother who can possibly afford it will purchase a copy at once.

DO YOUR WORK EARLY.

BY SARAH KNOWLES BOLTON.

Beside my window in the early spring,
A robin built her nest and reared her young;
And every day the same sweet song she sung
Until her little ones had taken wing
To try their own bird living; everything
Was done before the summer roses hung
About our home, or purple clusters swung
Upon our vines at autumn's opening.
Do your work early in the day or year,
Be it a song to sing, or word to cheer,
Or house to build, or gift to bless the race;
Life may not reach its noon, or setting sun;
No one can do the work you leave undone,
For no one ever fills another's place.

AN IGNORANT OLD COUPLE.

BY MRS. GEORGE ARCHIBALD.

An ignorant old couple belongs to our church. I say "belongs," though the wife is dead and the husband will not stand in the house of God again. He will only wait a little longer in his humble home before the last summons shall call him to rest, peace, joy and reward. I can think just how the pair always looked on Sunday mornings as they walked up the aisle to the front seat. Long ago I used to smile as other young folks did, but I outgrew that, and when time brought the changes that put me among the matrons and set my first little girl by my side, I had a long Sunday afternoon talk with her on that first day when her observation led her to say: "Mamma, how funny that high old man in the front seat looks, and so does the fat woman with him."

The "high" old man was very tall. In the Sunday afternoon talk my little girl learned such truths about the occupants of the front seat as made her ever after regard them with childish reverence.

The ignorant old couple were not only an amusement to the young, but were, to a certain degree, an annoyance to those of our older auditors, who had æsthetic or prim tastes. There were several reasons for this. In the first place they were always late. And how they could be so promptly late was a matter of some speculation, for their tardiness was not of a haphazard kind. It always terminated at a regular time—just as the congregation had finished the first hymn. There was one notable exception to this—the morning when they reached their pew at the moment the pastor had finished reading the second hymn, when the organist began to play and the choir rose. On this occasion they walked decorously into their places and stood facing the singers, unconscious that every other body was sitting, for we rose through the first hymn in those days and sat during the second. This exposed the long, lank figure of Brother Harmon and the fat, shapeless form of his wife to the full view of those behind. And it seemed a long exposure to those made nervous by the protracted spectacle of such ill-fitting clothes, a glare of bandana handkerchief sticking from a coat-tail pocket, the only enlivening dash of color in the rusty black of their apparel.

Brother Harmon's boots squeaked. They could not have been the same boots for so many years. But it was the same squeak, which, by a transmigration, mysterious, but audibly proven, remained with us through successive eras of leather new and old.

Also, Brother Harmon "responded," and his "Amens," "Bless God" and "Yes, Yes," were not acceptable to all of us. His wife used to cry, too, when the pastor was particularly effective, not a correct tear or two, as is perfectly proper at times, but a shower and a sob of ridiculous proportions considering the inducements.

These things were so manifestly superfluous in a well-bred and mainly well-dressed congregation that they now and then were the cause of impatience. Indeed, a few hasty members had been known to say that such people ought to be compelled to rent a back seat.

But the ignorant old couple, unconscious that they were ever the object of scrutiny or the subject of remark, came and went, came and went. Often they brought with them a nondescript wagon-load of neighbors who filled up their own pew and spilled over into the next. These persons used to stand around awkwardly while Brother Harmon and his wife introduced them to the minister and to such of the other members as were too unlucky or too conscientious to escape. Few knew what to say at such times. It is strange how much grace it takes to make the average city-bred Christian so gracefully cordial as to put the country-bred at ease!

Late one summer afternoon when a recent rain had made atmosphere and roads perfect for riding, a father, a mother and two little girls went for a long promised drive up the mountain southwest of the city. From it, as the father had often told them, was got a magnificent view of miles of valley exquisitely beautiful as it lay—field, river, island, trees and houses peaceful in summer loveliness. As they rode slowly along loath to descend, suddenly a curve in the road brought them to an old house which had been painted red so long before that only a faint blushing memory of its past high color remained. Its bright green door, evidently a recent after-thought of appearance, opened into the best room off a low, rambling front veranda on which sat in big cushioned chairs our ignorant old couple. No wonder at this distance from church they were chronically late at the preaching service!

The father reined in his horse and called a greeting. The old man and woman came forward with pleased surprise and welcoming words and smiles. The children, much to their delight, were lifted out and went up the narrow, hard path in company with their elders, who thus, without premeditation became callers upon their odd acquaintances.

That was an hour of simple pleasure. It was refreshing to sit and to walk for an hour in the atmosphere of thankful, Christian content which "Brother and Sister Harmon" undoubtedly breathed daily. Their evident satisfaction as they told the number of their cows, showed how comfortably their unhandsome horses were housed, exhibited poultry, bees and trees and bushes of swelling fruits, was something to do one good. And no one seeing it all could doubt that these things and the small, neat house, furnished with obsolete furniture and adorned with abnormal pictures and bric-a-brac, represented to them the bounty of a good God to His children.

"It is strange," said one, talking it over afterward, "how the narrowest and remotest life seems to fit the needs of some natures. What would such hill-tops be if no one like the Harmons should settle on them, winning some return from their naturally unfruitful soil? And what would such people as the Harmons do if there were no cheap farms within the possibility of their possession? They would never be happy in the strife of towns, and they have no ability equal to big agricultural ventures. They find their satisfaction in hard work, small economies and petty acquisitions. Think of forty years devoted to the self-denying industry necessary to the modest success they have won! And yet they have enjoyed it as fully as greater people enjoy greater achievements."

"More fully I should say," responded another. "For great people have seldom so much thankful gratification in what they have done. They are more apt to look over a life of long endeavor and, realizing that it is almost over, fall into a state of pessimistic reflection. 'After all what does it all amount to,' they say."

"I suppose some would say that of Brother Harmon's life," said the first speaker. "They have toiled early and late to improve their small spot of earth and now they will soon be gone and what has come of it?"

"A peaceful, sweet existence has come of it," replied the other, "and there is the hill-top, which would have been less fertile with less faithful care, and there is their example of honest, Christian living which has perhaps had some influence in their neighborhood."

After that day the same quartette were once or twice again welcomed at the elevated farm and always to their betterment of mind and soul. And when one day it was told that Brother Harmon's wife had gone to heaven, they were regretful at thought of the little house without its old mistress, and sorrowful for the lonely old man.

It is death that directs our most interested thought to the life that is gone. And now that Mrs. Harmon's queer clothes would never appear before us any more, we began to say that she was, in spite of her absurd garments and superfluous emotion, a most excellent soul and that she really could not have been more than she had been under the circumstances.

"Perhaps," said one charitable sister, "we might have done no more in her place. She had no opportunities."

I wonder why we think people who have not our opportunities have none, unless they evidently have more. In time we came to learn that Brother and Sister Harmon had really had opportunities and had improved them.

We found that there was in their home a woman who had been with them from the age of ten. She had a crippled hand which had made it impossible for her to find at that age a home with any one else. Most people want to adopt children likely to be useful if they are not to be ornamental. But this waif was neither. So she had grown up in the shelter of Brother Harmon's house and was decently reared and not without some education, though the education had been mainly what the old couple could give her at home, because her crippled hand was so much an embarrassment to her that she rebelled about going to school. She was moderately bright, however, and Mrs. Harmon had boarded the school-teacher one winter for the instruction he would give to the girl. This arrangement was a help to the school-teacher, too who was a poor young man preparing for the ministry; too self-respectful to board without paying for it in some way, and grateful for a chance to earn it, he had done his best for the child Sarah. It was this young man who had come so far to assist in the funeral services. He was doing good, had a nice family and could hardly make the neighbors believe that he had once been the poorly-clad, struggling school-teacher.

The other children who had found refuge with the Harmon family had all been sent summer and winter to the district school until they were old enough to work and support themselves elsewhere. From first to last there were fourteen of them, and one, a girl, taken from the poor-house, grew up very pretty and married above her station. But it is pleasant to think that she never forgot her gratitude.

Many of these children grew up to be simple-hearted Christians, much like their protectors in frugality, industry and unsophisticated contentment. One became a cause of regret to them. He wandered into town and fell into some new ways that carried him into sin. But even he paused long enough in his wicked pleasure-seeking to gather with the rest of the old couple's children, and dropped sincere tears as the school-teacher clergyman talked of humble life well lived.

A washerwoman in the city lost a day's work to attend the funeral. And having no other way to go she walked up the long hill taking her two strong children with her. She said it was no harder than washing, and she never would have felt satisfied not to go. Mrs. Harmon had taken care of the two children two months, one summer, while the mother was sick.

There was another woman, too, whose child had been born at Mrs. Harmon's, there being no other private refuge for the mother. The child had died, and that was well for the child. It had been buried on the farm, and Mrs. Harmon had always kept the grave neat. The mother had not reformed, though she had often and often promised Mrs. Harmon to do better. And she had gone to the hill-top home and nursed her benefactor a week. She wept bitterly at the funeral.

All these things were learned, little by little, when it was too late to do Mrs. Harmon such honor as the approval of good deeds moves us to show the doer. And added to the list was another fact that showed steadfast perseverance in service—the fact of a Sunday-school carried on for twenty years in the country school-house on the hill-top. It might seem that Brother Harmon would not be an acceptable superintendent. But what he could do in this capacity, he did for a score of years, with his faithful wife as helper and teacher to the pupils.

After Mrs. Harmon's death Brother Harmon came to church as before, and with him came the girl with the crippled hand, who, somehow, had inherited a proud heart which made her deformity so bitter a trial that it was hard for her to be gentle because of it. I think the old man was surprised to get acquainted with all his brethren, in a way that all the years before he had neither dreamed of nor expected. But, someway, we came to feel exactly as if he were one of us from more than the point of view got from reading his name in the church directory. Perhaps there were not many, but I am certain there were some who wished they had always done as well in their own spheres as the "ignorant old couple" had in theirs. And when Brother Harmon took to crying in sermon time, something as his wife had been used to do, no one, so far as the writer is aware, objected to the spectacle.

And now he is on his death-bed. His pew is empty. His minister and several of the leading members have climbed the wintry hills to see him. He is still content. He is still thankful. But he misses "mother," and he thinks it is time he should go to her.

When he is gone our mental average may rise slightly. As for our spiritual average—what if it should rise, too, from the influence of the lives of an "ignorant old couple"?

IS INEBRIETY A DISEASE?

Some Personal Experiences.

BY T. D. CROTHERS, M. D.

In an experience of nearly a quarter of a century in the association, cure and treatment of inebriates many strange events have passed under my observation. Years ago the views of disease which I urged were sharply ridiculed and condemned. Clergymen and reformers were especially severe in their criticisms. A clergyman of much prominence, and a most excellent man, thought it his duty to warn his people of the danger of believing that inebriety was a disease and the bad influence of my preaching in this direction. Some years later this clergyman came a long distance to consult me regarding the inebriety of his son.

A reformer and lecturer, who was for many years a severe critic of my work and writings, became an inebriate and begged to be placed under my care. He recovered, but died from drink excess a year later. An increasing part of my daily work is consultation regarding the capacity and incapacity of inebriates and moderate users of spirits. Many years ago a lady consulted me respecting the marriage of her daughter to a young man of wealth, from a good family, who drank to excess. He had promised to abstain after marriage, and craved the privilege of using wine at the wedding, after which he would become a total abstainer. I advised against this marriage on these terms, and gave the mother a gloomy prediction of the future in such a case. A short time after the father of the young man consulted me in this same case, thinking that his son would recover by marriage. My advice against this was taken, and within a year this young man married into another family. He continued drinking, and died two years later in great wretchedness. His wife was left a comfortable fortune. The girl he wished to marry at first, whose mother had consulted me, married a clergyman, and a few years later was left a widow in destitute circumstances, with two children. Both families are severe in personal denunciations of my judgment, and believe that had the first marriage taken place this man would have become an abstainer, and, at least, his wife would at his death have been left comfortable,—the same old story of what would have happened, that rises up to distress many good persons.

In reality the best judgment of the time and place is all that should be expected, and in the larger number of cases this is the best wisdom and is followed by the best results. A W. C. T. U. society had gathered a sum of money to build a hall and reading-room, and a private banker, who was a drinking man, held the money on deposit. Some members objected to this and appealed to my judgment. I could only urge on general principles that this was perilous. When the society was ready to build it was found that this banker could only pay a small part of the money as his property was involved. Severe recriminations have followed, but the mistake was the failure to act on sound common sense principles.

In all these questions associated with inebriety there is a common sense view that must be the basis of all judgment. A man who has pursued a line of conduct for years and proposes to stop or change at once by the mere act of will power, and then urges that you have full confidence in his ability to do what he says he will, demands that which is opposed to common sense. The restoration of inebriates is a gospel of works; the reforms and revolutions we are all so anxious to help on are also a matter of works. The faith and confidence we expect others to have in our labors must be based on realities and works that will bear the tests of time. The theory that inebriety is a disease and curable, if it had been a mere opinion or guesswork, would long ago have been put aside. Reformatory efforts to build up a correct public sentiment regarding the evils of the use of spirits and other social perils, will never succeed unless founded on great principles and supported by laws of growth and evolution.

Two devoted women organized a W. C. T. U. in a New England village in opposition to the best and leading society. They gathered a few factory girls and began, conscious of their final triumph and the reality of their work. The criticisms and sneers and social ostracism of the first two years only paved the way for great popularity which came at last by works and solid realities that rose above all theory.

To the scientific man criticism and doubts, even to persecution, have no perils or discouragements. If the facts he urges are true they will only grow the stronger by opposition, and if they are not true, he will be the first to discover their error and put them aside. There can be no fears of true work, real facts, and common sense opinions. Criticisms and denials of the reality of any facts or work are very common and very cheap in the market. Anybody can indulge in them, but the men or women who can recognize the truth, and have the courage to urge and defend it, are the real workers of the ages. The many great questions concerning the drink problem, and its associate evils are unknown in the general world, and hence a wide difference of personal opinion must exist. Men and women who have made much study and observation of these topics, are the least assertive, and most tolerant and quick to welcome any new facts based on study and experience, while those who know least are the most dogmatic and positive. The theorist who describes inebriety and its causes with startling minuteness, and points out the exact remedies, and announces that specifics have been found, and is able to explain their action, is always the most ignorant, and literally has no real knowledge of what he is talking about. The person who knows all about these confusing questions is always the one to be avoided, while the real student, who possesses real knowledge, is so conscious of how little he knows compared with the unknown, that he states his facts modestly and as views that may change from a larger and more complete knowledge.

Every year's experience brings into greater prominence the necessity of accurate, sociological and scientific study of all these problems, and the means of prevention and cure. If the W. C. T. U. should through its large membership gather facts on the various disputed points, and put them in available form, it would be a recognized and valuable advance. If the burning reformers who are so anxious to help on the march of the race will become fact gleaners everywhere, they can do permanent work, the influence of which will be felt far down the coming years. This age wants facts not opinions or theories.

THE NUDE IN ART.

I.

BY ABBY FELTON.

"Nor hath God deigned to show himself elsewhere
More clearly than in human forms sublime;
Which, since they image Him, compel my love."

It is probable that every woman who has given any thought to the subject of art has sometimes wondered why the undraped female figure is so favorite a theme for brush and chisel. The various movements in Philadelphia and the cities, having for their object the exclusion of nude statues and paintings of nude figures from public exhibition, are doubtless known to all. A futile hope that the Columbian Exposition might be refined in this respect was cherished by many. If these movements have had some effect in the line of educating or modifying public opinion it is the most that has thus far been achieved.

Few people dote on being called "reformers," with a sneering accent, or crave the unenviable distinction of being termed "prudish," with a tone of superior sanctity. The Pharisees of nudity are forever falling back upon their cant about "human forms divine." Superior purity and superior appreciation of the sublimest work of God, the human form, are, with a modesty quite overwhelming, arrogated to themselves by those who sneer at all efforts aiming at the purification of our art. One is here reminded of the married couple who, together, were about to witness a drama. "Come, James," said the wife, "let's go; I don't believe they've got any clothes on!" "Wait," replied the pure-minded spouse, "let's see whether they have or not."

Thus Anthony Comstock's proscription of one of Han's Makart's pictures when it was first placed before the public "insured its popularity, in America, at least, for twenty years to come." This natural desire to be one's own critic has given rise to the dogma that the best way to fight an evil is not to fight it, but exalt the good. Certainly that is a charming way of excusing one's self from the performance of a disagreeable duty. But it may be doubted whether the evils which all admit must, in some way, be got rid of, can be annihilated without any disturbance of what might be called one's æsthetic morality.

Still one does shrink from proclaiming that one's æsthetic taste is not fully up to the standard erected by the all-powerful "four hundred," and that one dares to think for one's self on such subjects, for example, as the nude in art. It is ugly work to touch, even with a pair of symbolic tongs, the élite nuisances, no less than the mob vices, and each prefers that some other person should do it, and have the courage of our convictions for us!

Sacred history tells us that the first members of the human family were set adrift in their earthly paradise entirely innocent of drapery, and that they were accustomed to attend the "functions" of the society of their primeval day in "full dress." Nevertheless, Babylon, London, Paris, New York, and even Chicago—primeval as is its civilization—are all radically and, it is feared, irremediably different from the Garden of Eden.

At heart, assuredly, no one believes that "human forms sublime," which, as Michael Angelo so nobly reminds us, image God himself, have any sincerer appreciators than those who remember that God hath never yet unveiled himself to human gaze, and who reverently believe that, since those forms do image Him, they, too, should be kept sacred from the gaze of profanation. Whether the time will ever come when the "snowdrops" will be exhibited in rooms by themselves, and those rooms opened at separate hours to the different sexes, we have not the heart to prophesy.

A young lady once related to me an experience of hers during a trip abroad. The party included two young men, one of whom was almost a stranger to the girl, and an elderly man, who, with his wife, acted as guides to the company. This gentleman ushered them one day into a room in an art gallery, which was devoted to statuary, nearly all the figures of which were nude. Too late to retreat the gentleman perceived his mistake and the embarrassment which must inevitably come to his young friend. The young lady herself instantly perceived that she was the object of curious scrutiny on the part of the young men as well as that of her elder friend—a scrutiny which was perhaps felt rather than perceived, but which, however unconscious on the part of the younger men, was, she assured herself, no less certain. She was afterwards enthusiastically commended because she bore the ordeal so nobly and "unconsciously." Mrs. Grundy has written over the doors of all such galleries, "To the pure all things are pure." Nevertheless, when we get behind the scene, and a pure-minded girl discloses her inmost heart to us, she tells us how very gladly she would escape such an ordeal as this.

The most difficult subject of the artist's brush is the human form, and it is therefore the one which affords the greatest test of his artistic power. To have reached approximate perfection in this places the artist at once in the higher ranks. It is but natural, therefore, that every sculptor and painter should be eager and impatient to display his power in this direction. Ruskin says: "The highest art can do no more than to rightly represent the human form. This is the simple test of a perfect school that it can represent the human form so that it is impossible to conceive of its being better done." Wallace says: "The human form possesses the power of serving the imagination for the representation of moral and spiritual sentiments, beyond all other objects. The Creator himself has established relations between all parts of His system, and this is the real foundation of all the glorious life of high art—applying to the human form above all else. The shapes and scenes of the inanimate world are not fitted to be the vehicles of the fervid, deep, and impetuous emotions of the highest life of art; the human form and face only can supply them with a language." Hamerton says: "The decline of the study of the nude on a large scale is an evil which goes far beyond the extinction of a single branch of art—it weakens other branches also."

Nudity is not always indecency and those who would exclude exhibitions of it from the promiscuous public gaze appreciate well the distinction between what is pure and that which suggests impurity in the undraped figure. They reverently admit that the beauty of a perfect human form which enshrines purity and nobility of soul, is the highest beauty in nature. But they cannot forget the Scriptural injunction not to "cast pearls before swine."

"A British painter who was wont to exhibit, yearly, paintings of the nude on the walls of the Royal Academy, was harshly censured by his critics for his evident fondness for this theme. He responded by exhibiting the next year two pictures, one of which displayed an entirely nude figure of remarkable purity, and the other a female figure entirely draped with the exception of one eye. In the one eye of that figure he boldly and successfully suggested all that he had most carefully avoided in the nude figure."

A PREHISTORIC CRUSADE.

BY MARTHA G. DAVENPORT.

All honor to Christopher Columbus, who made known the new continent to the civilized world. Nevertheless the round tower of Newport testified to the explorations of the hardy Icelanders centuries before Columbus was born.

Without wishing to detract from the honors of Hillsboro, Ohio, the starting point of the great woman's temperance crusade, I desire to relate a similar previous movement, of which I was a witness and a part. Place, Mt. Pleasant, Iowa. Time, the winter of 1868-9.

A very interesting and successful women's union prayer-meeting had been in progress daily for ten weeks. The women had consecrated themselves to the Lord's service, and were exclaiming, "Here we are, thine handmaidens; what wilt thou have us do?" About this time the leader, Mrs. N. M. Powell, received a call from Elizabeth Dickey, who requested her to ask the prayers of the women in behalf of her drunken son. She had pleaded with him and prayed for him; she had visited the drug store where he obtained liquor, and entreated the druggist not to sell to him again. Mrs. Powell laid the case before the meeting, and most earnest were the prayers for the wayward boy and his troubled mother. (The young man afterward reformed.)

Talks upon the drink evil followed, and some one suggested that one meeting should be devoted to the subject of temperance. This being approved, notice was given in the papers, and on the appointed day a large congregation of women assembled in Asbury (Methodist) church. The result was the formation of the Women's Temperance League with a membership of over one hundred, and with Mrs. Powell for president. A committee, with the president as chairman, was appointed to visit the drug stores and saloons, and report results to the League at its regular meetings. Other members could accompany them if they so desired. The committee held their meetings in one of the church parlors, changing the hour from day to day, that the time of their visits might not be definitely known. After Scripture reading and prayer they went forth on their missions. The drug stores where whisky was sold were first visited, the beer saloons afterward. There the president and her supporters kindly but earnestly talked of the evils of drink, and entreated the men to quit selling and engage in some other pursuit. Sometimes there would be a prayer or a hymn, but the main exercises were the quiet, calm exhortation and the repetition of passages of Scripture bearing upon the subject. One druggist declared he only intended to sell for medical purposes, but was being constantly deceived and would quit it entirely.

At the drug stores the women were courteously treated, and the visitations were quiet and orderly; at the saloons they did not fare so well. There was one saloon in a back room of the Brazleton House (the leading hotel) called the "Hole in the Wall," from its being reached by a narrow passage from the front. On one occasion the proprietor, John McCormick, became very angry; raved, swore, knocked the glasses off the counter, breaking them on the floor, picked up an iron poker and declared if the women did not leave at once he would go through them "like an engine through a Yankee town"; but the women fearlessly stood their ground and were unhurt. He then struck the stove with the poker, breaking the top of it.

A number of shamefaced citizens stood by, unable to get out, as the passage was packed with women. Next day a rear door was cut that these customers might have a means of exit.

But McCormick told his wife he could not sleep after he had so abused the ladies. He quit the business, left town, and two years afterward wrote to Mrs. Powell that he had been converted, and dated the beginning of his change to the visits of the women. Another one closed out, went to Missouri, and sent word he had joined the church.

At this time I was a teacher in the High School and could attend the meetings only when held outside of school hours. Being the youngest member, and I believe the only girl, the women affectionately termed me "the Daughter of the League."

In addition to the work described, the women also held a series of evening public meetings, with music and lectures from the ministers and others of the town. Two members of the League, Mrs. Mary F. Beavers and myself, were appointed to prepare each an address for an evening meeting. It was the maiden effort for both of us. The W. C. T. U. has developed many lecturers, but at that day a woman speaker was more of a novelty. Mrs. Beavers' subject was "The Hyenas of Society." "The hyena, fierce, cruel, preys upon flocks. It will even open graves and feast upon their contents. The saloon-keeper," she said, "is the hyena of society, robbing the home of its treasures, and feasting upon the vices and the sorrows of his fellow-men." Mrs. Beavers is an evangelist of the Methodist church. She has been engaged in temperance and religious work all these years, and is now state evangelist and organizer of the W. C. T. U. of the state of Washington.

My night to speak came in the midst of a revival at Asbury church. Some of the members favored adjourning the meeting for the evening, but the majority objected, as there were enough people for two audiences. But those who belonged to the League did not desert their "daughter" in her hour of need, even for their church. Never shall I forget the joy and encouragement I felt on seeing those good Methodist sisters walk down the aisle of Saunders' Hall.

W. M. Treloar, now a professor of music in Mexico, Mo., then a youth attending school, sang a pathetic original song entitled "The Drunkard's Child." Professor Treloar has given great aid to the work by his temperance musical productions.

At that time fermented wine was generally used by the churches at the communion service. I had never heard a temperance lecturer protest against it, and felt I was doing a bold thing to do so. But the League women said I was right; and John P. Grantham, a prominent Good Templar, pushed the subject at Asbury, even declaring he could no longer partake of the service unless a change was made. The fermented wine was banished and the juice of the grape substituted. This is the first church I have knowledge of taking this step.

Dr. Ross, a lecturer from Illinois, was procured for a series of meetings extending over a week, the Good Templars bearing a large share of the expense, giving a literary and musical entertainment to raise the funds. The people came in crowds to these public meetings, and a great interest in the cause of temperance was awakened. All of the nine saloons closed. Then the committee visited the city council asking them to pass a prohibitory ordinance, that the work might be permanent, local option being the law at that time. The council replied they had not the power, but would submit the matter to a vote at the regular spring election.

The men said it never would carry; the women would be disappointed. But the League appointed committees for each ward, who visited the voters personally at their homes, soliciting their votes to protect the town hereafter from the saloon curse. Great interest prevailed. The election was the talk everywhere. The day came, and victory for prohibition was the result, by a majority of three hundred and twenty-one. Of fifty-seven colored voters, fifty-three voted for prohibition. The women felt their labors were rewarded and their prayers answered.

Saloons being banished, drinking clubs were formed to evade the law, but the "Temple of Honor" took in hand the work of routing them, and the women disbanded.

The meetings in all occupied nearly a year. Every Protestant church was represented on the crusade committee. The more prominent members, as I remember them, were Mesdames Powell, Guylee, Vernon, Tyner, Beavers, Hawkins, Hart, Spencer, Steadman, Atheron, Harvey, Smith, Stewart, White, Neen, McQuigan and Griffith (my mother).

Five years later, when the great Ohio Crusade swept over the land, these brave women again went forth to battle, not as raw recruits, but as experienced veterans. Though a quarter of a century has passed since the organization and work of the Woman's Temperance League and many of the dear women have passed from earth, a fond remembrance still holds the surviving members in bonds of friendship.

Along with the name of Mother Thompson, of Hillsboro, O., leader of the Crusade of 1873 and 1874, I would place that of the leader of the prehistoric Crusade of Mt. Pleasant, Ia.,—Mrs. Nancy M. Powell, who has recently been translated to her heavenly home. Mrs. Powell was a member of our local union while living in this city. At the time of her death she was a resident of Chicago. Her interest in temperance work never abated, though age and infirmity compelled less activity in later years. Her courage and strength of mind, united with a sweet, gentle disposition, made her a beloved leader and a beautiful character.

FIRST RESULT OF THE MAINE LAW IN ENGLAND.

BY J. H. RAPER.

When the Maine Law was passed in America, Mr. Dow had direct correspondence with Mr. Nathaniel Card, of Manchester. This true philanthropist, a member of the Society of Friends, carried the tidings which he received, from one gathering of temperance workers to another, and in his own simple way he told of the great aid to the reformation that the new law was rendering amongst the people of Maine, and how its palpable benefits were rousing the citizens of the United States. Mr. Card got a committee of Manchester and Salford leading temperance men to consider what could be done in the same direction in Great Britain. The result of their consultations was the formation of the United Kingdom Alliance for the Legislative Suppression of the Liquor Traffic. As this great citizen-organization is so direct an outcome of the labors of Mr. Dow and the Prohibitionists of Maine, I give you the statement of its platform:

The United Kingdom Alliance is an association of temperance and social reformers, and was formed in Manchester on the 1st of June, 1853.

At the first meeting of the general council, held in Manchester, in October, 1853, when the society was publicly inaugurated, the following declaration was unanimously adopted as a basis for the agitation and as indicating the character and scope of the movement:

1. That it is neither right nor politic for the state to afford legal protection and sanction to any traffic or system that tends to increase crime, to waste the national resources, to corrupt the social habits, and to destroy the health and lives of the people.

2. That the traffic in intoxicating liquors, as common beverages, is inimical to the true interests of individuals, and destructive to the order and welfare of society, and ought, therefore, to be prohibited.

3. That the history and results of all past legislation in regard to the liquor traffic abundantly prove that it is impossible, satisfactorily, to limit or regulate a system so essentially mischievous in its tendencies.

4. That no considerations of private gain or public revenue can justify the upholding of a system so utterly wrong in principle, suicidal in policy, and disastrous in results, as the traffic in intoxicating liquors.

5. That the legislative prohibition of the liquor traffic is perfectly compatible with national liberty, and with all the claims of justice and legitimate commerce.

6. That the legislative suppression of the liquor traffic would be highly conducive to the development of a progressive civilization.

7. That, rising above class, sectarian, or party considerations, all good citizens should combine to procure an enactment prohibiting the sale of intoxicating beverages, as affording most efficient aid in removing the appalling evil of intemperance.

London, Eng.

SHOW your conversion by your acts. A druggist in a country town was recently converted. The very next Sunday this notice appeared on the door: "This store open on Sundays for medicines only. Positively no other goods sold." The sign is still up and the conversion holds. Drinkers now have to go to the back door of the saloons.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Lord Rosebery and English "Pointers."

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—As the time hastens when I am to leave England, and as my strength increases, I have felt that I must see some of the characters who set the keynotes of this wonderful land. Therefore Lady Henry, Anna Gordon and I recently secured tickets (through the kindness of Mr. Costello, barrister at law, member of the London county council and son-in-law of our own Hannah Whitall Smith) to the great meeting in which London welcomed the new prime minister, Lord Rosebery.

St. James Hall was packed like a National W. C. T. U. Convention on "welcome evening," and I rejoiced to see that women were so largely in evidence. This is a most significant sign of the new politics, and I hope will be a growing indication in our own dear country. At present, however, it must be reluctantly admitted that in the two old parties at home they have small recognition. The Prohibition party stands at the head with us in its recognition of the abilities and power of women, and the Populist comes next. Doubtless little girls are now living who will tell to their children as a drollery of the past that "there were once intelligent people in America who thought it just to prevent women from having any part in making the laws by which they were to be judged or by which their children and homes were to be protected from their most subtle enemies."

At Lord Rosebery's meeting there were women on the platform, on the floor and in the galleries, and when that nobleman came forward he addressed his audience as "Ladies and gentlemen," while they rose with tumultuous enthusiasm, singing with the hearty good will in which an English audience excels all others, "For he's a jolly good fellow." Bowing his thanks, Lord Rosebery stood before us, a man of ideal figure and bearing, with face perfectly smooth, quick genial smile that twinkles first in his large blue eyes, then transfigures his fine mobile lips and proves catching to the beholder. He is the embodiment of gracious dignity and for the time at least wins all who hear. He is not what we at home call an orator, having too much of the technical parliamentary manner; like the genial Arthur J. Balfour, governmental leader of the Conservatives of the House of Commons, Lord Rosebery thinks of his next point by grasping the lapels of his coat, but aside from this rudimentary gesture (which, as I remember, the professors in olden time at Evanston warned their fledgeling "theologs" against as quite unpardonable), the new prime minister is a remarkably pleasing speaker in look and attitude, gesture and tone. He has one of those smooth, deep, resonant English voices, and occasionally rises to something like eloquence; but if he did not, what could be more intrinsically eloquent than the spectacle of a Scotch earl, who through his alliance with the Rothschild family, is a man of princely fortune, to which are added a university education, the culture of the court and the cosmopolitan polity of a "globe trotter" (for such Lord Rosebery is), and who is beside—or in spite of it all—a man genial, popular, sincere and devoted to the people's cause. The great Gladstone is his friend, and long ago declared that he was in training for the primacy that he now holds as the actual ruler of 350,000,000 human beings. What a man thus gifted and equipped says on any subject is of vital interest to those who hear.

His theme this night was the work accomplished by the London county council, that "section of the millennium" which is transforming humanity's capital as rapidly as may be. Lord Rosebery was chairman of this council and told with evident delight of the improved facilities for obtaining pure water, pure air, breathing places in the form of parks and playgrounds for the people, a more equitable taxation, more comfortable tenement houses and many other improvements of the most practical character. He said: "The day is past when the knights and castles are to have all the good things and the pawns all the evil ones in the great game of life on the chessboard of the world." (I quote from memory.) At this time the knights rose around him like the knights of the Round Table when King Arthur spoke. Again, he said: "There will come a minister—be he prime or otherwise—who will step down from his official platform to meet the people face to face and hand to hand, to know their wants and to carry their decrees into effect." Here the audience rose once more to a man (and to a woman) cheering so vociferously and waving handkerchiefs with such enthusiasm that I know an American woman who could not keep back the tears that such a declaration thus indorsed brought to the eyes of many. And then he said (again I quote from memory): "If this should not be so the people would ere long rise in their majesty and say to the Liberal and Conservative parties alike, 'A plague on both your Houses; we will have politics that mean the preservation and enjoyment of our rights.'"

I have never seen in any audience such enthusiasm as this declaration awakened in loyal British breasts, nor can we wonder at it. No Prime Minister since time began has ever spoken thus, and least of all, were such words looked for from a leader in the House of Lords.

"The world is moving on." I begin to think that the tide rises more equally on all shores than we who are so happy as to live "in the land of the free and the home of the brave" are apt to think. It certainly looks as if Great Britain and Ireland, so compact in population, so homogeneous in race—the entire country being no larger than Georgia and South Carolina combined—will be able to handle the living issues of the time more skillfully than a great country like ours subdivided into many states. The temperance, the labor and the woman questions are bubbling with activity and enthusiasm in these islands, and if we do not look well to our laurels they will reach the goal before us. It must be remembered that Great Britain's local option, with woman's municipal ballot back of it, is a wholly different measure from the fractional law that we call by that name, from whose operation we deliberately and idiotically root out the home vote, representing that shrine of all things good and holy with one, while the saloon-keeper can collect at least a dozen ballots with which to neutralize and overwhelm that one.

Now, good-by, one and all, and forgive this long letter. I hope to see you "in the leafy month of June."

Yours for the extinction of the liquor traffic,

Reigate, Eng. Frances E. Willard.

THE INTERNATIONAL TEMPERANCE CONGRESS.

DEAR W. C. T. U. CO-LABORERS:—A call has been issued by advocates of temperance, Joseph A. Bogardus, 167 Chambers St., New York City, secretary of committee, for "a reception to Gen. Neal Dow, in honor of his ninetieth year, and for an International Temperance Congress, to to be held at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, N. Y., June 3, 4 and 5." It is expected that every phase of the temperance question will be represented. General Dow hopes to be present; Joseph Cook will deliver the oration on June 3, and Major-General O. O. Howard will preside. Many distinguished men and women will be in attendance. Mr. Bogardus heartily calls upon "all local, state and national temperance societies (regardless of sex, color or politics) and all churches and other religious or secular organizations which hate the saloon to send representatives to this International Congress, each organization to be entitled to one voting delegate for each twenty members. The body sending the representatives must favor the overthrow of the saloon and total abstinence."

This will probably be the largest and most representative temperance meeting ever held in the country, and we trust that a large number of members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be there. Will not each state and each local union having twenty members appoint a delegate? Surely if Coxey's army can march to the national capital in search of a principle (we can but wonder if they will find it there), we, fired with the righteous, inspiring hope of deliverance of home and church and nation from their liquor enemy, can sacrifice to the successful gathering of this army of reform! What an inspiration it would be to our hosts. It is desired that delegates be appointed at the earliest possible date, and their names be sent to Mr. Bogardus, that hotel accommodation may be secured at moderate rates. "A reduction amounting practically to a discount of one-third has been made in all railroad rates east of the Mississippi," and we doubt not that equal favor will be shown by the western roads, so universally generous. Let our hearts be cheered by hearty response to this almost unlimited invitation.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE,

Chicago, Ill. Cor. Sec. National W. C. T. U.

DRIFTWOOD FROM MISSOURI.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—"Yes, you had better accept Mrs. Hoffman's kind invitation and visit Missouri. It will be lonely in the home but you are my thank-offering to the temperance cause."

With these self-sacrificing words from him who bids his wife "Godspeed" in all her work, I packed my valises and started on my journey to that great state, whose fertile valleys and mountains rich with treasure, whose educational institutions and climate mild and healthful, are unsurpassed in all the land.

I found earnest, self-abnegating women everywhere, trying to block the way of the liquor traffic in that "block option" state, for county prohibition prevails in but a small portion of the state at the present time. Where county local option has been defeated a majority of taxpayers in any block can petition for a saloon and if there is an obstruction, liquor men buy the block in the most desirable place and plant the deadly upas tree, paying a license fee of five hundred dollars.

I spent ten days in Lilian Woods' district. Miss Woods is also vice-president-at-large of the state and is an efficient worker.

My visit was at a time when revival meetings were in progress and it is reported that Missouri leads the nation in the number of conversions this year. Pastors frequently gave up their pulpits for the temperance revival and I have heard recently that some poor weak word of mine, baptized by the Holy Spirit, caused an arrest of thought in the heart of an infidel, who has since been converted and joined the church. God grant that so much of Christ's spirit may permeate our work that a temperance address will not be an innovation in any revival.

Two ministers refused to pray at the opening exercises during the trip, and a college president read the notice of the lecture and added: "This will hardly come under the head of divine services. If any of you should attend see to it that you do not neglect your lessons for to-morrow." Contrast that with the announcement of the lecture by Professor Lynch, principal of the schools at Mountain Grove, who said to his hundred students: "I want to see every pupil at the lecture to-night and I shall look around to see whether or not you are present. Don't let there be a single absent one."

At Clinton, the home of Eva Jones, "whose strength is as the strength of ten," because her life is consecrated to the Master, I met the leaders of the Anti-Saloon Army, which numbers one hundred strong, and is a power for good in that city. It has two degrees, the agitators and abolishers. It is a terror to the saloon, feared by bad men, beloved by good. No room in the city will hold the people when an open meeting is held.

At Springfield I visited the Industrial Home, a refuge under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. Within the last two years two hundred and forty women and children have been rescued from the street; many sent back to home and mother; many led to Him who said: "Neither do I condemn thee. Go and sin no more."

"The world still calls her lost.
Oh, were it your loved one or mine,
Would we say lost?
Nay, help divine we'd e'en implore,
And lead her up to heaven's door;
And count it cheap whate'er the cost,—
To lead to God what the world calls lost."

At Bolivar, many new recruits were added, and the work moves steadily forward under the splendid leadership of the state recording secretary, Mrs. Kate Newton.

One of the pleasant memories of the trip was a visit to Houston, twenty miles from the railroad over the Ozark mountains. The church was filled to overflowing. Mrs. Herrick, the district president, is ever leading the people to higher ground.

The cause of equal suffrage is constantly advancing; there is still much prejudice existing, but nearly all white-ribboners there, as in other states, are suffragists. They are learning that mother love is a mighty lever, and the ballot-box the fulcrum with which she can lift the world nearer ideal manhood, nearer heaven and nearer God.

When I was given receptions and entertained in the hospitable homes of Confederate women how my heart ached to think we had ever been at war; but thanks be to God, there is no North, no South, in this other war, and the little bow of white is binding together hearts once estranged as nothing else has ever done.

I remember one of these dear women slipped a silver dollar into my hand and whispered: "It's for you; don't tell any one. My husband would be so angry;" and then she sobbed, "Oh, Mrs. Cranmer, my husband drinks." There are so many hurts in this world of ours, so many hearts breaking because of rum.

My trip took me to Chillicothe, Stanbury, Maryville and Hannibal. Here I was entertained in the beautiful home of Mrs. Dr. Hickman, who has done such efficient work among the prisoners of that city. At Sedalia I met the efficient editor of the Home Guard, Mrs. Lucy Whisker, and from here visited Appleton City, Seneca, Holden and other points—the climax being reached in an all day celebration at Kansas City in honor of Neal Dow. All temperance organizations united in this celebration and the meeting was presided over by Mrs. Ira Lewis, a model presiding officer, a model wife and mother. It was a pleasure to visit W. C. T. U. headquarters and meet the state secretary, Miss Ellen Morris, whose careful planning of the trip was much appreciated by a weary temperance pilgrim.

I wish I had space to speak of the many noble workers of that state. Mrs. Ingalls' recent bulletin on narcotics should be in the hands of every local union. Everywhere I saw the strong impress of that leader of leaders, Clara C. Hoffman, whose heroic, self-sacrificing work will be to her a crown of immortelles and to Missouri a legacy rich and rare. No wonder her recent reëlection was unanimous. Not only does she belong to Missouri, but the nation and the world.

BY HARRIET B. KELLS.

Charge them that are rich in this world . . . . that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, ... that they may lay hold on eternal life.—I Timothy 6:17-19.

"Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all" should be spoken of the fifth district of Michigan white-ribboners. They have paid $100 for the record of their district in the Temple, and every county in the district has made the same votive offering for the sacred walls—a total of $600. Having done all this has but inspired them to nobler effort, and now they send $100 more, asking that the name of their district president, Mrs. Anna Smeed Benjamin (National superintendent of parliamentary usage), be honorably enrolled on a tablet. This is the only district in any state that has no missing link in its record. Mrs. Kenneday and Mrs. Wilson, of Ionia, have each sent $100, and the aggregate from other individual gifts in this loyal-hearted and steady-going district is a large sum. There is but one more open door for the irrepressible energy of the fifth district, and that is to enroll every infant in its area in a mammoth Baby Band. Compact, shoulder-to-shoulder work like this would soon place the Temple beyond the reach of adverse criticism, and the world would delight to recognize the inflexible purpose and victory of woman as we honor the Michigan fifth district.

A good brother, C. C. Spooner, Sand Creek, Mich., encouragingly writes: "Perhaps there are many like myself intending to help the Temple out who have not said what they will do. When you lack $100 call on me and it shall come without delay. Every man and woman who professes any love for the temperance cause should show it by helping to lift the debt." Bethany, Conn., W. C. T. U. sends $28.37 to be credited on $100. Schoharie county, N. Y., union forwards $14.50; $12.50 of this sum is from the Jefferson union, the balance from Richmanville; Cabliskill W. C. T. U. had previously sent $10.60 and Seward $2.22,—$52.32 being total paid on the county pledge. Tilton, N. H., W. C. T. U., contributes an additional $25 towards its $100.

Mrs. Ada H. Kepley, Effingham, Ill., sends one of her Band of Hope and L. T. L. spoons to be sold and proceeds used for the Temple. It is solid silver, and sells for $2.25. Who speaks first for it? Laurel, Del., union, has sent a gift of $10 through its president, Mrs. E. M. Hitch. Far-off Scotland keeps us in its heart, and shows it by sending $25, the gift of Miss Home, of Edinburgh, and simultaneously comes $1 from Miss Marshall Saunders, the author of that wonderful book, "Beautiful Joe," written in the interest of "our sister bee, our brother ass,"—as the good saint phrased our dumb friends of the lower orders. It helps us to know our Temple flash-lights are recognized far over the seas and beyond our borders. Rev. S. S. Schnell and his good wife, Jennie E., write: "We have already given our mite to the fulfilled pledge of $100 from Tioga county, N. Y., but we wish now to make a birthday offering of $1 each." God bless you, friends! St. Croix Falls, Wis., union sends $1 for the Neal Dow window.

McKean county, Pa., W. C. T. U., which heads the $100 list from that state, sends the following resolution passed at the last semi-annual convention:

Resolved: That we heartily indorse the management of Mrs. Matilda B. Carse in the great Temperance Temple enterprise, which she has undertaken with the sanction of the National W. C. T. U., and that we do all in our power to prove to the world that there is no inherent reason why a woman may not carry to a successful conclusion an undertaking which would do honor to the best masculine financier in America; and that to Mrs. Carse in particular, as one of the foremost and bravest business women and temperance workers in the country, we extend our most cordial sympathy and co-operation.

An error was made in crediting, recently, $40 to Mrs. H. Witherstine, personally, instead of to the Rochester, Minn., W. C. T. U., a payment on its pledge. From Montague, Prince Edwards Island, comes $4, the contents of the mite-box of the family of Mrs. Charlotte M. Lawson, who says, "We intend to keep on filling our box until the beautiful Temple is paid for and secure in the hands of the women. We were so delighted with the lovely Columbian souvenir that I presented it to my little daughter as a birthday gift, and want another for a like occasion for her sister." Mrs. L. H. Hyslop, Nebraska City, Neb., that untiring worker who will have everything good "going" in the cause, sends the contents of her mite-box, $3.65, with an order for the souvenir spoon. She is seventy-two and longs to send a $1,000,000 check to the Temple. Mrs. Grace I. Holbrook, Springfield, Mass., sends $2 for two Columbian souvenirs.

Mrs. J. E. Leith, Finley, N. J., forwards $2.50, contents of her mite-box, and wants the beautiful Columbian medal. This will always be sent for a $1 contribution, and this sum may be credited on a $100 pledge. The full contents of a mite-box, $3.65, entitle the sender to a souvenir spoon, but in no case can this amount be credited on a pledge.

All persons sending $1 to the Temple will receive the beautiful Columbian souvenir. Any individual who fills a mite-box during 1894 will receive a solid silver Temple souvenir teaspoon. This, however, does not apply to persons filling boxes for unions; they receive the Columbian souvenir. All money orders and checks should be made out in the name of William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, the Temple, Chicago, Ill. All orders for mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

MY APPLE-TREE.

My apple-tree, thy dome of rose and pearl
Will vanish on the morrow, like a dream.
Yet every spring, the springs when I am dead,
A tabernacle thou wilt build for men;
And they will look up through thee into heaven,
And hear the hum of bees among thy boughs,
A faint sky-music. I shall worship then,
With friends beloved, under other shade.
Are only palms in Eden? I shall miss
The tree whereby Eve fell,—if that thou wert,—
Not seeing it beside the River of Life.

Thou art too beautiful to be dropped out
Of human vision, even beatified.
There is no glory of the trees like thine;
Tho' there be many set in Paradise,
There must thou blossom also.
Dreams are lost
In guessing at the glory of thy boughs
In that immortal spring-time.
Ah! dear friends,
Sweet memories of the earth, and sad no more,
Will float around us in the air of heaven,
A fragrance and a melody, when we,
Young, glad, and all as if at home again,
Sit under our transplanted apple-trees.

HOW ONE WOMAN PLANNED FOR THE TEMPLE.

"Go thou and do likewise."

BY A. E. SIGBEE.

Nothing had yet been said or done by the ilttle union, organized only two years before, about raising money for the Temperance Temple; and the probability is that nothing would have been done had not some one brought the subject up for discussion. The membership was small and nobody wealthy, but quality and zeal were better material than numbers.

Mrs. Cady was surprised, when she thought about it, that the Temple had never been once mentioned their midst. When the next meeting day of the union arrived it was cold and stormy and only the few faithful ones were present. As a minister once said in reference to the attendance at the prayer-meeting: "There were but few present, as the inclement weather kept all but the old and infirm at home."

Mrs. Cady was one who had never been absent from a meeting since their union was organized, although her home was not very near. After devotional services and the regular business, one sister arose and in a clear voice said: "There is a subject which I have been thinking much about for some time, and have wondered why it has not been taken up by our union—that is our Temperance Temple. I believe we could raise one hundred dollars for it just as well as not if we put our heart in the effort. I think as a union we ought to do something."

The Temple never having been even suggested, the bare proposition of raising one hundred dollars was felt somewhat like the shock of an earthquake.

The pallid silence was at last broken by Miss Douglas, a new member, who said: "I do not know what the possibilities of the union are but I feel confident we could do something in that line."

Another profound dumbness reigned. Then the president replied: "I have not given the subject much thought, and I must confess that what I have given it has been unfavorable. It seems to me that the money used for that purpose had better be put in the work."

"That might be, if the extra money which would be given for the Temple would be put in the work. But it will not," said Mrs. Cady. "I had a little experience in that way myself last week. I tried to raise a little extra money for the work, but did not succeed. Said one lady: 'No, I have already given all, and really more than I can afford, but if our union will raise one hundred dollars for the Temperance Temple I will give five dollars toward it.' Now you see she will not put that extra five dollars in any other channel, for she has already given liberally otherwise; and I believe she is only one of many who would do the same."

"Well," said the president, "if I am to express my opinion, I do not believe in putting so much money in the building."

"How much?"

"Twelve hundred thousand dollars. It never can be raised."

"Yes, it can. If states can put millions in their capitols and public buildings and single religious denominations can build churches that cost one, two or more hundred thousand dollars why cannot the world erect a Temple as a memorial of the greatest issue in its history, an issue which has for its object the death of the traffic in the bodies and souls of humanity, an issue which is common to all nations, creeds and conditions? Why, the Methodist church is about to build a house at Rome (the corner-stone has already been laid), which will cost one hundred thousand dollars, and the ground on which it stands cost forty thousand dollars. This, you see, is one-twelfth of what the Temple is to cost, and is built by a single religious denomination. Large? Why, to me it has never appeared so. When I think that the whole world is represented in the offerings, that the issue memorializes the Master, I am surprised that more enthusiasm is not shown by our country. Remember, too, that after the debt is paid what a princely revenue will annually come from the rentals of the building and will go back to the states in proportion as they have paid,—all to be used in the work."

"But," said the president, "our public buildings are paid for by taxing the people, which makes it sure."

"Now, that is a practical suggestion to act upon," said Mrs. Cady. "What is to hinder every white-ribboner from denying (or taxing) herself something and putting the amount in the Temple? We have two living examples given us in Holy Writ—the widow's mite and the pot of ointment, memorialized for all time by our Master. All other gifts are unrecorded. That was near nineteen centuries ago, and even then there were capitalists who found fault that the costly offering was a waste of money which might better be expended. We all remember the Master's word. I confess I have often wondered why some costly gifts have not been given to the Temple by our wealthy philanthropists who have given so largely to other objects no more meritorious. How long would it take to pay the whole debt if every union should make an earnest effort to raise one hundred dollars, and all white-ribboners who are able give one hundred? Just think, there is no building like it in the world. Africa, China, Japan, and the nations of the earth have sent their tithes and offerings to put in it."

"Well, I must say," persisted the president, "that I have lost what faith I did have in the project, since—since when? I suppose you received a marked article which was enough to shake the faith of any one. Did you receive a paper?"

"Yes; but why one should be sent to me I cannot tell, as we never took the paper and it was the first one that ever, to my knowledge, came into our home. I was astounded when I read the article, and said, An enemy could not have done more! I neither showed nor told any one about it, but put the paper with the circular once sent to me about the 'pellet pills.' It seems to me that the very fact of opposition should make every W. C. T. U. woman rally loyally to its support and wipe out the debt. It can be done. I have, perhaps, said too much. When I got up I only thought of bringing the subject before the meeting, but forgot myself, and have taken up too much time. I will pledge five dollars, and will get five more to make it ten."

"I will pledge the same," said Miss Douglas. And five of the eleven members present each pledged to be responsible for ten dollars toward one hundred.

Said one lady who had intently listened: "I will undertake to raise a Baby Band which will make ten dollars."

There was no more opposition nor indifference; as sixty dollars was pledged that afternoon, the rest was sure, as one not there could be counted on for five. A vote was taken and the union agreed to raise one hundred dollars for the Temple. The five members pledged for ten dollars were appointed to act as a committee to secure the money.

"I know very little about it," said one member, "but I can just as well do without a new dress which I intended to get and have made. It would cost at least fifteen dollars. I will tax myself that amount and give it to the Temple."

An entertainment was given which was so well advertised that it netted over twenty dollars; the whole amount was raised within two months from the time it was first spoken of.

Why cannot all unions do the same? and by concentrating their efforts, pay the debt and put a stop to the carping and hostile criticism, and give the people a rest and the world an object lesson on the Golden Rule and woman's faith and principle. Let us stop wasting time thinking and go to work. The Temple is there, and American women and the W. C. T. U. will be the laughing stock of the nations if they let it slip out of their hands, and will be pointed at as a proof of woman's incapacity for business. Men will say, "Why, they didn't know how to keep it after they built it!"

Don't let us demonstrate that we belong with "Indians, lunatics and idiots."

OVERCOMING UNFAVORABLE HEREDITY.

BY HELEN L. MANNING.

"There is nothing we cannot overcome,
Say not thy evil instinct is inherited,
Or that some trait inborn makes thy whole life forlorn,
And calls down punishment that is not merited.
Back of thy parents and grandparents lies
The great Eternal Will, that too, is thine
Inheritance:—strong, beautiful, divine;
Sure lever of success for one who tries."

Many close students of the subject of heredity agree with Ella Wheeler Wilcox in the sentiments expressed in the foregoing that abnormal tendencies through heredity may be eradicated by proper training, judicious diet, etc. The facts of heredity are much more generally accepted as unalterable than they should be. It is time to emphasize the other side—that whatever the hereditary tendency, be it physical or moral, the bias may be wholly changed by environment and education. People are too apt to pile their shortcomings upon the shoulders of their ancestors, instead of recognizing their own responsibility as to whether they shall remain the slaves of hereditary circumstance or its conqueror.

It is all nonsense to say, "My father had consumption and I expect to have it," or "My mother was a thief and I am not to blame for stealing." Doubtless the degree of responsibility in the latter case is not so great as when one has a long ancestral line of purity and uprightness, but the freedom of choice is individual, double lines of fortifications are needed as safeguards, and above all, the aid of Him who is able to deliver in every time of trial or temptation. The will must be strengthened and a proper sense of probity instilled. Consumption is not inherited, although small, weak lungs may be, and the proper thing to do is to cultivate the breathing capacity and build up the general health.

Probably no person in the United States has studied more carefully the criminal and pauper classes than W. M. F. Round, and in a recent magazine article he strongly states that the world has been making too much of heredity and not enough of moral and industrial education. He holds that criminal laws should be so amended as to allow of indeterminate sentences, and that no one committed for crime or vagrancy should be allowed his liberty again until he is able to earn his living in some industrial occupation and is willing to do it. He does not believe in coddling convicts and making their lives so easy behind the bars that they will continually seek commitment to jail rather than face the world by earning an honest living. His idea of discipline is not cruelty but firmness, and he believes in the plainest of wholesome fare instead of food which is luxurious compared with what prisoners have known outside. He has had several years of experience as superintendent of the Burnham industrial farm, Canaan Four Corners, N. Y., a reformatory for boy criminals and boys of criminal tendency, and the success there has been wonderful. The physical and moral natures of the boys are simultaneously and wisely trained; the spark of latent manhood is fanned into life, and being committed on indeterminate sentences, they soon learn that good behavior and its rewards are their only passport to manhood and freedom.

Apropos of this, Herbert Nicholas, Ph. D., in an article in McClure's magazine, on the Harvard psychological laboratory, touches incidentally on heredity vs. environment, in the following terms:

"Psychology is coming close to the affairs of church and state in more than one way. One of the greatest crimes of modern society is its conception of criminal jurisprudence. Between the fetal period and adult life, man passes through, in abridged series, all the degrees of evolution that have led up through the lower animal stages to his own. In early infancy, and even in childhood, he is not yet wholly man; nor yet safely over the brute period of his lineal development. If the domestic calf and chicken spend their first days wild in the woods, this pre-domestic environment will seize upon and develop their pre-domestic traits; and these once set, no amount of domestic training will, thereafter, make calf or chicken anything else than a wild, untamable creature. The early instinctive periods of man's progeny are more prolonged, more delicate and more susceptible than those of lower animals, yet are of the same nature. If left to evil environment in early years, the latent brute within him will surely lay hold of its own, and ripen the yet innocent child to a creature bearing the same relation to the moral and civilized man that the wild wolf does to the house dog. On the other hand, the wolf whose first lair is the hunter's hearth, grows to share it lovingly with the hunter's children. The government that ignores the hordes of children which crowd to-day the criminal quarters of its great cities, and abandons them to ripen their pre-civilized propensities under such evil influences, becomes itself the foster father of its own crimes; nurses its own children to fill its poor-houses, and raises its own youths to fill its prisons. Psychology, if on mere ground of financial economy alone, will yet force criminal jurisprudence to begin its work before, rather than after, this early period of 'unalterable penalty.'"

THE BOY AND THE SQUIRREL.

"Come, squirrel, come, and live with me,
I have a nice big cage;
No hawk can touch you there, no dog
Can chase you in a rage."

"No, thank you, thank you, little boy,
I have a better home
In that oak tree; and, better still,
The forest I can roam."

"Oh, squirrel, come, I'll give you food,
As much as you can wish,—
Sweet hazel-nuts, and water pure,
In my blue china dish."

"You're very kind, but I prefer
The nuts that I can hide,
And sparkling water I can find
By any cool brookside."

"Now, squirrel, think, you ought to know
I do not mean you harm;
When cold, cold winter comes, I'll keep
You safe and snug and warm."

"Enough! Good-bye. You ought to think,
Then you'd be quite aware,
'Tis best for squirrels to be free,
And trust in God's own care."

THE HUMMING-BIRD.

BY MRS. WYNFORD PHILIPPS.

A humming-bird sat perched high up on the crown of a tall and very fashionable hat; filmy clouds of lace were around it, and mossy bands of velvet below it, and the hat was next to a plate glass window in front of which many people stopped to gaze.

The sky was bright and the world was busy, but the poor little humming-bird couldn't fly into the world of brightness, because his little feet were fastened together by a cruel wire and his body was attached to the hat by a sharp spike. Bright were the eyes of the bird, and dazzling the color of his plumage, but alas! his wings could no longer bear him in a glorious flight amongst flowers and foliage!

The plain little sparrows hopping about the street saw the gorgeous creature and envied it; and chattering to one another wished that they had soft green things to peck at, and soft, downy lace to roost on, instead of having to grub about for their dinners in the gutter.

One ugly little sparrow that had been a happy, impertinent little bird before grew quite moped and wretched from gazing at the splendor of the humming-bird's plumage, and longing to be like him.

"It is very hard," she thought, looking dismally at her dull brown feathers, "that through no fault of my own I have to be only a little sparrow all my life! If I had been born with wings like that, all shimmering with emerald and gold, I should always have been very, very happy."

She ruffled herself deliberately and made all her feathers turn the wrong way and opened her beak in protest and shut it again with a snap. But Mr. Sparrow came up and gave her a nice, cheerful encouraging peck and said:

"Don't be silly, my dear. I like you much better as you are. I couldn't have courted you if you were a gorgeous tropical person covered with jewel-like feathers of all colors, for I should be ashamed of my own feathers then, and besides it would be very awkward to have a wife permanently attached to a tall hat so as to oblige one to build a nest and roost there and rear up one's family and all that. Between ourselves, my dear," he continued, "though green velvet bows are certainly most beautiful to look at, I doubt after all whether they would be so very nice to eat."

The humming-bird knew nothing of what was being said of him; he was very unhappy, thinking regretfully of the sunlit land where he had sported in perfect happiness in the branches of the tall tropical trees; where he used to join the early breakfast parties of his friends, the birds of paradise, and play among the branches with them, as they tried who could bring his tail farthest above his head so as to let his brilliant plumage fall over him like a golden cascade.

Poor little prisoner! He could see no companion now, except when the tall hat on which he was stuck was tried on, and then he would gaze mournfully at himself in the glass, and pity the sorrows of his reflection, which he mistook for a brother bird. The many human faces around him seemed strange and bewildering for a long time.

Before he was brought to England he had seen no human creature at all, except an occasional Papuan negro, a black thing, with frizzly black plumage on its head, and no other feathers at all; with skin polished like a snake, and as great an enemy to the bird world as the snakes are. The cruel noose of one of these wicked human animals had been the means of making him captive; by treacherous means, too, for some sweet, red berries had been fastened at the end of a long stick, and when in good faith he alighted to feast on the toothsome morsel, his delicate feet had been entangled in a cord twisted for that evil purpose.

The world had seemed a very bitter, uncomfortable place ever since that time! He soon knew he had nothing to fear from the customers who thronged to the French milliner. Whilst he was only a free, wild, natural thing, an embodied harmony of brilliant colors, winging his way joyously through God's earthly garden, he was a thing to be hunted, hurt, destroyed;—but now he was dull and silent, and unable to move, a mere piece of perked up millinery, he had become precious in losing the very things most precious to have, and, for the future, human beings would value him and guard him from harm in the safest of bonnet-boxes.

One day the humming-bird saw a wonderful sight. Two bits of brilliant blue, shining like the tropical sky when seen between the petals of the heavy scented golden lily, and below these glimpses of sky loveliness, two red berries, shaped more daintily than any that grew on the bushes.

The blue was hidden behind a dusky fringe, and the berries parted, showing a pearly glimmer, and the humming-bird realized that the radiant vision had been the eyes and mouth of a young woman.

A moment more and madame, the milliner, had seized the tall hat in which sat our prisoner and was assuring Miss Blue Eyes that it was the most becoming headgear that French art had ever fashioned.

"What a dear bird, how beautifully it glitters," said the smiling customer, "and it really is most becoming." Straightway she bought the hat and drove away with it. "If I must linger imprisoned," thought the poor little captive, "I am glad I can help to make her look beautiful, and I am glad that I shall go about with this lovely creature, for she is as nearly like a bird of paradise as any big unfeathered mortal can be."

Next day he had his wish, for the lady donned her new hat and went to a great flat plot of ground where men were running up and down after a silly little ball, whilst hundreds and hundreds of others stood round and clapped. How different was the play of the birds! How beautiful they looked when they waved their glorious tails, and how exciting it was when they darted after the shining fireflies! Still Blue Eyes seemed to enjoy herself, and all the more so when a tall man talked with her. He was dressed as differently as if he belonged to a different species, with a hat that Madame Milliner would have been quite ashamed of, just a straight, black cylinder, like a saucepan inverted without a handle, and no ribbon or feathers of any sort about it.

That evening when the maid came into the room to put away the fine clothes and the tall hat, her mistress said pettishly, "Lord Ronald objected to that stupid bird in my hat. He said that it hurt him to see the body of a creature that looked as if it ought to be living pinned to anybody's head. Take it away, Marie, and don't let me ever see it again."

And so the humming-bird found himself poked away in an untidy and stuffy room, and never came into the light of day except on Sundays, and the moss green bows were taken away. Magenta ribbons were fastened on instead, of color so hard that it quite hurt him to look at them.

"Lord Ronald meant well," he thought to himself, "but, oh, if he had but let me alone and had shown his kindness of heart by punishing the Papuan negroes, so as to prevent them from capturing my friends, the birds of paradise; after all, I can never fly again, and my only good now is to adorn others, and here I am, useless and ugly, half hidden by the magenta ribbons!"

The bird sat drearily on the lavishly trimmed hat of Marie, the maid, for a whole year, till at last he found himself packed up with numerous odds and ends of frippery, stuffed in a bag and removed to a close little shop. He heard money clinking in the greedy hand of the servant, and then he was taken out, poked about, and the hat and he were placed in the window.

PROF. EDWARD E. FISH estimates that birds save for agricultural purposes alone, annually, one hundred million dollars in the United States, and we are told that insect life in many places has increased so as to make human life almost unendurable.

Michelet has stated that there could be no vegetation, and therefore no life, if the birds were all destroyed.—Selected.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I read an article not long ago which interested me very much. It was about Great Danes. I don't mean the great men of the Danish country, but the dogs which are called by that name, and which some of you may have seen. Perhaps you do not know that these large animals are not at all dangerous; indeed, they are very gentle. It is said their mouths are the softest in the world and they will not harm any one. For this reason, the Great Danes, look as fierce as they may, do not make good watch-dogs. Bismarck, the former prime minister of Germany, owns a number of these dogs of which he is very fond.

A story is told of a Great Dane who was walking with its owner in Central Park, New York, not long ago, when a laborer passed carrying a pail of beer. The dog, who is as tall as a small Shetland pony, ran after the man and before he knew what had happened the animal had stuck its nose in the pail and drank the contents. The frightened workman dropped the pail and ran, and we can imagine that the dog greatly enjoyed his surprise. Which was the better off, do you think, the dog who drank the beer, or the man who was prevented from doing so?

This story recalled to my mind the fact that a great deal has been written on our page and in our Cozy Corner about temperance cats, but what do we hear about our temperance dogs? Have we no white-ribbon-decorated dog friends, too? I believe we have and shall expect to receive letters about them from the owners who read Cozy Corner. Your

"JINERS" AND SPECIALISTS.

There is an amusing story of an Irish woman who appealed to a judge for redress from the habits of a husband whom she described as a "jiner." On questioning her the perplexed judge made out that the sin of which she accused her husband was joining every organization that came along, to the serious neglect of his business and family. A story of the opposite kind is that of the student who devoted his life to the study of the Latin definite article, and died lamenting that he had not confined his researches to the dative case. Both of these stories represent actual though exactly opposite characteristics of the present age, the fact of whose co-existence furnishes valuable material for a study of our curious and complex human nature.

The Irish woman's grievance illustrates a real evil. Societies for all sorts of objects are multiplied on every hand. Most of them are laudable in their purposes, and the natural desire of a person interested in the philanthropic and advance movements of the world is to sympathize with all of them. Taking them separately he would join each of them, but when it comes to joining all he becomes aware that it would require more than the time usually allotted to one man to do justice to them. Yet the representatives of each organization often act as though the individual who refused to join this or that society were derelict in duty. The result is that the average human being finds himself, before he knows it, undertaking more than he can possibly do. He who attempts the Herculean task of belonging to every good thing that presses its claims upon him will end by doing nothing of any account along any line. Like the individual so graphically portrayed by Edward Eggleston, he will do "his level best," but it will be a dead level which will never rise into anything above the dreariest mediocrity. There is but one course open to the sane man or woman, and that is to choose for himself the lines of work to which he will devote himself and firmly refuse to have more crowded upon him.

Avoiding Scylla, however, we must not fall upon Charybdis. The extreme specialism of the times is an equal though opposite evil. Bishop Haygood in his striking way shows how the exaggerated division of labor, which is but another name for the same thing, has converted the shoemaker (who, as the maker of every part of the shoe, had to be a man of skill, and consequently of thought) into a mere machine for polishing heels or sewing on buttons, etc., where no thought being required he soon ceased to think. We fully believe that much of the specialism in what are considered higher lines of work is just as injurious to the worker and, in addition to this, which is not true in the case of the shoe, is detrimental to the work. To shut one's self up rigidly to a single narrow field, is to disregard the versatility of human powers, to become narrow and cramped one's self, and in all kinds of intellectual pursuits, injure the work itself. For complete knowledge of any object embraces not only a thorough acquaintance with every feature of the object itself, but a knowledge of it as a whole and in its relations to all other objects. A thorough knowledge of the dative case can be obtained not merely by a knowledge of it and of the entire article, but of the whole Latin language, and the knowledge will be vastly improved by an acquaintance with as many other languages as it is possible to master.

We look with wonder and admiration upon Michael Angelo, the poet, painter and sculptor, but attribute his diversified powers to a transcendent genius which lifts him above our emulation. The truth is that great poets, sculptors, painters, statesmen, philosophers, etc., are very largely the result of environment. Man has a capacity to rise above his circumstances, nevertheless, there are circumstances in which certain kinds of geniuses are never produced. It is due to difference of environment, not to changes in the human intellect, that no Homers are writing to-day and that the art of past ages remains the unattained ideal of the present. If we desire a return to these we must study the conditions essential to their production. Of one thing we may be sure, geniuses of such versatile powers as Michael Angelo will rarely be produced in an age in which the quintessence of wisdom is supposed to consist in choosing a life occupation and devoting one's self to it to the exclusion of everything else.

That there exist to-day people of as versatile if not as great powers as Michael Angelo, we have abundant proof. We all of us know those who have such marked gifts along several different lines that it seems a pity that they cannot develop them all. Gladstone, the great statesman, the translator of Homer, the Christian apologist, is an example of the diversified powers of the human mind, and what Gladstone did, the majority of us in our lesser orbits may do also; for he accomplished his great results by following out the correct theory of recreation, that it consists not in idleness but in change of occupation. Gladstone was a better not a worse statesman for the work he did outside his chief line. He was a better statesman for being something besides a statesman. His outside work served the double purpose of recreation and of developing his powers of thought. In addition to this, he acquired through it a fund of knowledge, much of which bore directly or indirectly upon the questions of statesmanship with which he was called to deal.

There can be no cast iron rules laid down for every one to follow; but all should recognize these two opposite dangers and take care that he becomes neither a "jiner" nor a burrower into the "dative case." No one can do everything, therefore each one should choose his own vocation to which his main energy shall be given. In addition, every one should have at least one avocation chosen in accordance with circumstances and his own natural bent. The mother will do better work in her home if she have something outside the dreary routine of household cares, whether it be in the form of active reform or philanthropic work, or in some kind of literary employment. The weakest of all the weak arguments that are urged against woman suffrage and woman's participation in public affairs generally is that the home will suffer in consequence.

What is true of the wife and mother is true of every workman in whatever kind of pursuit. We are heretical enough to believe and rash enough to say that the work of many a college professor suffers from excessive specialism. It is hard for human nature to be conservative in the proper sense of that term. It is much easier to be an extremist of one kind or the other. Hence the majority of us are either "jiners" or are wasting our lives in puerile devotion to the dative case. The happy mean is to be sought. We recognize that there are serious diffculties in the way of securing this happy mean. To some, these difficulties are insurmountable. Machinery forces many workmen to be nothing but polishers of heels. To many of our brothers and sisters life is of necessity nothing but one long, fierce struggle for daily bread. Not until a radical change in our social system itself shall set free these "prisoners of poverty" and give to the heel polisher some leisure hours in which to cultivate his powers can these classes of society be other than they are. But many have the opportunity for choice. Many of us may approximate that broad development of our diverse powers which constitutes the truest manhood and womanhood and makes us the most efficient workers. We shall serve not only ourselves by such development of our powers, but also the world by giving it a better standard of work and workers than its present ideal.

A SIGN OF THE TIMES.

A brief report of a recent meeting of the Chicago Central Relief Association brings out some startling facts. "It was discovered, for example, that the expense of feeding families in one district and furnishing them with fuel averaged a trifle over one dollar a week for each of five hundred families, while in the Bohemian district the total expense for families fully as large and entirely dependent was sixty-two cents a week for each family."

One's mind is staggered in attempting to gain some conception of the conditions of living in which a "family" can be maintained for sixty-two cents per week. If not at the actual point of starvation it must be so near the border-land as to constitute a genuine terra incognita to all healthy, vigorous, normal life. What a grim comment upon our civilization that such living should be possible. A bare struggle for an existence—it can surely be nothing else; no place for life's brightness; no hint of poetry or song; a dull, cold, leaden-gray living, which is no more life than is the existence of the sponge or the microbe.

And yet this existence belongs to the more fortunate part of Chicago's destitute—those who have been helped by the Central Relief Association. For the thousands who are outside its possible benefactions, what can life hold? A stray meal now and then picked up at a saloon, a mission, or some door which has not closed itself against "tramps"; for the rest, the weary tramp through the streets and starvation more or less accelerated according to the plenty or scarcity of such meals. Is it any wonder that the saloons are thronged with wild-eyed, sore-hearted men, who, not having sufficient logic to recognize in the saloon itself the greatest cause of their misery, seek in drink oblivion from misery's haunting presence?

Our nineteenth century civilization is becoming a problem which may well stagger the stoutest heart, and it is all the more appalling because of the fact that it is a nineteenth century civilization; that nearly two thousand years have elapsed since the angels sang "peace on earth, good will to men," and we are no nearer the working out of that divine dictum in society.

But the most startling thing about the report in question came, if we are to trust the newspapers, in the form of a suggestion that "through the services of the agents of the Central Relief Association and the reduction of living expenses of workmen, an opportunity was now offered for a very profitable investment of capital when the necessary wages would not need to be more than a dollar or two a week instead of the ruinous prices hitherto prevailing."

We are not told who made this detestable suggestion, but we are glad to find recorded that it "did not receive the attention that its far-reaching import would require." "Far-reaching" indeed. So far-reaching that it goes down to the very foundation of our free institutions and threatens to set up on our shores the serfdom of Europe in the middle ages. So far-reaching that it points to the establishment of a worse form of slavery than the one abolished a quarter of a century ago. In the old slavery it was to the personal interest of the Master, whether or not he were a humane man, to see that his slaves were properly housed and fed. A man, though a slave, represented money and must be protected as was one's other property.

In the new slavery a man represents nothing. If one falls by the way there are others to fill his place. It is not the duty of his master to see that he is clothed and fed. He is given the grinding wage of "one or two dollars per week" and left to feed, clothe and house himself.

Think, too, of the discrimination against American workmen implied in the suggestion that capital be invested and men of another nationality employed because they can live so much more cheaply. We do not believe in race discrimination in the industrial field, but when such invidious distinctions are even hinted at it is high time that "America for Americans" became our watchword.

What place for comfort? What place for education? What place for brightness and joy? What place for morality and religion? God keep us from the day when capital and labor will be so remorselessly pitted each against the other. We cannot believe that day will ever come, although we acknowledge that the signs of the time are anything but cheering. Still, it must be that God has a future for our nation, and that it shall find the way to settle these problems in the interests of righteousness before the right to that future be forfeited.

Surely we need a campaign for Christian citizenship, not only against the saloon, but against all injustice, greed, oppression and unrighteousness.

No nation can be established by blood, and "the hire of the laborers . . . which is kept back by fraud, crieth, and the cries are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth" as truly now as in the days of James.

Doubtless employer and employed could find greater economy and simplicity of living both possible and beneficial; but doubtless, also, concession on the part of the one should accompany demand from the other.

If the gulf between the palace and the cottage continues to widen until the cottage becomes of necessity a hovel, there will be found a way to bridge the chasm, though it be a lurid way. It rests largely with the church of Christ to say whether that way shall "be by evolution rather than by revolution."

PROHIBITION VERSUS HIGH LICENSE.

The W. C. T. U. has gone where the enemy is, and proposes to destroy its legislative ramparts. The question now remains as to mode of warfare. There are but four courses possible to the law: To let the liquor traffic alone; to regulate it; to go into partnership with it; to prohibit it. The first course is advocated by no one, and may be dropped from consideration. The second and third are usually associated together, and are very mistakenly assumed to be identical. Let it be distinctly understood that the restrictions usually combined with a license system are so far from being an inherent part of the system, that they are mere accidental accessories and objections to the system and in no sense objections to these restrictions. Given a certain number of saloons in a city, and Prohibitionists are willing to join in a movement which shall close those saloons nights and Sundays, diminish them by regulations which limit their number according to the ratio of the population, make their existence depend upon the consent of those in whose neighborhood they are to be established, and secure laws prohibiting the sale to minors. All of these items are prohibition as far as they go, and, while the Prohibitionist is not satisfied, he considers them better than no restriction, and will assist in passing and enforcing such laws. The difficulty is that the advocate of high license, which is the chief substitute now urged against prohibition, always assumes that the advantages which come from such subsidiary measures are the result of high license, pure and simple. Such restrictions in and by themselves we heartily favor, but they are too dearly gained if they are accompanied with license, high or low. To the license system we are forever opposed.

The liquor trade being what it is from a business standpoint—robbery from an ethical standpoint, a moral curse to the community—it follows that license is treason against God. "We cannot prohibit the liquor traffic, therefore let us tax it and make it pay part of the cost which it imposes upon the community" may be a legitimate argument for one who denies the existence of God, or that He reigns in the affairs of men. It is rank heresy for a Christian to suggest such a course until God acknowledges that He cannot subdue the rebellion against Him. When He who said "I have overcome the world," declares that He is forced to compromise with the devil, it will be time enough for us, His professed followers, to make terms with evil. Until then our only course is war to the death. While God is God, "there is nothing that a free nation ought to do that it cannot do."

But it has been urged, with some degree of plausibility, that high license is not subject to these objections, as it is in the nature of the case restrictive in its effects and is a step toward total prohibition.

Fortunately or unfortunately, these claims are no longer matters of conjecture or abstract speculation. We have given high license a full trial and know exactly what its effects are. The high license movement began in 1881 as a temperance measure, with such temperance leaders as John B. Finch, H. W. Hardy and others. It was at this time that Nebraska passed the Slocum law, and that state has been ever since an exemplification of the workings of high license. The idea of these temperance people was that high license would diminish the number of saloons, and hence, necessarily, it was supposed, diminish drinking. It was farther believed to be a step toward total prohibition. In the end all saloons were to be taxed out of existence. In 1889 statistics carefully gathered from forty-one high and thirty-eight low license cities showed that licenses in the former cities were five times as great as in the latter; that the number of saloons in the high license cities was only one-third as great as in the low license, but that the ratio of arrests to population was nearly the same in the two classes of cities, while the ratio of arrests for drunkenness to the total number of arrests was greater in the high license cities than in the low. The testimony of the temperance leaders who had honestly advocated the measure speaks for itself. John B. Finch said in 1885, "I now know I was terribly mistaken in my theories. Many of the delusions urged in defence of high license have been exploded by the trial of the law." H. W. Hardy, called "the father of high license," said that "high license increased the number of unlicensed drinking places"; and farther, "If ten saloons are making, clear, $1,000 each, and you tax each of them $1,000, it would leave them no profits at all; but if four dropped out, or went into partnership with four others, then they could pay $6,000 and make money again: for they save the expense of running four saloons. . . It (high license) does not lessen the drinks, or the curse, but heavily increases them. . . It procrastinates prohibition ten years. It is a whisky devil in temperance garb. We were deceived by it, or Nebraska would have prohibition today. The money serves as a bribe. Praying church-members vote for it just for the money."

Lack of room, not of material, forbids quoting many other similar testimonies.

COOPER UNION'S BIG SUFFRAGE MEETING.

[Too late for insertion in our Correspondence columns, this account of New York's great suffrage demonstration finds place in our editorial pages.]

One of the greatest gatherings that New York has ever seen assembled in the large hall of Cooper Union Tuesday evening, May 8, for equal suffrage. It was composed of the brightest and most intellectual of New York women, and when one looked around at the fine, earnest faces, alight with enthusiasm and purpose, one wondered how any force could resist them, and said at once: "These women know what they want, and mean to have it."

That grand flower of womanhood, beautiful in old age, queenly in her bearing in spite of her infirmity—Elizabeth Cady Stanton—met with an ovation from men and women that no one present can ever forget; the Rev. Dr. Henry M. Sanders, the first speaker, addressed the audience as "Fellow Citizens," which brought forth a storm of applause. He said he "believed in suffrage" as much as he did "in a mathematical truth"; that "it was based on justice and fair play, and the government should give a vote to every class that has the ability to exercise it with wisdom and honest purpose. We are not going to drag woman into the mire of politics, but ask her to help us lift politics out of the mire."

Mr. Gompers, President of the Federation of Labor, said: "I ask you, can any worse condition come if you give the ballot to women than exists at this moment? Women would never turn deaf ears to the helpless children in the sweat shops; organized labor has always demanded equal pay for equal work. You say that women cannot fight. Have you forgotten Joan of Arc? What of Molly Pitcher?"

Mrs. Stanton followed Mr. Gompers in one of her best speeches. A very storm of greeting broke forth over the entire house and continued for some time, after which she said: "They say women cannot fight. They have been the recipients of persecution, ridicule and jeers for fifty years and borne it unflinchingly. If that is not the best part of fighting, then I fail to see it. Do not tell me that suffrage is a privilege. It is the corner-stone of the Republic, and while the state has the right to regulate suffrage, it has no right to deny it to any American citizen. Women have school suffrage and sidewalk suffrage; they have voted on these questions and I cannot see that it has changed them any. The women of England have the suffrage largely. I have been a guest in many of their homes, and found it brought no discord but added harmony and peace. You say we would get what we want if we did not clamor so loudly for it. That reminds me of the clown in the classic fable who, when the archer had brought down the bird said he might have saved his arrow. The fall would have killed the bird."

Mrs. Stanton's daughter, Mrs. Blatch, followed her mother in one of the grandest bursts of eloquence that ever fell from the lips of man or woman; her powerful magnetism, her desperate earnestness as she pictured her own feelings, and those of every disfranchised woman, thrilled her audience to a tension that was almost pain.

A curious incident was that of a big, burly policeman, who seemed almost in a hypnotic state, as he unconsciously drew nearer and nearer the platform. As the beautiful woman flushed and quivered under the intensity of feeling which her subject inspired in her, his hand slowly stole toward his hat, which he most reverently removed, and his eyes were riveted on her face like that of the devotee on the face of his saint.

Two clerical gentlemen followed her, the Rev. John P. Peters. and the noted Catholic priest, Father Ducy. Henry George made a brief address and Mrs. Sarah Cowell Lemoyne read the following resolution:

Resolved, That we respectfully urge the delegates from the county of New York to the state constitutional convention, to exert their influence toward such amendment of the constitution as will place before the voters of this state the question of the enfranchisement of its women.

M. W. Ravenhill.

At the recent meeting of the Federated Woman's Clubs of Chicago, which I greatly enjoyed, the subject of woman's relation to industry was discussed in many phases by a representative from each organization. One thought invention would release and uplift labor. Another claimed that fair feeling and not philanthropy nor charity is what is wanted. Another demanded that woman's claim should be, equal work for equal wages as well as vice versa. A plea was made for a higher industrial education for women. Only one speaker did not want the ballot and she was quickly answered by the next. The legal relations of women in business were sharply and clearly discussed and no fault was found with Illinois laws as they relate to industrial women. Intemperance as a factor was not presented in the social phase and an opportunity neglected which was an omission greatly to be regretted.

Following is a query sent in recently by a white-ribboner: "Cannot On Duty suggest some plan by which temperance hotels may be placed side by side with the open bars that greet travelers at every stopping place?" On Duty could fill her column week after week with the various suggestions that might be made along this line, but this one thing is sure: When so-called and "professing" Christians and the people who "believe in" temperance but endure with most surprising content the presence of its opposite throughout the land, become truly Christian and truly temperance, full of zeal and good works—in place of being zeroes and well-wishers—then and then only will the cause of right be able to command the front ranks. Saloons build on the choice corners and honeycomb the thoroughfares. Their blood relations—hotels with bars—compel patronage by the ability given them to stand uncontested in the ways of travel.

An educated Indian gentleman, a graduate from one of the universities, said to an English friend: "Your government did not know what it was doing when it abolished the burning of wives on their husbands' funeral pyre. The fact is we were obliged as men to introduce that measure to prevent our wives from poisoning us." This is a beautiful side-light on the condition of things in the land of Buddha, and it is a sword that cuts both ways, for it not only reveals the cunning of bad men for their own safety, but shows the sort of husbands they must be whom wives would poison if the penalty were not to be burnt alive.

Many a good woman who professes sympathy with temperance and all kindred good things is, for all the "influence of the times," behind them in her opinion of the beneficence of woman's ballot. "Would you vote if you could?" was a question put to such a woman—a sweet, loving little mother of a bright son and daughter. "Oh, how could I? I could never let myself come in contact with the rough men at the polls." Yet she thinks everything that can be done ought to be done to better the way of the world! Closely related to the above was the reason given by a young man for keeping the ballot out of woman's hands: "It would cost too much. We could never let women mix up with the roughs and toughs at the polls and extra polling places for the use of women would too greatly increase the expense of the elections." Truly, the character of such "reasons" would make one suspect that the opposition element was running out of arguments!

One of the things that most surprises an American in England is the length of time that elapses between the death and burial of friends. With us the third day is practically universal, and embalming occurs usually on the first, but here five or six days intervene and embalming is practically unknown except in the case of persons of distinction. The origin of such a custom would be interesting to ascertain; it is certainly most unhygienic and must in the course of generations have caused the death of countless numbers; it must also have increased the national sense of the terror of death and the heart-rending sorrow and depression that result as a rule from the departure of those bound to us by ties of kindred and companionship. The strong scientific impulse of this age, which has led to the introduction of cremation, will undoubtedly within the next half century revise the funeral customs so that less danger and less misery will be endured by the living on account of the departure of those they love.

On Duty.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

MICHIGAN ETCHINGS.

This is the time of spring house-cleaning, and we of Michigan are looking diligently for the "buffalo moth," that like some other things puts in its best work where it is the lightest. The lights of civilization, to my mind serve to bring out every detail of the dens of vice and traps full of iniquity. The trees are yet bare and leafless but we believe in the future foliage and fruit. Thus, in the moral world work on, with eyes fixed on the goal, buds, blossom and fruit.

One of our superintendents, Miss L. J. Newcomb, has been called to the department of expression and physical culture at Bethlehem, Pa., a seminary founded in 1749, and of wide sustained reputation. Miss Newcomb also has summer dates for two Chautauquas, one school of methods, one prohibition camp. A part of her time while at the seminary can be given to outsiders, application for dates made to J. Max Hark, D. D., Bethlehem, Pa.

The unions in fifth district are at work. They hold their district convention at Grand Rapids. All of us are full of prayers and sympathy for its bereaved president, Mrs. Benjamin.

The fourth district reports a county convention at Kalamazoo. The papers were upon "Love, the Mainspring of the Work," "The W. C. T. U. as a Home Protector," "Inheritance and Mistakes." Mrs. Webber, of Vicksburg, gave a résumé of the liquor business. Among many bright things she said: "The law has but one eye and it needs two, which in time it will have."

Mrs. F. L. Brown, who is the district president, gave a stirring address. She said, "Time writes records. Each individual makes his own. The battle is on, and God expects us to do our duty. With the wisdom and power of God our tracks remain; they have not been washed out, having been so firmly planted."

The first district report from Wyandotte says they observed Neal Dow day, had a speaker from Detroit and fine public meeting. This union held an all-day prayer-meeting election day, a blessed time. A saloon-keeper for mayor and a brewer for alderman were badly defeated. For the first time in ten years the saloon is without a representative in the council.

The state corresponding secretary has given ten dates to this district.

Denton held a Crusade meeting.

I will begin second district report with a county convention held at Temperance, so well attended each meeting could be properly called an overflow. Reports from twelve unions were given. Subjects of papers were: "The causes of intemperance," "Woman's influence in the destiny of nations," "Why I belong to the W. C. T. U." They were all excellent. Mrs. Stannard, district president, was present, also state superintendent of narcotics, Mrs. Bradley.

A gavel and block were presented to the presiding officer made of historic wood indeed. The block was from a desk of Mother Thompson donated in the rough by her. The gavel was a piece of the floor of Libby prison. Mrs. Rawson, an Ohio sister, made the presentation speech. The work was the gift of the unions. This county president, Mrs. Lockwood, for six years has been their leader. Among the greetings was one from the citizens, given by Mr. Hitchcock. A gold medal contest was held the last evening, Miss Sadie Carrico, successful contestant.

Ann Arbor is the Mecca to which the eyes of white-ribboners turn now, for the call for annual meeting is out and the clans will gather third week in May. Their work there is so fortunate as to have two of our district presidents and one county president as residents. Mrs. Moorehouse read a paper at the Neal Dow meeting at which the collection was divided between the World's W. C. T. U. and the local union. A telegram was sent to Gen. Dow, 1 Thess. 1: 2, 3.

Hillsdale county convention was held at Cambria in third district. Whenever we write this or see it in print we remember it is the home of our beloved Mary Lathrap, to whom in these days all hearts have gone out as she has stepped aside from the line of march and been called to halt "for a little." The work goes on, and from the point of her pen she is most helpful.

At Jackson, also, lives Mrs. Thurman, who has been doing good work in Branch county. At Algansee union she obtained five new members. At Dorrance union her lecture was said to be the first of its kind in fifteen years; two active and five honorary members added.

Call for county convention of Calhoun is out; to be held at Albion. Each union has been asked to furnish a paper on "What interests your union most?" "What department does your union consider most important?"

Seventh district:—Mrs. Jennie McClurkin has filled acceptably nine consecutive dates. Lapeer union held their annual dinner, and raised forty dollars. Smith union held a medal contest, and had a grand prohibition rally.

Eighth district:—The home of Mrs. Weeks, who has visited eight counties in the state as L. T. L. lecturer; held fifty-two meetings; organized a Y at Marshall; held sixteen extra children's meetings. Greenville union held a social in the interest of Evelyn Industrial Institute. At Laingsburg a prohibition W. C. T. U. was held in honor of Neal Dow.

Ninth district:—The land of the arbutus. Big Rapids had two lectures by Helen Gougar; they are to hold a franchise contest soon. Manistee has distributed 19,805 pages of literature. Ludington held a yellow tea and netted fifteen dollars. The new union at Pentwater has six honoraries; the secretary writes, "We are quite enthusiastic. I thank God for not bottled up but flowing enthusiasm."

Tenth district:—Bay City unions are agitating the matter of trying to influence the managers of the agricultural society to exclude liquors and gambling from the county fair. Pincorning reports a patient for alcohol cure treatment. West Branch is circulating a petition to keep children off the streets after nine o'clock. West Bay City held a special temperance meeting helped by the pastor of the M. E. church and Adjutant Hart, of the Salvation Army. Sisters, this army work is quite like ours; if any corps is near you attend their meetings, help by word, influence and money. Fifteen new members added to this union as a result of those days' work, six added since.

Eleventh district:—Four ladies visited the Cheboygan saloons Sunday evening. Two were running in full blast. Complaints were made; arrests followed; hearing was had and adjourned twice. Very likely it will go to circuit court. Complaint was also made to marshal for non-fulfillment of duty.

Twelfth district:—Mrs. E. N. Law, president, is addressing large and enthusiastic audiences. Gospel temperance meetings are held every Sunday afternoon at Escanaba. The press department showed sixty items for last month. Their latest effort—the opening of a woman's exchange. Menominee gives the people reason to believe the W. C. T. U. is in town. At Iron River and Stambaugh, where Mrs. Law held meetings, sixty members were added to the union; Loyal Temperance Legion organized at Baraga. Mrs. Baumgartner, at Jacobsville, still holds the fort. She has the children meet at her own home (the boarding house) and clears the dining room to give them a place of meeting. The sentiment is growing in favor of the prohibition of the liquor traffic.

Our L. T. L. work is in "the corner" in the state paper, but all over in the big state. New Legion at Holly, their local name is "The Wide Awakes." Detroit Company L has graduated a class of nine, six of whom were boys. Class motto, "Aim High," class colors, blue and white. Arrangements have been made for a district L. T. L. convention to be held in the summer. First and second prizes are offered for essays on these subjects: "Is Alcohol Necessary as a Medicine?" and "Prince Nicotine." The L. T. L. room is finished and has been formally presented to National Temperance Hospital; money being left will go towards the endowment of this room, which will do so much for poor children.

Sixth district purposely held to the last, so as to close with their grand convention just held at Milford. Reports from Lansing: A large public meeting, speech of Evangelist Ranton was applauded by all parties. Fenton union has been very busy this winter in sending clothing and literature to Northern Michigan. Rev. Mr. Cluff, an Episcopal clergyman, gave an address in his own church at a union temperance meeting; subject, "What is Personal Liberty?" They have also held an apron sale, receiving them from thirty-eight states, the historic one from Virginia made from a piece of Barbara Freitchie's gown—the proceeds towards building a summer home at Long Lake.

The district convention was held at Milford, quite a full delegation. We were welcomed by the church, local union and a greeting from the state officers; a county president, Mrs. Bowerman, very fully voiced the response. The annual message of the president, Mrs. Shepherd, was replete with wisdom and suggestions. Each delegate seemed impressed with the text of program, "Ye are my witnesses." Reports on all lines either given or sent. There were two papers. The one on franchise, the only failure, not being sent, but Mrs. Dawson, of Pontiac, most acceptably filled the half hour—a live woman who has come to us from New York. The other paper, "Why?" were the different reasons that our work is not always perfect, and was given by state recording secretary.

The resolutions rang with no uncertain sound upon politics, purity of the press, ballot for women, indorsing Mrs. Carse and work, and the cigarette law. The speaker on the last evening was Mrs. Reed, of Detroit. Her address was most helpful, as were her talks all through.

TENNESSEE.

WILLING WORKERS.

So many good reports of work done have come to me the past month that I scarcely know how to condense into the space allowed.

Knoxville, through Mrs. Fitzgerald, reports good work along several lines, chief of which is their kindergarten work. A teacher, whose salary is paid by the W. C. T. U., has been employed. The work started in October, and has grown in importance and power for good ever since. The teacher, a sweet spirited, gifted W. C. T. U. woman, has a power for good over the children in her care that is wonderful. An entertainment given for the purpose of raising funds to carry on this work realized a nice little sum, besides being the means of getting some good prohibition sentiment before the public.

Their social purity work, under the superintendence of Mrs. Wright, has been productive of so much good that they feel that if the Knoxville W. C. T. U. had done no other thing they would have reason to congratulate themselves. Hearing that the city council had decided to abolish the office of police matron, they sent in a petition, signed by seven hundred of the best and most influential of the business men and citizens in the city, for its continuance, and the office was retained. At the suggestion of the superintendent of railroad work, over a thousand cards, with Scripture texts printed on them and tied each with a little knot of white ribbon into which were woven sixty prayers, were sent to railroad employés as an Easter greeting. Among their honorary members is a Cumberland Presbyterian pastor, whom they reckon as one of the most active and efficient working members in their union.

From Johnson City comes a report of the second annual convention of the first district, which was held in Jonesboro some weeks since. The work of the convention was good all the way through, the program being well gotten up and ably carried out. The devotional exercises conducted by Mrs. Rhea the first night of the meeting gave them a spiritual uplift that lasted through the convention. The address of welcome and response and the president's address, "What of the Night?" were all replete with good things, and the music and recitations well selected and delivered. Mrs. Wilson's parliamentary drill was well received, and her address on the Crusade all the more interesting that she herself was one of the original Crusaders.

Mr. Hickey, fraternal delegate from the Y. P. S. C. E., made an interesting talk, and Col. Cheirs delivered an address at the evening session that every voter should hear. Officers elected were: Mrs. Simpson, president; Miss Lucy Hardin, secretary; Mrs. J. J. Adams, treasurer, and Mrs. R. D. Wilson, organizer.

Springfield union, as reported by Miss Mary Anderson, was organized last November by ladies sent out by the East Nashville W. C. T. U., and has been prospering ever since. They have taken up work along several lines, including social or parlor meetings, mothers' meetings, prison work, etc. Their prison work has been interesting and they think much good has resulted. But their best work the past winter was along charitable lines.

For the purpose of raising money for this work they held a bazaar, to which each member contributed or donated some work done by her own hands. This was so successful that almost every article made was sold, and quite a good little sum realized. They also had a lecture by Mr. J. B. Keeble, of Nashville, the proceeds of which were donated to them. After the lecture the young people of the union were entertained by Mrs. Garner, the president. They also had Mrs. Adams with them in the winter.

A candy pull was given recently which brought them in a nice little sum. Preparations are being made to plant chrysanthemums for a chrysanthemum show in November. The treasurer reports having received, exclusive of membership dues, fifty dollars. Expenditures thirty-five dollars.

Dickson reports being much hindered in the work by sickness in the family of the president, but since this is over they hope to do better. Three of their members have been circulating petitions for a scientific temperance instruction law. They hope soon to institute a series of mothers' meetings.

The Morristown W. C. T. U. has been doing good work along several lines, though they have been hindered some by the bad weather, and a long series of protracted meetings detracted from direct interest in W. C. T. U. work for a short time.

They have done good work in the social purity department, through the distribution of literature, the holding of mothers' meetings, etc. At their last parlor meeting, which was well attended, they had a speech by one of their honorary members, on the rapid growth of the W. C. T. U. in the past twenty years, and the good influence of the organization on that community. This was followed by a recitation "The Women who Went to the Field."

At their Neal Dow celebration they had an interesting program, which was well carried out before a good audience.

Tullahoma reports that their meetings were interesting and well attended until the bad weather set in, when they were smaller. They are working along several lines, and hope to be able to report good results later.

Ripley union reports: "Was organized by Mrs. Adams in December with five lady members. Have since increased to eight." They have eight saloons and four churches. Have not much to report in the way of good results yet, but hope to be able to do so soon.

Cookeville, another new union, is still alive, with seven active and two honorary members, though they send no special report in the letter written me by their secretary, Mrs. Chapin. Hope to have a good report from them soon.

Milan reports: "Was organized in November by Mrs. Adams, with four active and two honorary members. They meet twice a month, and now number fourteen members. Have had one public meeting in which much interest was manifested. They have distributed some literature, have subscribed for THE UNION SIGNAL and Outlook. They have a column in their local paper, and are circulating our petition. They are considering the matter of taking up the departments of franchise and social purity.

Harriman reports keeping "the noiseless tenor of their way," and doing nothing startling. They have recently held a Demorest medal contest. They celebrated Neal Dow's birthday with a good program well executed. They hold their weekly meetings quite regularly, only one having been omitted. At their last meeting an interesting Bible reading was given by Rev. W. Olinger, pastor Congregational church. At this meeting they elected a superintendent of franchise, and filled two vacant departments. They have a very interesting and promising union among the colored people.

Their social purity department, under the superintendency of Dr. Caroline G. Kellar, is not excelled by that of any local union in the state. Dr. Kellar has organized a White Cross society among the young men which meets regularly twice a month. At a recent meeting of this society a young lawyer gave an interesting talk on "A Young Man's Influence on Posterity." She has also organized a White Shield society among the young ladies, the Y. W. C. T. U. taking charge of it. They hold their meetings once a month. In addition, they have a social meeting every month, when they invite the Knights of the White Cross. This social purity department has distributed much good literature. With the assistance of the lady superintendent of their public schools, a rare Christian woman, they have organized White Shield societies among the girls of the public schools, with a membership of one hundred and eighteen children under ten taking the children's pledge. The gentleman superintendent of public schools took the boys, fifty-four in number, not including the primaries, and organized them. The colonel in charge of the military department of the university, detailed one of the cadets, a member of the White Cross society, to drill them. Before they were thus organized Dr. Kellar gathered the boys into her home once a week after school. She was doing a good work for them when it was taken up by the school. They have also a social purity department in their colored W. C. T. U., under an earnest colored woman, which is doing much good.

Mrs. Adams is still in our state doing good work. She has delivered twenty-one lectures since my last letter, and organized two new unions. One at Dunlap, in Sequachie Valley, Mrs. E. J. Thaxter, president, and one at Dayton, Mrs. Sarah A. Chase, president. And while results may seem meager, I am sure much good has been done in an aroused public sentiment.

TEXAS.

The last issue of the Texas White Ribbon is unusually interesting. Occupying a conspicuous place on the first page is an article by a World's Fair visitor, entitled "A Peep into Rest Cottage."

On the next page is a long, interesting letter from the former editor, Mrs. Jennie Dixon. She writes of the love and kindness she has received from the union in Houston, and of the work of those busy women. They have two L. T. L's actively at work. One has given a Demorest medal contest, which was very successful, and the other is devising ways and means of sending a patient to the drink cure.

The work that union did to secure the money to pay for Mrs. Hoffman's lecture was capital advertising and could be imitated anywhere. First, they had a lecture by Dr. Lampkin and collected eighteen dollars. Then they had an "experience social." After a fine program of music and recitations, they gathered round the contribution basket, deposited their dollars, and gave many amusing experiences in earning them. In all they received twenty-two dollars and fifty cents.

Mrs. Tracy, president of the Houston W. C. T. U., and former state reporter, has gone on a lengthy visit to Washington, D. C.

Wells Point called another election and prohibition won despite the "schemes and tricks" of its opposers.

Mrs. Sweeney visited Rockdale and assisted by Mr. James and Miss Angus organized a union of fifty-six members and a Loyal Temperance Legion of seventy.

Mrs. Becca Calhoun's future address will be Longview, Texas. It is a great loss to Fort Worth, but she will no doubt do just as good work for scientific temperance in her new home. Fort Worth union was greatly benefited by Mrs. Hoffman's lectures, many new members joined and a large collection was secured. The local papers refused to publish an account of the lectures.

Galveston W. C. T. U. finds itself "braced up" both financially and in increased membership by Mrs. Hoffman's lecture on the "Worth of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union."

Hillsboro union was organized with seventeen members. The recent visits of Mrs. Stoddard and Mrs. Hoffman have increased it to ninety-one with seventeen honoraries. Prison work is successfully carried on, the ministers heartily coöperating with the women. Prisoners are supplied with good literature and Bibles. Nine have signed the pledge. Four churches have agreed to use unfermented wine.

The thirteenth annual convention of the Texas W. C. T. U. will be held at Taylor, June 15, 1894, continuing three days.

Mrs. Harrison, president of the central division, has been very ill at Fort Worth. Dr. Kellar, superintendent of hygiene and heredity, is treating her.

Mrs. Stoddard spoke at Brooklyn Heights, also at Door of Hope Mission in Fort Worth. It was a much fatigued woman who spoke at the last place, it being the third public address that day. But God blessed it as shown by results, many signed the pledge, one throwing away his pipe and tobacco.

At Weatherford she addressed a public meeting in the C. P. church, also three hundred students in the Methodist college; organized a good union. An aged saint, "Grandma Williams," aged eighty-nine, full of faith and zeal, was received into the union. "Sisters," she said to the members, "I prayed better and easier this morning because I had on this little white ribbon; it spoke to me of purity and love." Mrs. Stoddard organized a new union at Granberry composed of fifteen earnest women. Mrs. Baker took her over to Thorp's Springs in time for chapel service in Add-Rau university where she addressed about four hundred, and upon invitation returned and organized a grand Y of between fifty and seventy-five charter members. There are students there from all parts of the state who are sure to become centers of influence wherever they go.

An electric storm threatening a cyclone did not keep the people from church in Stephenville, where the union was reorganized.

A Sabbath spent in Comanche was utilized by the union in securing two addresses from the state president. Large audiences attended, and much interest was manifested.

Neal Dow's birthday was celebrated by the Dublin union. The women were gratified at having Mrs. Stoddard with them. Three ministers and several ladies took part. The music the union furnished was good. The women are watchful, and the new local option law is being well enforced.

The executive committee meeting in Denison was a very earnest one. Many plans were discussed and adopted for the furtherance of our work. It was decided to create a "Faithful Worker's Rest Fund," for use as the state executive committee shall determine, to care for any faithful state workers who may drop down in the harness and are not able to provide for their needs.

Mrs. Acheson attended the executive meeting for the first time since she resigned the presidency in 1891.

Mrs. R. H. Hayes, of Galveston, president of the Equal Suffrage Association of Texas, delivered an address in the Christian church in San Antonio, April 26.

The L. T. L. of West End San Antonio had a flower contest on April 28 among the boys and girls under twelve. A pink geranium was given to the best speaker among the girls, and a red one to the boys. Jessie Gullidge won the pink one and Ernest Morris the red one. The L. T. L. on Prospect Hill has been reorganized.

PENNSYLVANIA POINTS.

"I am glad to think I am not bound to make the world go right, but only to discover and to do with willing heart the work that God appoints; I will trust in Him that He can hold His own, and I will take His will above the work He sendeth me to be my chiefest good."

Such a budget of good things as I have received! Luzerne and Lackawanna counties held their mid-year conventions together in Scranton. It was a most enjoyable and profitable meeting. A large delegation from Wayne county responded to an invitation to be present and Wyoming county was also represented. Clergymen and prominent Prohibitionists from several cities and towns in both counties came and added much to the interest of the occasion. Mrs. D. B. Hand, of Lackawanna, and Mrs. C. H. Cool, shared the honors of the chair between them. Mrs. C. D. Simpson and Rev. Pierce, of Scranton, welcomed the convention, and they were responded to by Mrs. B. Downing, ex-president of Luzerne county. Mrs. Furay read an interesting paper on, "The Outlook"; George Johnston, a most instructive paper on, "Temperance in the Sunday-school"; Mrs. Lance, on "Franchise." Mrs. Holvey gave a report of the World's and National Conventions. Interesting discussions were held on the various departments of our work, and words of commendation and congratulation were spoken.

Miss Henrietta G. Moore delivered the address of the evening, and she also lectured at Wilkesbarre and West Pittston to the delight of all her hearers. Miss Moore is a speaker of rare ability, and unions securing her services cannot but be benefited by the enthusiasm she inspires.

West Pittston has been holding monthly parlor meetings all winter, with an increased membership and deepened interest as the result. Luzerne county W. C. T. U., in connection with the prohibition clubs, is united in an effort to sow their county "knee deep with prohibition literature." The outlook is most encouraging.

Carlisle union, Northumberland county, held a successful parlor meeting at the home of Mrs. Dr. Reed, of Dickenson College, on March 6. A very elaborate program, consisting of music, readings, addresses and recitations, was well received by the large audience present, and a number of new names added. This union also celebrated Neal Dow's birthday. The Loyal Temperance Legion is prospering and temperance sentiment in Carlisle is growing.

Chester county is all aglow with temperance enterprise and enthusiasm. Remonstrance work is at present claiming the undivided attention of our workers, and the women in many localities are determined to publish the names of petitioners for license, together with the names of bondsmen. The Neal Dow memorial meetings, held all over the county by the unions, have met with pronounced public favor from both friends and enemies of prohibition. In one section several unions combined and held a splendid ovation in a public hall, with addresses, readings, prohibition music, etc. In other places attractive parlor meetings were held, and the Neal Dow Memorial Number of THE UNION SIGNAL and Souvenir Cards distributed; congratulatory telegrams were sent to Portland.

One of the unions has just opened new headquarters with a seating capacity for three hundred persons. It is handsomely furnished with Brussels carpet, organ, pictures and the stage contains a beautiful curtain with the National motto at the top.

The semi-annual convention was held at Downington and was a wide-awake occasion. Mrs. Hammer was present and conducted a question-box very ably. Mrs. O. P. Amies was also present and presented juvenile work in an introductory to a school of methods. Mrs. Ella M. Gordon, county president, has been quite ill, but is now able to be about again. The Kenneth Square union has managed a course of lectures for the past three years, and this year cleared fifty dollars which will be used to pay off the last installment on their pledge to the Temple. The press department of this county is doing good methodical work. Chester county proposes to know neither weariness nor discouragement in the work.

Butler county is on the "onward march." Mrs. A. M. Rice, of Petrolia, was employed to visit the unions in the county and as a result three new unions were organized and four old ones were resuscitated. She also organized Loyal Temperance Legions in nearly every place. She was accompanied and assisted by the county president. Butler, the county seat, is wholly prohibitory, not a single license being granted—so this city with its eight thousand inhabitants is without license—only seven applications were granted in the county and every wholesale application was refused. When the court opened the Butler W. C. T. U. called a daily prayer-meeting which continued to the close, the last day being one of praise. This union has just erected a handsome fountain on the public square at a cost of about one hundred and forty dollars, part of which was solicited from the public and fifty dollars of which was donated by the union.

This union also engaged Mrs. Emma P. Ewing to give a series of cooking lessons—an enterprise which proved popular as well as profitable and sixty dollars were cleared. The Butler South Side union won the banner for holding meetings—fifty having been held—besides a regular sale, an experience social, a spelling bee, etc. Very efficient work is done by the superintendent of railroad work, Mrs. Steen. Prospect union is getting ready to hold a gold medal contest. D. H. Burwell spent a week with this union with the most gratifying results. He also went to a number of other places, everywhere having crowded houses. He has been recalled by the county Prohibition committee for a month's work. The Butler union expects to pay the remainder of its one hundred dollar pledge to the Temple within the year.

Over fifty copies of Monthly Advices have been furnished the public school teachers by three unions of this county.

The Franklin Y has now over one hundred members including the honorary. They recently held a "market" and cleared over twenty-five dollars.

Mrs. A. M. Rice, recently added to the Lecture Bureau of our state, has been doing most excellent work. In Butler county she organized four unions and nine L. T. L's. In Lawrence county she visited thirteen unions; increased the membership of each and organized two new Y. W. C. T. U's; visited the Foxburg union and added seven new names; also to St. Petersburg organized a Y and an L. T. L. with fifty members; at Shippenville an L. T. L. of thirty members. Mrs. Rice gives "chalk talks" to the children, and her work is very satisfactory—her lectures being highly spoken of.

Mrs. A. M. Holvey is "on the wing" the most of her time, and has been recalled to a number of places.

Sharon union (Mercer county) celebrated Neal Dow day.

Smethport union held a very successful parlor social and also succeeded in getting sermons preached on Sabbath observance.

Mrs. R. J. George, state superintendent of physical culture, sends out a most excellent circular letter on her department which deserves the widest circulation.

ALABAMA.

A FEW GLEANINGS.

We are in the midst of an evangelistic meeting of great power, conducted by Messrs. Munhall and Birch, which promises great good to our people and we hope will further our cause, as we hear they utter no uncertain sound on the temperance subject.

At the reunion of the Confederate veterans in Birmingham, April 25 and 26, the W. C. T. U. had barrels of ice water on six of the principal street corners. The barrels were painted white, and lettered "W. C. T. U. free ice water." Crowds of people testified to the excellence of this practical demonstration of cold water principles. The local union also served lunch two days, and added a neat sum to their treasury.

The Y. W. C. T. U. of Birmingham, though only a few months old, is a source of pride not only to its director, Mrs. W. L. Murdoch, but to every member of the local union. It is well officered, and is laying strong foundations for future usefulness. We believe these bright girls will exert a wide influence in the social circle of the city, where now the punch-bowl is considered the proper thing.

From Greensboro we have cheering news. A sermon was preached to the Y's in the Presbyterian church by Rev. J. M. P. Otts, a noted divine and author of several notable volumes. The address was a grand one, sparkling with happy and inspiring strength and helped on our work as nothing else could have done. Sermon, music and all were a free gift to us and our cause.

I have heard of only one Neal Dow celebration in our state, but it is not because he is not known and his work for prohibition unappreciated. Several Demorest medal contests have been held lately and numerous gospel temperance meetings are keeping the temperance fires burning.

MRS. JULIA H. MCBRYDE,
State Reporter, Mobile.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE Oregon state convention meets at Salem (the capital) on May 19. On Sunday, the 20th, it is expected that several of the pulpits will be lent to the W. C. T. U. leaders. This will be almost a new feature in Oregon.

A FORMAL notification of its intention to prosecute all persons engaged in unlawful dealing in Pembina, N. D., has been published by the local W. C. T. U., a plucky union which is standing nobly for enforcement of the law.

A SILVER medal contest was held in connection with its Neal Dow celebration by Hudson, N. C., union. April 6, at the gold medal contest, a letter of thanks was read from the Grand Old Man in response to the message of the union.

GOOD literature, including back numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL and any religious and reform reading matter will be thankfully received and faithfully distributed among the poor whites and the freedmen of the South if sent to Rev. J. B. Mitchell, home missionary, Westfield, Ind.

A UNION SIGNAL reader, noticing the advertisements of alcoholic liquors in prominent ladies' papers, makes the apt suggestion, that every white-ribboner send in her protest to the publishers of these papers against such advertisements. Let the publishers' desks be heaped with letters objecting to the use of their columns in such interests, and the result must surely be suppression of so objectionable a feature.

THE scientific instruction department of Illinois is to be congratulated in the leadership of Mrs. Mary L. Baimback, of Odell, who is now especially pushing a conquest in the state teachers' institutes through the lectures of Dr. Clara Shaw, who has been a public school-teacher. Now from the physician's standpoint, she carries the total abstinence gospel into the nation's citadel—the school-house. A better scientific instruction law and better enforcement must result for Illinois.

MRS. HAUSER of India, reports a busy month in the new year. A number of members for the "India union" were secured at the North India Methodist Mission Conference in Lucknow. Evidence concerning the opium traffic was given before the Royal Opium Commission. She has visited the union at Tundla, the temperance society of young Christian students at Agra, and at Ajmere two unions were formed, an English one of fourteen members and another of native Christians, numbering thirty.

ARKANSAS' recent state W. C. T. U. convention is pronounced by a correspondent to be "the best meeting we ever had." The suffrage convention followed immediately and was also a great success.

THE Willard union and the Phœnix union—the two unions of Phœnix, Arizona,—are waging active war against the saloons and houses of ill repute in their city. Their Dow day celebration was an unqualified success. They are also circulating a petition to the press for a higher moral standard.

A LETTER received from a friend at Maple City, Kan., bears a list of names for the Polyglot Petition, although the lady wrote "she had not seen a copy, but learning of it, desired her own name and those of friends to be attached." Who will manifest like interest by forwarding names to Miss Alice Briggs, office secretary, World's W. C. T. U., the Temple, Chicago, Ill.?

A VERY interesting institute was held by the W. C. T. U. at Fairfield, Neb., last month, Mrs. J. N. Gill, of Edgar, presiding. Excellent papers were read, one in particular, entitled, "The Liquor Traffic's Drummers," showed conclusively that those who are not putting forth every effort in drumming recruits for temperance are beating the drum for the enemy. The ministers of the different churches encouraged the workers by their presence, and gave practical aid.

THAT the temperance committee of the Y. P. S. C. E. at the Memorial Ave. M. E. church, Philadelphia, is a stirring one, is proved by its leaflet, and certainly must be by its works. The striking pamphlet is ablaze with typographical illustrations, setting forth the platform of the committee, the watchword, and pledges of the Y. P. S. C. E. and the men's National Christian Prohibition Union. The whole is a suggestive appeal for temperance legislation to the Christian voter.

THE fifth district of Michigan has just held a most successful annual meeting at Grand Rapids, and Mrs. A. S. Benjamin was unanimously elected president for the fifteenth time. Coming from her great sorrow in the loss of her husband, she bravely takes up her life work. In a personal letter she says: "I never can even think of a reply to the hundreds of letters of sympathy and tenderness and love that have come to me from all over this land and the lands across the sea as well. In the garden of my heart you have sowed amaranths and forget-me-nots that will bloom long as life shall last."

A LARGE company of friends gathered, April 23, to tender their felicitations to Mrs. Sarah M. Perkins, Cleveland, Ohio, whose three score years and ten, though spent in arduous and untiring service, sit lightly upon her, and she bids fair to round out a full hundred of useful years. Mrs. Perkins received her friends with her daughter, Emma Maud, the brilliant professor of Latin at the Woman's College, and the Misses Case. Gifts and flowers in rich profusion were the silent sponsors of absent friends. Two of Mrs. Perkins' nieces presented her with seventy roses and seventy carnations, respectively. Letters and telegrams were also received from friends living in distant cities and states.

THE Meriden, Conn., W. C. T. U. commemorates its crystal anniversary by issuing a history of its organization during the past twenty years. This forms a handsome brochure and furnishes most interesting reading to white-ribboners. A résumé of the work of the society is given and tributes are paid to the efficient workers in the ranks and to the helpful friends of the cause. Prominent among the latter are Hon. I. C. Lewis, whose gift of five thousand dollars proved his confidence in the work of the union and insured its prosperity. His portrait adorns the book with that of Rev. James H. Chapin, through whose earnest request, Dr. Dio Lewis visited Meriden and started the union which was permanently organized April 14, 1874.

MRS. MARY D. TOMLINSON, National superintendent of parlor meetings, opened her house in Plainfield, N. J., recently for a suffrage address. She sent out four hundred beautiful cards of invitation, many of them to ladies who "had all the rights they wanted," and had never given a thought to the subject. The large parlors were well filled; the devotional exercises conducted by the officers of the local W. C. T. U.; then came the address, which was followed by several questions by the ladies, and were answered by the speaker. Then came the offering for the cause and tea and wafers. It was all as beautiful as the bright May day, and seemed to be thoroughly enjoyed. Several ladies united with the union, and several names were also given to MRS. Florence Howe Hall, president of the state suffrage association. Temperance women do not always realize the importance of meetings as helps to the cause.

FINDLEY'S LAKE, N. Y., union, after six years of helpful work in different lines, feels the need of headquarters of its own. The opportunity is at hand and the best wishes of white-ribboners everywhere are with them in their commendable endeavor.

MRS. MARY LOVE, in an interesting letter from Parkersburg, W. Va., gives among others the following items of news:

"For eighteen months Parkersburg has been my headquarters and I have not found in all my travels a more difficult field of labor. The amendment defeat was a triumph of the enemy over the friends of prohibition. A most successful mission was held in February by Mr. Woolley, under the auspices of the Baptist Young People's Union.

"I visited Grafton, Fairmount, Palatine and Prunty Town during the winter; found the Grafton union and Y's actively engaged in W. C. T. U. work. Fairmount and Palatine are still undaunted in the battle. Prunty Town has no union, but by invitation I attended a meeting of the Good Templars. I spoke five times in the interest of Christian temperance work and twice to the boys in the reform school, and was led to praise God for the institution which is compulsorily educating the refractory boys of our state.

"Our district convention met last Friday, April 27, at St. Mary's, the county seat of Pleasants county, on the Ohio river. Your correspondent was the speaker of the evening, and our district president read an able paper on social purity, titled "The fathers, where are they?" St. Mary's is blessed; has a W. C. T. U. of thirty members and a Y of twenty-two, who meet in the homes fortnightly. Both organizations clustered around the platform in the evening and rendered good and inspiring music."

SUNDAY REST BILL.

The National Sunday Rest Bill (Blair's bill) has now been introduced both in the Senate and House, not with a view to early action, but that being on the calendar it may be the sooner reached next winter. A great number of petitions for its passage have been presented and it is desirable that all petitions not yet sent on be retained till next winter or put in care of Mrs. M. E. Catlin, 1736 13th St., Washington, D. C.

Allow me to urge that every state, yes, every local union, push the petition work this summer and not wait till the rush of fall work and bad weather and roads prevent, for we must have an immense petition, and every ward and country district must be canvassed and it will take much time.

The Sunday Rest Bill for the District of Columbia, which was introduced in both houses and referred to the District commissioners, was by them referred to the attorney for the District who reported the bill unobjectionable but unnecessary. Your superintendent has memorialized the commissioners in behalf of our National organization, and Mrs. La Fetra for that of the District, and some other local effort has been made to secure a favorable report to Congress. If this is secured, this important bill is likely to pass, and I hope our state organizations will be moved also to send memorials promptly, care Mrs. La Fetra or Mrs. Catlin.

ANOTHER LEAFLET CHANCE.

Many have taken advantage of our liberal offer for manuals, but the time for which the offer was made has nearly expired and we believe the majority of unions have overlooked it. I am anxious to keep the subject before the people and to reduce my great stock of leaflets and set them to work, so I hereby renew and improve the offer. Till November 1, whenever desired, either a twenty-five cent manual or a superintendent's outfit will be sent free with each dollar order for leaflets, on twenty-five cents worth of petitions and Blair's bills (each ten cents a hundred) may be substituted for the manual, or seventy-five cents may be sent for a dollar's worth of leaflets and petitions at catalogue prices. If you intend ordering, you can drop a postal and receive a catalogue and so make your own selection. There are nearly forty leaflets and it is hard for me to choose to meet local needs. No. 3 is gone, 22 nearly so and 45 is low, otherwise the stock is full. The majority of them are four-paged and fifteen cents a hundred, several two paged and ten cents, others higher. All should be ordered of the undersigned, bills, postal notes and even silver come as safely as stamps and are more acceptable.

Please cut this out, read to your union and preserve it, and let us make this year's work the best of all for the preservation of the Sabbath now so dangerously menaced throughout our land.

THE CRUSADER IN GREAT BRITAIN.

Mother Stewart, our Crusade historian, has given us another volume of Crusade reminiscences, this time an account of her wonderful work in Great Britain. The book is interestingly written, containing descriptions of scenes and people which are in themselves of much interest, and is illustrated with engravings of some of the noted English temperance workers.—New England Home, Hartford, Conn.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

DOMINION WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION—OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

The seventh convention of the Dominion Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Canada will be held June 1 to 5, inclusive, in the city of London, Ontario.

The local union in London will provide entertainment for the executive committee and all regularly appointed delegates. Visitors are always welcome, and by applying to the secretary of the London W. C. T. U., information concerning suitable boarding places can readily be obtained.

The following is the basis of representation:

"The annual convention shall be composed of the executive committee and the Provincial corresponding and recording secretaries and treasurer, one delegate-at-large from each auxiliary Province, and one delegate for every one hundred paying members of auxiliary Provincial unions."

The treasurer's books will close for auditing the 18th of May. Provinces which have not yet paid their yearly affiliation fees should do so before that date in order that they may be entitled to full representation.

A school of methods will be held on the afternoon of Monday, June 4, and a Y conference is being arranged for Wednesday, June 6. Daily Bible readings will be given.

The railway companies will be asked for the usual reduced rates, and it is hoped that each Province will send its full quota of delegates, and that throughout the Dominion, daily prayer will be offered for the success of this convention and the presence of the Holy Spirit to guide and direct all its deliberations.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

The convention of Vermillion county, Ill., Mrs. Lizzie E. Kyger, president, has just closed its session at Hoopeston, leaving an impression for good on all the community. Reports from unions were admirable, but that from Bismarck union excelled all others. But two months have passed since, in the midst of great opposition, five courageous souls organized a W. C. T. U. of young women. "Saloons," it was claimed, "would furnish sidewalks which were greatly needed." The ladies held their own counsel. They entered diligently into work that attracted the attention and aroused the curiosity of the people, and commended their enterprise. Money began to come in to them and still flows to the treasury, and on Saturday of this week (they having purchased the lumber) the building of sidewalks will begin, presided over entirely by the white-ribboners, who will furnish a hearty dinner to every man who will help. The report given by Miss Bacon, superintendent of public schools of Bismarck, aroused much enthusiasm.

Mrs. Herrick, late corresponding secretary of Florida, has been obliged to leave her post of duty and will soon come to the North for health and recuperation. Miss Minnie Neal, DeLand, has been appointed her successor.

Miss Frances E. Griffin has returned from her southern trip during which she spoke eighteen times in Louisiana, where, realizing the value of organization, they are diligently establishing district unions. She tells us "hard times are not felt there as in the North, and there are a less number of tramps than at any previous time since the war. No river overflow is expected, from which there has been serious suffering the last two years, and the promise of good crops is abundant." We heartily congratulate our Southern friends on their conditions.

Mrs. Emilie Martin, a faithful superintendent, writes with encouraged heart, "My department work has increased until the mails bring me hundreds of letters from mothers and sisters concerning the invasion of home by impure publications and pictures. Maryland has enacted a magnificent law against the exhibition of woman's form anywhere." The growth of interest in "purity in literature and art" should give all lovers of purity cause for rejoicing.

The annual convention of West Washington W. C. T. U. will be held at Chevalis, June 5–8, during which a grand gold medal contest will be held; an address will be delivered by our honored sister, Mrs. Narcissa White Kinney, from whom we wish we might hear with more frequency, and an evening will be devoted to the children. Addresses of welcome and response, talks from president, vice-presidents and others, will add much interest, and woman suffrage will have a prominent place.

We return thanks for the many words of appreciation and gratitude received from state and local union presidents concerning the personal letters sent out by the corresponding secretary. Seeking to adapt such communications to the needs of each state, the secretary will be glad to receive press notices, carefully marked (that no time may be lost in searching for what they are sent), from which she may secure the true temperance status of the locality.

The women of New York, seeking the entrance of a constitutional amendment striking out the word male, in the proposed changes which are to be made by the Constitutional Convention soon to meet, have had a lively week. Two great meetings have been held, one at Sherry's, May 3, and one at Cooper Union, May 7, at which the honorable, notable women in this reform have redoubled their efforts, and been assisted by men and women of high position in judicial and ecclesiastical circles. We await anxiously reports of these meetings. Miss Anthony and Mrs. Mary Seymour Howells have together visited sixty counties of the state, having spent their entire time in the work since January.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

Treasurer's Corner.

Wisconsin, Georgia and Kansas have sent in installments of dues, and Ohio remits monthly. Why cannot Ohio's treasurer tell us how it is that her state can send dues regularly every month? Other states might learn how and it would be a great improvement upon the present method of waiting until near the close of the fiscal year, and then sending in one large sum. New York sends dues quarterly.

In response to the suggestion that local dues be made one dollar, Mrs. Bronson, treasurer of Missouri (where our energetic Mrs. Hoffman imparts courage to her women), writes:

"I have just read your request in THE UNION SIGNAL, asking unions or treasurers to give their experience regarding the plan of paying one dollar dues. We have tried it for several years and find that it works admirably. There was a great hue and cry raised when it was first talked of, such as the membership would fall off so much that we could not keep up expenses. But the fact is our membership has increased. Everybody is thoroughly satisfied with the new plan, we pay our dues semi-annually; the local treasurer sends seventy-five cents of every dollar to the district treasurer, the district treasurer sends thirty-five cents to the state and keeps forty cents in the district. That gives the local twenty-five cents, district forty cents, and I believe fifteen cents of the thirty-five goes to the National, I am not sure; the district gets the largest, but it is used to pay organizers, etc., to go through counties."

Only ten cents per member goes to National from any state, and one cent of that goes to the World's W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Clement of Haddonfield, N. Y., treasurer of local, writes:

"In the Treasurer's Corner of April 19 number of THE UNION SIGNAL, I saw a request for local treasurers to give their opinion on raising the local dues to one dollar. When I collected the dues this spring, I simply informed each member it would be one dollar next year. No one objected. I for one entirely approve of it."

Mrs. O. P. Bray, the treasurer, in sending Kansas dues writes: "There has been some falling off in our dues this spring for many feel the pressure of the hard times. I am glad to say, though, that generally the workers stick so that the work has not been crippled as much as you might fancy by the decrease in dues." This shows the need of greater diligence on the part of local treasurers to collect and forward dues. Let each local treasurer see to it that every member pays her dues this year above all other years. Unless this is done there will be a large falling off in paid-up membership, which is really the only membership that we can honestly report.

Illinois' president is constantly in the field, arousing new interest, kindling into new life the flagging unions and organizing new ones, and she assures me with her characteristic vim and faith that there will be no falling off in dues in Illinois, notwithstanding the hard times. To this end district and county presidents are working energetically. Let us hear from others as to dollar dues.

"DEAR WOMEN OF THE W. T. P. A.:—I am as much pleased with my White Ribbon Portfolio, Part II, as I was with Part I, and I hope every white-ribboner will avail herself of this grand opportunity of obtaining the photographs of our leaders at so reasonable a rate. Many thanks to you from myself, personally, for the trouble and care of arranging for and sending out at so moderate a rate, such excellent photographs of our honored and beloved leaders, and I trust I but voice the gratitude of many."

"DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I want to give praise where it is due. I want to just say that when I am told that I am an enthusiast in temperance, and that I put new life and energy into the unions that I visit, I reply, Give the credit to THE UNION SIGNAL, for I got my inspiration from that source."

Our Library Table.

The current number of the QUARTERLY JOURNAL OF INEBRIETY is rich in its study and exposition of the various phases of inebriety, made from a purely scientific standpoint. The leading article of the issue is "Opium: Has It Any Use, Other than a Strictly Medical One?" by Brigade Surgeon Robert Pringle, M. D., a paper read before the English Society for the Study and Cure of Inebriety. Dr. Pringle investigates all possible uses of the drug and closes his highly interesting and valuable discourse by the statement, "There is one use for opium, a medicinal one; all other use is vicious, from the peculiar character of the drug."

T. D. Crothers, M. D., Editor, Hartford, Conn.

THE REVIEW OF REVIEWS, which gives to its readers valuable character sketches from time to time, presents in its May issue, that of Louis Kossuth, concerning whom the article thus speaks in its opening paragraph: "Last month, when Louis Kossuth died, there passed away the last link which connected us of this generation with the great ones of the mid-century revolution. One by one all the stars have fallen from the galaxy, and now there is not one left of all those famous heroes whose exploits were the inspiration of our boyhood. Mazzini, Garibaldi, Herzen, Ledru Rollin, Louis Blanc, Victor Hugo, Kossuth, all are gone." A personality of later and perhaps nearer interest to Americans is that of the late David Dudley Field, of whose work at the American bar Austin Abbot writes exhaustively.

Published at 13 Astor Place, New York City.

The ATLANTIC MONTHLY has among its many notable contributors for May, William Frederick Slocum, Jr., who ably presents "The Ethical Problem of the Public School," and from whose article a few selections may be welcome: "The political instincts of the people of the United States have led them to seek the best possible system of public schools, and the supreme motive for the expenditure of the vast sums of money that have been voted with great willingness for their foundation and their continued support has been the education of the youth of the country for citizenship . . . No one denies that the education of the thirteen million children in these schools has much to do with the destiny of the republic, nor that the country has placed its future for good or evil, in the hand of the public school-teacher. . . . Is the public school laying its foundation deep enough? Has it struck its roots into the moral nature of these thirteen million children? . . . To touch the springs of action in these pupils is to touch the very sources of power in the national life; and there is no opportunity to be compared with that offered by the public school. The institution is so sacred, so far-reaching in its influence, that it must be rescued from political strife and partisan narrowness."

Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 11 East Seventeenth St., New York.

The May ARENA is a number of unusual interest, containing articles of vigorous thought on a variety of themes. But the subject of most certain attraction to the readers of these columns will, in all probability, be that discussed in a symposium entitled, "How to Deal with the Saloon Evil." A. A. Miner, D. D., discusses the saloon evil itself and the conditions that tend to develop its proportions; Helen M. Gougar "points the way out," in a stirring prohibition article at the close of which she enumerates as follows the steps leading to our emancipation from the saloon slavery, 1. Education of the rising generation as to the physical effects of alcohol and narcotics. 2. Punishment for intoxication. 3. Legal prohibition of the indiscriminate sale of alcoholic beverages. 4. Incarceration, in the penitentiary, of those who violate the law. 5. Enfranchisement of women. 6. The election of the Prohibition party to power in all branches of the government. Walter Vrooman follows with a brief but emphatic indorsement of "The South Carolina Experiment," and B. O. Flower closes the symposium by a paper on "The Corrupting Influence of the Liquor Power in Politics and Outlines of two Practical Methods for Dealing with the Saloon Evil." These two "practical methods" are the Scandinavian system and the state control of the traffic—methods regarding which there is most strong diversity of opinion in the minds of earnest temperance advocates, but neither one of which harmonizes with the "no compromise" policy of the W. C. T. U.

A GREAT MOTHER.

We take great pleasure in announcing, through our "Publisher's Notes" that "A Great Mother" is at last ready to deliver to those who have been so eagerly watching for its advent. The work has been put through with the utmost possible expedition, but, owing to the fact that advance notices were published as soon as the first chapters went into type, it seems as if there had been some delay. The book is every thing that we could hope in matter of binding and execution, while the charm of its pages need only be seen to be recognized. "It looks just like Madam Willard," was the comment which delighted our heart as the first copy was passed about for inspection. It has editorial notice in this current issue of THE UNION SIGNAL; meantime, we bespeak your prompt orders, for this is undoubtedly the most valuable book for mothers which has been issued during the current year by any publishing house. The illustrations are beautiful, and the price such as to bring it within reach of all.

Do not delay in sending in your orders Price $1.50.

FIVE thousand dollars will be expended by the city of London in entertaining the Y. W. C. A. Jubilee Convention in June.

SIX hundred million cigarettes are annually produced by one factory in Richmond, Va. Where are the statistics in regard to the smokers?

THERE is no more faithful observer of the Sabbath than Hon. Wm. Gladstone, who, his daughter says, always avoids travel on Sunday, and puts aside all secular work and thought on the rest-day.

THE Army Temperance Association of India is reported to have enrolled one-third of the entire British army in that country, thus proving that it is quite possible for Europeans to live in India without alcoholic stimulants.

BY the will of a charitable resident of Rockford, Ill., G. A. Sanford, six worthy institutions are given bequests. Among them are the American Board of Foreign Missions, Chicago Theological Seminary and American Missionary association, each of whom receive three thousand dollars.

THE distributing agencies of the English and American Bible societies at Kiëf and other large cities in Russia have for some unreported reason been recently closed by the police. Hitherto no objection has been made by the Russian authorities to the circulating of Bibles and tracts of these societies.

REGARDING the offspring of habitual drunkards, says Dr. Paul Garnier, of Paris, who has made a special study of children of the slums, "There is a flaw in the very nature of these young wretches that the psychologist sees clearly and notes with apprehension—the absence of affectionate emotions, and where they did not become lunatics they show insensibility and pitilessness."

THE Pan-American Bi-Metallic Association, whose offices are in Denver, Col., has called a meeting of all representatives in the United States, South and Central America and Old Mexico who favor the objects of the association. The convention is to be held in Washington, D. C., May 22, and its purpose is to memorialize the Congress of the United States to restore silver to its old place at a ratio of 16 to 1.

CHRISTIAN Endeavorers are reaching out a friendly hand to the isolated residents in life-saving stations, light ships and houses. At the Montreal convention representatives were chosen from Canada and other lands, thus constituting a work of world-wide import. Services are conducted for the brave guardians of our coasts, and books, papers, magazines, comfort bags, mufflers, caps, mitts, etc., are to be furnished to those who need them.

PROHIBITION Park, Staten Island, N. Y., will be the scene of an international temperance congress, June 3, 4 and 5, for which the Supreme Lodge of Good Templars is making elaborate preparations. Delegations from all temperance societies are expected to be present, and names should be sent as soon as possible to Mr. J. A. Bogardus, 167 Chambers St., N. Y. A great reception is to be given to Gen. Neal Dow, of Maine, on the opening day.

MRS. S. B. CAPRON, who has been for five years superintendent of the women's department in the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, has resigned her position on account of advancing years. Mrs. Capron is well known to foreign mission workers, having spent twenty-five years in India. She is also known as a writer for religious papers, her chief characteristics being deep spirituality and consecration. Miss L. L. Sherman, her successor at the Moody training school for Christian workers, has been four years a teacher at Mount Holyoke (of which she is a graduate) and later principal of the Moody school at Northfield, Mass., for three years. She is eminently fitted for her responsible position.

A NEW CURE FOR ASTHMA.

Medical science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma in the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa. So great is their faith in its wonderful curative powers, the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending out large trial cases of the Kola Compound free to all sufferers from Asthma. Send your name and address on postal card, and they will send you a trial case by mail free.

Orders for the Quarterly Temperance Lesson for June 17, prepared by Mrs. Helen G. Rice (National superintendent of Loyal Temperance work) and issued as a supplement to The Young Crusader, can be filled after May 1, i. e., orders for the supplement alone. The Young Crusader and supplement together will be ready May 21. The former arrangement is for the accommodation of state workers who wish to secure the lesson for early distribution among county and district superintendents, and it is hoped, will greatly facilitate the wide circulation of this most valuable aid to the teaching of the Word on temperance lines.

ST. PAUL PARK—A NEW PICNIC GROUND.

St. Paul Park is located at Morton, Ill., 14 miles north of Chicago on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry. The grounds cover eighty acres on the North Branch River. One-half is a grove of large maples, the other half is a level meadow, suited for base-ball, tennis and all outdoor games. Good boating on river, and in every way most attractive picnic ground in the vicinity of Chicago.

For further information, rates, etc., apply to H. E. LAING, City Passenger Agent, Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 207 Clark St., Chicago.

We are not often asked to indorse goods advertised in our paper to help the sale of the same, but when Mr. W. E. Beveridge, of Baltimore, who manufactures the celebrated "Automatic Cooker," wrote us stating that he had sold very few to our readers, we felt we ought to say to them that we know this almost indispensable article to be of the highest merit, and we should like to see every housekeeper possess one. See his advertisement on page 12, of this issue. Send for catalogue and find out more about this worthy article.

Toothache is a little thing in the books, but many physicians would rather meet a burglar at the door on a dark night than to be called to cure a bad toothache, especially of several days continuance. The old-time remedies only postpone the evil day, and usually the patient is respectfully referred to the dentist. Now to avoid all this trouble keep in the house a bottle of Dent's Toothache Gum, so handy to use; does not spill or dry up. Always ready. In value it represents but a small amount, 15 cents, but in good results untold pain and loss of sleep and rest. For sale everywhere by responsible druggists, or direct upon receipt of price. C. S. DENT & Co., Detroit, Mich.

CAMPAIGN ECHOES.

A well-printed book, neatly and strongly bound, is "Campaign Echoes." It is the autobiography of Mrs. Letitia Youmans, the pioneer of the white-ribbon movement in Canada. It is written by the request of the Provincial Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Ontario, with an introduction by Miss Frances E. Willard, indorsed by Lady Henry Somerset. Though an invalid, Mrs. Youmans has written an interesting history of her life, and the movement in which she was engaged. This substantial and entertaining volume is worthy of a wide circulation.—Boston Star.

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.

The stability of many educational institutions has been severely tested during the recent period of financial depression, and those that have weathered the storm have done so on account of their exceptional merits. During all this season of commercial disaster the New England Conservatory of Music has had an attendance but little, if any, below the normal. The majority of its students are there to prepare themselves for their life's work, and the recent valuable additions to the courses have served to stimulate ambition, and to give further desirable qualifications to those who are now ready to teach. There is to be a special summer term this year, of unusual value to music teachers.

FLOWER MISSION DAY, JUNE 9,

Is the birthday of Jennie Casseday, the first National Superintendent of Flower Mission Work, to be observed by taking flowers with text cards attached, to prisons, jails, hospitals, almshouses and to the poor and sick and sinning everywhere.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The international miners' conference met at Berlin last week and discussed methods of benefiting the condition of miners.

Egyptian investors have commenced suit against Ferdinand de Lesseps and the Suez Canal directors for criminal misappropriation of funds.

The Lutheran church celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of its board of home and foreign missions and church extension at York, Pa.

The Ohio senate has enacted an excellent law, placing the heavy penalty of $2,000 fine and five years imprisonment on the publication of obscene literature.

United States Commissioner of Labor, Carroll D. Wright, presided over the tenth national convention of chiefs of bureaus of labor at Washington last week.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian church convened at Saratoga, N. Y., Thursday. The trial of Dr. Henry Smith, of Lane Seminary, Cincinnati, O., for heresy was begun.

Ten seamen were drowned and nine lumber schooners were lost in Chicago harbor during a violent gale from the north last Friday; fourteen schooners were wrecked at other points on the lake shore.

That the World's Fair was "a courageous inception, splendid in execution and successful in results" is the summary of the British Royal Commission in its report of the Columbian Exposition just issued.

The diplomatic relations between Portugal and Brazil have been severed on account of the action of the Portuguese in receiving Brazilian rebels on their fleet in the harbor of Rio Janeiro during the late war.

The reports of the Illinois annual Sunday-school convention showed an increase of seventy-four schools in the state during the year, and a total of 7,329 schools with 86,102 officers and 617,942 scholars, a gain of nearly ten thousand.

The charges of attempts to influence tariff legislation, by bribery, will be investigated by a committee of five United States Senators, on a resolution introduced by Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, and adopted by the Senate, Thursday.

A bill for the completion of the Nicaragua canal by the purchase of $70,000,000 of stock and the issuance of United States legal tender notes in payment has been presented to the House of Representatives by Congressman Bryan, of Nebraska.

The clergy of the Church of England have issued a manifesto against the disestablishment of the church in Wales. The law thus opposed, if carried, would divert the yearly income of the Welsh church, $1,395,000, to the erection of hospitals and public halls, libraries, technological institutes, etc.

By the decision of the Iowa supreme court, May 17, in the case of the Gipps Brewing Company vs. Chas. de France, saloon-keepers in Iowa who have paid for liquors to firms outside the state can recover the amounts so paid and are not responsible for the return of empty cases and kegs, even when so contracted for, the ruling being that any agreement was in violation of law and void because to be performed in the state.

A FITTING ceremony will take place in the city of Louisville, Ky., June 9. It will be the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Jennie Casseday, by the school children of Louisville. This monument is simple in design but of choice marble and marks the resting-place of our promoted flower mission superintendent.

THE flower mission is one in which every union may engage, for in every community, whether in the populous city or in the sparsely settled country district, there are always human beings to whom the ministry of flowers comes as a strength and a benediction. And whether the flower gift be the cultivated product of garden or conservatory, or the more humble blossom of mountain or prairie, it is always God's messenger and its mission is to tell of a Father's love and of the Christ-spirit in the hearts of men.

IT is with unfeigned pleasure that we note growing indications of church unity through the young Christians of the land. Believing so heartily in the Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor, we have sincerely regretted that every denomination did not give them cordial encouragement. It is gratifying to see in the Methodist Recorder of Pittsburg this editorial recommendation: "If it is possible to bring the Epworth League of the great Methodist Episcopal church in line with the Christian Endeavor organizations it will consummate an end to be desired, and greatly augment this wonderful movement."

IT speaks well for the inherent nobility of human nature that its susceptibility to the uplifting and refining influence of flowers is well-nigh universal. There is something in the delicate form of a flower, in its beauty of color and fragrance that touches a responsive chord in young and old alike, that appeals to the pure and innocent heart of a child and to the hardened conscience of the man steeped in crime. No matter to what depths of degradation they have fallen, the simplest bunch of flowers, accompanied by a loving message from the Father's Word to His erring children, will come to the sin-stained man and woman as a harbinger of peace, will suggest, though perhaps unconsciously, faith and hope and love—the goodwill of God and man.

IF there is any local union which has no superintendent of flower mission work, it should appoint one without delay, and as a helpful preparation to systematic flower distribution on June 9 and during the summer months that follow, we would suggest that each union make this department of work the subject of discussion at a special meeting. A brief paper might be read, giving the origin and aims of the flower mission, and if the union or any of its members have had previous experience along this line, some of the practical results may be profitably given. For it will be found that every woman who has engaged in flower mission work can tell many a pathetic and heart-stirring story of the blessed influence of these silent messengers of truth.

THOSE who are wise enough to be regular attendants of the Willard Hall noon meetings never miss the exceptional opportunities that frequently come to this favored place in the way of subjects and speakers of rare interest. A fine illustration of this was obtained last week through the presence and address of Miss Ben-Oliel, of Jerusalem, who presented in a most inspiring manner the Christianizing of the Jews in their native land. She referred to the fulfillment of many of the prophecies concerning this chosen people of God, such as their return in large numbers to their native land (there are now one hundred thousand in Palestine) and the building outside the gates. The audience was visibly affected by her tender plea for mercy to the Jew, particularly when she so truly exclaimed, "It was not the Jews, but sin that crucified the Christ!"

SCIENTISTS have a great deal to say nowadays about the "power of suggestion" and we are told that silent suggestion is, under many circumstances, more effective than that which is audibly spoken, for the reason that it does not antagonize the conscious or objective mind of the recipient. And so, though we cannot hear the message of the flowers, we none the less surely—perhaps all the more surely—take it in.

A PRIVATE correspondent writes us concerning the indignation meeting against Colonel Breckinridge's renomination to Congress, held in Lexington, Ky., May 15. Hundreds were turned away from the large opera house. Many of the most prominent men and women from adjoining cities were in attendance and all agreed that such a spontaneous uprising of the best elements of a community had never been known before. A "White Life for Two," was the theme on which that vast and indignant audience so unanimously united. The W. C. T. U. social purity department is verily receiving its reward in these latter days. Oh, for woman's ballot in the cause of home and purity!

WE all know that "shut-ins" everywhere are peculiarly sensitive to the influence of flowers. They speak to them of bright sunshine, of health, of happiness, of liberty. To the sick their cheering presence serves not only as a soul stimulant but often as an absolute refreshing for the body as well. "They seem to quench an inner thirst," said one sick girl. "They make me breathe easier," said another. What brightness and joy their freshness and fragrance shed upon the sick-bed, through the hospital ward, in all places where are the sick, the poor, the friendless! And those unfortunates who are "shut-in" because of violation of human as well as divine law, those who in the prison cell spend the solitary hours in communion with their own crime-stained hearts—what wonder that such should be "all broken up," as one of their number expressed it, by the tender message of a few bright blossoms conveyed by a kindly and sympathetic hand. Seed sown by our W. C. T. U. women in flower mission work has already brought forth much fruit, and as the work extends it is destined to bring forth sixty and a hundred-fold. Let each union, each individual, go forth to sow!

WE are looking forward eagerly to the International Temperance Congress to be held in Prohibition Park, Staten Island, N. Y., June 3–5. Without doubt, it will be the most momentous temperance meeting ever held, and one in which prohibition doctrine will take the front seat. The reasons for this assertion are well stated by Mr. C. L. Haskell, the secretary of the congress, as follows: "Within the past few months, at least two important Supreme Court decisions have greatly reduced the issues between moral reformers, and to-day they can meet together with reasonable assurance of uniting their efforts as never before, against the rum traffic. The Indiana Supreme Court decision against the licensing of the drink traffic has done much toward narrowing down the issues between reform workers. The North Carolina Supreme Court decision against the constitutionality of state dispensaries for selling intoxicating beverages, has also helped to narrow down the differences between sincere friends of temperance reform. Then again, the high-license craze of only a few years ago, has now come to be so generally advocated by saloon-keepers, brewers and distillers, that it has been abandoned by many thinkers and speakers, as a temperance reform measure. Constitutional prohibition, repealed last winter in Iowa, is no longer an anchorage sure and steadfast for any great number of temperance advocates. Local option has also lost, rather than gained, in favor." The failure of these one-sided measures will necessarily bring about more unity of thought and method among temperance advocates, which will undoubtedly show itself in the temperance congress of 1894.

CONTRIBUTED

LIFE'S PAEAN OF GRACE.

BY KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Laugh out from your great warm heart, O earth!
  Laugh out through your rocks and your rills.
Let the jubilant breezes bear your mirth
  To the sun-crowned, storm-kissed hills:
Laugh out in the glint of the violet's blue
  In the dance of the columbine,
In the sheen of the apple bloom's opal hue
  And the breath of the regnant pine.

Laugh out where the trailing arbutus twines
  Its pinky white fragrance along
Over banks where the timid anemone shines—
  And bobolink trills his mad song.
Laugh out where the soft, dainty baby ferns push
  Their questioning forms through the mold,
Laugh out in the thrill of the young leaves' rush,
  In the maples' bright fringe of red gold.

Laugh out where the wild brook shimmers and shines
  And coquets her glad way to the sea,
'Neath feathery festoons of riotous vines,
  Where the birds swing in swift ecstasy.
Laugh out in the heart of the forest deep,
  Where the hush of the stillness is heard,
Where the velvety mosses in breathless joy keep
  The secret too deep for a word.

Laugh out! Oh, I join in your laughter to-day,
  I catch the glad, jubilant strain,
Though 'round me there pulses the city's mad sway,
  The city's full measure of pain.
Far away are the nooks where the wild flowers hide,
  Far away is the sweet woodland mirth;
Still I joy—for I know that the spring's blessed tide
  Is flooding the heart of the earth.

Far fairer than all the fair flowers of spring
  Is the thought that lies under their birth;
Far sweeter than all the sweet songs birds e'er sing
  Is the dominant song of the earth.
The birds and the brooks, the mountains and seas
  Are but chords in one symphony grand;
I hear it, though far from the orchestral trees,
  Its rhythmic swell fills all the land:—

"Life is stronger than death: joy vanquishes pain;
  Warmth conquers forever all cold;
The tomb has been powerless to hold once again;
  The new still comes forth from the old.
All beauty, all gladness, all perfume, all light
  Are but parts of the great central plan;
God—God is the source and the end of delight,—
  One delight, or in flower, or in man."

Shall I not then be glad in the joy of the all—
  I, who of that all am a part?—
Though prisoned about by the city's cold wall
  The eye of my soul sees God's heart.
Because there is glory all round me on earth,
  That glory gleams ever for me;
Since I am a part of joy's jubilant birth
  I must share in the full ecstasy.

Laugh out, then, O earth, in your rapture divine,
  Laugh out in your God-given glee;
My soul shall laugh, too, in a joy that's all mine;
  My soul as the wind's breath is free.
I, too, am a part of life's paean of grace,
  Though I strike oft the keynote of pain;
The Master-ear knows where the discords find place
  In the swell of the perfect refrain.

WHAT THE LILIES OF THE FIELD DID FOR MRS. ARCHER.

BY MARY F. BUTTS.

The Archer homestead was surrounded by fields of various magnitude that were put to various uses. There were the crib-meadow, the barn-meadow, the orchard, the plain, the Maxonin-meadow, once belonging to a man named Maxon, the bog, the swamp, the back pasture and the Babcock woods. One and all suggested torture to Mrs. Archer. She had been tired for years. In fact, she could scarcely remember feeling thoroughly rested and natural. She was the mother of seven bright girls and boys—thoughtless, frolicsome creatures, devoted to out-of-door pursuits, and caring more for birds, bugs and flowers than for "mother," the weary woman sometimes thought.

"Times have changed," she said, talking over the matter with a neighbor. "Girls and boys are born into a different world from the one we came into. They even go so far as to say that their parents owe them all kinds of good things for bringing them here. There's truth in that, too."

But it is difficult for a tired out woman to be fair in her treatment of husband and children, and poor Mrs. Archer gradually came to be the victim of her circumstances. Was it in her power to rise superior to those circumstances? Were there undeveloped forces in herself that might be more than a match for their tyranny?

Every nook and corner of the farm divisions I have named were thoroughly known to the Archer children. They could tell you where the dogwood held out its white banner-like flags of truce, where the first trilliums shone like stars along the dusky wood paths, or the wild azaleas lighted the forest with their spicy blooms. They could lead you to the spot where the wintergreen berries were thickest and plumpest. They could tell you of certain purling brooks running through "the bog" lined always in the season with purple "flags." There were arid spots on "the plain" where the lupine stood in stiff, soldier-like ranks dressed in vivid blue. There were the secrets of sweet-flag and black birch, and pennyroyal; the haunts of the shy, lonesome lady-slipper, the jack-in-the-pulpit and the Indian pipe. There were the tall birch trees in the "back pasture" where the wild grape rioted, where in autumn great luscious clusters tempted the boys and rewarded the mother at preserving time for zig-zag rents in obtrusive trousers.

From all these out-of-door delights the mother was by some occult reason cut off. There was indeed one period in the year when she allowed herself a mild form of vagabondage, namely the huckleberry season. Then, clad in the oldest and thinnest of calicoes, protected from the sun by a "slat" sunbonnet with a deep ruffled cape, she would spend three or four hours of a summer's afternoon—in company with two or three of the neighboring wives—in the most prolific field. These women all testified that they loved to pick huckleberries—a pathetic confession of their stifled joy in the pleasantness and restfulness of the outdoor world.

One June day Mrs. Archer found herself in dire need of Flora's assistance. The bread was "suffering" to be kneaded and "set"; the fire was exactly right for ironing, and, as usual, at the most inconvenient time possible, company had dropped in to dinner—Deacon Tefft and his excellent wife. Frantic inquiries being made for the daughter of the house, the little ones, fresh from their outdoor bakery, peeping in "to see the company," gave the information that Flora had gone with Jack to see a wild bee's nest that he had found. Mrs. Tefft, seeing Mrs. Archer's red cheeks and anxious eyes, "took right holt" and helped much more effectively than the untrained Flora could have done.

"I dunno's I ought to find fault," said the hostess apropos of her daughter. "Flora got up at five o'clock this morning and ironed a whole horse full of starched things—frocks an' aprons an' trousers for the young ones. I s'pose she had this very voyage in mind all the time. You'd think my children come of wild Indian stock, they're so possessed to be ou' doors."

Mrs. Tefft, protected by an enormous bib apron, pared a potato tranquilly as she replied: "I never could make out what folks go trapesing up and down the fields and through the woods for, especially women folks. Miss Burns, she't boarded to our house last summer, used to try to get me to go with her trailin' 'round, but I told her I could get exercise enough in the house."

Mrs. Archer looked thoughtfully as she moulded bits of the raised bread dough into little biscuits for the early dinner.

"Exercise in the house isn't the same thing," she said, presently, moved by, she knew not what contradictory spirit. Had the dryad in the oak outside darted an influence through the kitchen window? There was a wondrously sweet whispering among the lovely leaves.

"No, it isn't the same thing," repeated the biscuit-maker. "When Flora and Jack come home from their half day tramps in the woods they look as if they were new made. Their eyes have a shine in 'em that you don't see when they've been drudgin' in the house. And when I scold Flora for beatin' herself out so, she says, 'Oh, ma, it's a good kind of tired,' and she looks as if she had been in heaven."

Dinner was nearly ready when the young people came in loaded with great boughs of pink azalea. Flora cast a deprecating glance at her mother. There was no look of sympathy in Mrs. Archer's face. Naturally the girl began immediately to take her mother's part against herself, and worked hard all the afternoon. Mrs. Tefft looked askance at the exquisite azalea saying to herself that she "wouldn't have such stuff litterin' up" her house.

The Deacon and Mr. Archer had come in and Jack launched into a talk about the runaway bees. He had been resting himself under a great hickory tree one day when he discovered the bees coming and going through a sort of tree door. (At this the dryad whispered to Mrs. Archer that perhaps she might find honey of one kind or another by resting under a hickory tree.) Flora filled a large jar with water and set it in the old-fashioned kitchen fireplace. Presently the pink, fragrant flames of the azalea lighted the hearthstone. It was as if the very spirit of beauty had come to sanctify the family altar of the Archers. The two men watched the girl with indulgent looks, as if to say, "Young folks, especially females, will be foolish over sech things!"

Jack had been to his room and now appeared with one of John Burrough's books, the treasure of his little library, sent to him by a young collegian who had boarded in the neighborhood the summer before. He showed his sister two or three passages. Deacon Tefft's curiosity was aroused and he wished to see what the book had to say about bees. Jack read aloud the account of the honeymakers in the early spring,—how they fly about the running sap of the maple trees, and haunt the sap buckets, how they keep a diligent watch for pollen and rifle the willow catkins as soon as they appear, "going to mill, and returning to the hive with a golden grist." "When a bee brings pollen into the hive," read Jack, "he advances to the cell in which it is to be deposited and kicks it off as one might his overalls or rubber boots, making one foot help the other. Another bee, one of the indoor hands, comes along and rams it down with his head and packs it into the cell as the dairy maid packs butter into a firkin."

"Do tell!" exclaimed Mrs. Tefft as Jack paused.

"Do you mean to say that men make up books about sech little matters as that?" asked the deacon.

"I think it's awfully interesting," said Flora, "and the book tells about the kinds of flowers that the bees love best; red raspberry blooms suit them the very best of all. But the white clover is their regular harvest."

"The honey bees can't get the honey out o' the red clover, but the bumble-bee can," piped up one of the little boys: "the bumble-bee has a longer 'boscis."

"Proboscis," corrected Jack.

"Well, I never!" commented the deacon's wife. "To think they're a-noticin' of sech things! I allus s'posed the Lord made bees so's't we could have honey; but I never thought of watchin' an' interferin' with the creeters that He has made."

The farmers were somewhat amazed to learn that the experiment had been tried of moving colonies of bees north on the Mississippi, "Starting from New Orleans and following the opening season up, thus realizing a sort of perpetual May or June."

That the bees go house-hunting just before they get ready to swarm, was next put forth as a fact by the boy with the book. The household was listening by this time, quite forgetful of the dinner that was imminent.

"All bees are wild bees, and every new swarm undoubtedly means to migrate to the woods," quoted Jack.

"Yes," said the deacon, "the queen is all ready to lead the swarm off, and we allus used to beat tin pans to drownd her orders."

"I wish we kept bees," said Flora.

"Every family in the neighborhood used to have a hive or two, when I was young," remarked Mr. Archer. "We used to dip walnut boughs in sweetened water and wash the new hive to draw the swarm. 'Twas allus an excitin' time when the bees swarmed."

"Queer that they should like a hole in an old tree better'n a nice hive all fixed up a-purpose for 'em," said the deacon.

"I don't blame them a bit," said Flora; and then with some timidity she brought a slip that she had cut from a newspaper and showed her mother what Mr. Whittier had written in pathetic verse about "Telling the Bees." There was some new and soft expression in the woman's face that invited this confidence of the girl.

"I didn't know that you had sech a book as that," said Mr. Archer to Jack. "I should like to look it over sometime."

That night after the company went away Mrs. Archer electrified Jack by saying: "The next time you go to the bee-tree, Jack, I should like to go with you."

To the astonishment of the household Mrs. Archer went to the bee-tree and to several other places much haunted by the children. Flora was glad to keep house that her mother might have these outings, and Jack was the most enthusiastic of guides. In fact, Mrs. Archer was "personally conducted" over her own farm. She found that she could find time to take a walk for its own sake if she so willed. Indeed, as she dryly remarked to her husband one day, "Many mothers and housekeepers find time to go away from home altogether—when death calls them."

"That's so," replied Mr. Archer. "When we are obliged to give up our places they seem to get filled pretty easy."

Mrs. Archer compressed her lips. "My place has got to be filled to some extent before I die," she said to herself.

It was rumored presently in the neighborhood that Mrs. Archer was "a little off."

"She's been seen trapesin' over the fields at six o'clock in the mornin'," said Aunt Betsy Sears, the tailoress. "I never heerd of insanity in any of her kin."

Deacon Tefft's hired boy testified that he "come across Mis' Archer when he was lookin' for the old cow. She was settin' on a log down by Alder brook, right in the woods, sewin'."

Some of the school children had discovered her lying "flat" in the shadow of the great boulder on Honeysuckle Rocks, reading. Such a "feeling" was aroused in the neighborhood that various persons felt called upon to condole with Mr. Archer. Finally, to the mystification of everybody, "the afflicted woman" disappeared altogether.

"Well, wife, this is fine, I declare. Velvet carpets an' sofas an' chairs an' the trimmin's thrown in, so to speak. Look at that red lily, with its back up against them ferns, Old Solomon's dye-houses couldn't furnish that color, specially when the sun strikes through it. The Saviour's words about the lilies seem different out here from what they do in the meetin' house when I'm squeezed up in my hot, black coat an' my tight neckerchief. Here among the shadows, where you can hear the water a-drippin' an' the Bob Whites a-callin', they seem to take holt. Why, wife, this world is good enough for anybody."

"Wife" took a Testament from a moss cushion at her side. On the same tuft of moss rested a book of poems and a "nature book." "I have lived a new life out here," she said, opening to the lily chapter.

"You've grown ten years younger since your vacation begun," said the husband presently, "an' we've got along well enough at the house. It's astonishin' how Flora carries on the work, an' how the little ones fall in under her generalship. She calls them her army, an' tells 'em that they are fightin' for mother's freedom. I call that bright of Flo."

"The responsibility will be the best thing possible for her," said Mrs. Archer. "She will find out her powers and be happy in her leadership. I mean to let her play housekeeper the rest of the summer, and I will take orders under her. My vacation will be worth as much to my family as it is to me. Hear this!" and Mrs. Archer took a printed scrap from her pocket and read aloud: "'As if a woman lived only to boil and bake and wash dishes and wash clothes, and make and mend. These things are all necessary, and a good wife and mother will see to it that they are done; but any woman who means to keep on being a good wife and mother must keep her soul out of the dishpan and the wash-tub, and she mustn't darn it into the stockings, nor sew it into the frocks and coats.' I know that is true," and the wife looked up earnestly; "why I have had my nerves worn so threadbare that it made me mad to see Jack and Flora come into the house with their arms full of wild things, looking so happy when I felt so out of sorts with everything. Do you call that being a good mother?"

The husband chewed a bit of black birch in silence.

"And I've been too tired to fix myself up and make something of myself for your sake. And little by little you've left off looking at me as you used to, as if I was something precious. I have thought my life all over out here under the trees, and I have made up my mind that I won't keep running down at the heel, that I won't be the kind of woman that children are glad to get away from, and that a husband respects about as much as he does an old shoe."

"Plenty of the old spirit left," said the husband, and he kissed the reddened cheek next him. "You were the brightest, sweetest girl in the neighborhood, Nell, when I fell in love with you, but there hasn't been much sparkle to either of us lately."

The above conversation was held in Camp Careless, on Alder Point, a playhouse that Jack and Flora had constructed at odd times, and little by little, assisted by the younger fry, but which had been enlarged, beautified and furnished for Mrs. Archer's vacation. It was, as its name suggested, only a camp, affording adequate protection from the weather, when one cared to be protected, and fitted with sufficient comforts for a summer rest. It was beautiful for situation, standing on the edge of a lovely field just where it dipped to the lower lands. The ground was tongue-shaped and bordered with a fringe of alders. A great pine dropped its shadows upon the camp, and the winds played all the summer day with the exquisite foliage of the tall white birches. Just to sit still and listen and look was heavenly delight. O, the restfulness of it, the peace, the beautiful harmony. Every fern frond, every grass blade, every sylvan flower seemed to say, "How happy I am! I never think of being seen or praised. I grow where God has put me, and He gives me all I need." Surely that is the condition of heaven—just to love and obey. Such thoughts as these sank into Mrs. Archer's heart as she looked and dreamed and rested.

From this full heart-tide the husband gained rest and refreshment when he came after his day's work to sup with his wife on camp-fire dainties. They were sitting one evening in their hammock in a little bower of birches. The light from the setting sun made a golden pathway through the dusk. Purple wild geraniums sprung up in graceful tufts among the trees; great clusters of brakes reminded one of tropic palms; a hermit thrush poured out the fullness of his joy. Mr. Archer stole an arm around his wife's waist.

"It seems like those long-ago times when I was first in love with sweet Mary Macy," he said. "I have longed now and then during the years of hard work to take you and go far away from the world and the worry of it, and try to bring back the old heaven of love."

"If we should go to the other side of the world," said Mrs. Archer, "we couldn't get further away in feeling, and that's the main thing. I've been made over new, and I call that having 'a change.'"

"I calculate," said the husband, "that it's a sin to be so busy that we can't get acquainted with our Heavenly Father. I s'pose He made such places as this for His children to rest in, and hold communion with Him. It comes to me plain enough now that the world is made beautiful on purpose for us. It was for you, wife, to lead the way in this new departure, and"—hesitatingly—"I guess that's the woman's part, to find God and lead men to Him."

"We're awfully behind our duty and our privilege, then," replied the wife. "But it's my opinion that the world will never come right till we women go straight to God for our orders. Men alone are not fit yet for safe guides, but the best of them, like you, dear, are all ready to follow when we take our true places."

FLOWER MISSION DAY.

BY GERTRUDE FERGUSON.

National Superintendent Flower Mission Department.

Letters have come to me recently asking the question, "What are the plans for Prison Day this year?" I do not think we can improve upon the plans laid down by Miss Casseday in her "Explanatory Leaflet," although they were formulated in the initial stages of our department. These suggestions, as she terms them, were not intended to confine our missioners to certain methods, but were merely given as helps to her co-workers, many of whom were consecrated women, full of missionary spirit and in most cases identified with the public and associated charities in their own cities; having had rich and varied experiences along these lines, the work grew marvelously and the aims of flower mission were met. Souls were brought to Christ, and degraded human beings lifted out of the slums of vice to a higher plane of manhood and womanhood. As letters came day after day from the white-ribboners telling of the encouragements along the way our beloved leader would say, "Our W. C. T. Unions are so splendidly organized, our women so earnest and faithful, I just lie here and watch the work grow and wait to see the unfolding of God's plans."

We hope this June 9th that you will, as far as possible, visit every prison, jail, reformatory, hospital, almshouse and "shut-in," carrying flowers, with text cards, Bibles, literature (carefully selected) and pledge cards. The flowers, with their fragrance and beauty, will frequently soften the most obdurate, while to others they convey the hidden meaning of God's goodness and love to all. Use the texts; these little cards bear God's messages, and He has said: "My word shall not return unto me void." Be sure when practicable to offer the pledge cards for signatures; such a committal of self with a sense of honor has many times proved a safeguard to struggling, tempted ones and put a purpose into their souls. Before another year some of these you visit to-day will have passed beyond your reach.

"Throw out the life line!
Some one is drifting away.
Throw out the life line!
Some one is sinking to-day."

In visiting the prisons we are governed largely by the courtesies extended and privileges granted by the prison officials. Each state superintendent can accordingly best arrange for her own visiting committee. In some states the prison officials prefer to have the committees come on Sunday preceding or following June 9th.

But little change has been made in form of service. If you have not already arranged the program the one following here may serve.

The hymn, "God be with you till we meet again," was a favorite with Miss Casseday, and would be suggestive as a benediction hymn for our missioners' use in their visitations this year.

How much we miss the heart-to-heart letters and judicious counsel of our sainted leader! Many a tired worker has been inspired with fresh zeal; many a burdened heart comforted, and "shut-in" cheered by her rich experience and testimony. Truly

"The influence of her quiet life
Fell on us like the dew."

On June 9 the monument that marks the resting place of Jennie Casseday will be unveiled. The public schools of Louisville will participate in the exercises. The success which has attended the securing and erection of this beautiful and fitting memorial is chiefly due to the efforts of the school children.

Let us endeavor to make June 9 a golden day, bright, precious, the memory and influence of which shall be enduring.

"Thy love shall chant it own beatitudes
After its own life-working. A child's kiss
Set on thy sighing lips shall make thee glad;
A poor man served by thee shall make thee rich;
A sick man helped by thee shall make thee strong;
Thou shalt be served thyself by every sense
Of service which thou renderest."

PROGRAM.

OPENING HYMN.—"Jesus, lover of my soul."
PRAYER.
SCRIPTURE.—Matt. 6:24–33.
HYMN.—"There are lonely hearts to cherish." (Gospel Hymns 5 and 6, No. 162.)
ADDRESS.
Distribution of Flowers and Literature (if the service is in prison or hospital).
HYMN.—"God be with you till we meet again."
Lord's Prayer (in concert).

WOMEN IN POLITICS.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

At a recent meeting in Reigate of the local association of the Liberal Women's Federation, Mrs. Fenwick Miller, the famous woman journalist, in her own charming way made the closing address, which delighted all present and was the outcome of her lifelong study and practice of the art of persuasion added to remarkable native powers. My notes yield the following most inadequate outline:

She said: "I cannot forget that the first man who ever spoke in favor of the enfranchisement of women in our parliament was Benjamin Disraeli, and the next was John Stuart Mill, representing the two parties. We have found our friends, then, both in the Liberal and Conservative political camps. To my mind politics is just that part of the business of each of us which may be more conveniently done by the people altogether. Personally I am not suited with the world as it now stands. Men have carried it on as best they could for ages, but they are willing to admit they have not made a very good thing of it. I should feel free to say to them with all good-will, 'You have done pretty well—better very likely than I could—but two heads are better than one; you need now to seek the help of women to bring the world to be a purer and happier place than you have been able to make it alone.'

"We wish to enlarge the circle of thought and conversation in the home. As it has been in the past when a man came from his work in shop or office he was regaled with such topics as the condition of Johnnie's tooth, little Mary's corn, the increase in the price of potatoes, the difficulties that have arisen with the ruling power in the kitchen. But nowadays we are changing all that; for instance, my husband and I differ in politics; we have many a nice little tilt about great Mr. Gladstone, but we do not lose our tempers, far from it; indeed, we often sit up later than we would, so interested are we in talking over the state of the country, and he says, 'Why, this is the way men talk at the club!' and I know it is far better for him to be at home talking with his wife; far more interesting for us to agree to differ, to modify each other's opinions, to have the pleasure of sympathy and company together, rather than for me to be sitting alone and for him to be off at the club until all hours. I want women in politics for men's sake and for home's sake as well as for the sake of the women themselves.

"One day many years since a poor woman came in to our suffrage headquarters in London and said: 'I see by the sign that this is a society for women's sufferings; my feet have troubled me a long time and I thought I would come in and see what you could do for them.' We had a laugh all round, but she was right, after all! that society was formed because of women's sufferings. Far be it from me to advocate disregard of the duties of home, for I believe it is a principle that the nearest duties are the most important, but then this is just as true of men as of women. First of all, men have their industrial and social interests, but just as they feel led out, and ought to be, from the routine of their lives into the larger brotherhood of their political parties, so women need to establish a feeling of sisterhood that will broaden and enrich their characters and lives. Women are too exclusive; they make great account of their own social plane but men learn to mix with men of sense who are not their equals in culture. I should like to see a society for discussing all great questions here in the town of Reigate, in which women would learn not to determine their acquaintances by rule of thumb, asking who lives in large, who in small houses; who has two hundred pounds and who two thousand pounds a year; but meeting and mingling our knowledge and sympathies concerning all the questions that affect women in this historic old town in this beautiful county of Surrey and in our own dear England.

"Mr. Walter Besant, one of the greatest critics of the woman's movement, has recently said his say in Lady Henry Somerset's paper against our progressive ideas. He cannot deny that queens have been notoriously successful as administrators, but he tries to neutralize this by saying that they have had great men as their advisers; however, we who know for ourselves something of the history of Elizabeth of England, Catherine of Russia, and Maria Theresa, know that in the face of what they accomplished it is simply grotesque for Mr. Besant to try to belittle their achievements. It will take a revolution perhaps to bring women to the front in government, but if so, that is sure to come. I often think how grievous was the pity of it that the firstborn of our queen—her daughter Victoria—was shunted off the English throne because she was a girl. Unlike her brother, she had every qualification to be one of the best sovereigns that ever sat upon a throne, but simply because she is a woman she is now only a dowager living in as great an obscurity as such a woman can.

"The discovery of woman by herself is the greatest fact of the century, greater than the discovery of steam and electricity; we have allowed her powers to go largely to waste too long. You will see a wonderful world one of these days when women come to their own. If anybody fears that the world will be less homelike in those days let him study the history of the Quakers extending now over three hundred years. There was nothing in the creed of the Society of Friends sufficiently superior to what was in other creeds to account for the wonderful influence they have had in our history. Their single, salient and never-to-be-forgotten peculiarity was their treatment of women as their equals. No class of religionists has ever more worthily won the respect and goodwill of mankind. A famous member of it said recently, 'Our society has never taken up a cause that has not at last succeeded.' I once asked an illustrious old Quaker woman how she reconciled with her belief the declaration of St. Paul, 'I suffer not a woman to speak in the church,' and she replied: 'God's revelation did not end with Paul. The spirit of the Lord is upon His people still and has been always; we should do violence to the inner voice if we did not obey it when it tells us to testify how gracious have been the Lord's dealings with our souls.' Who could wish anything nobler, gentler, more home-loving, upright, truthful and moral in every way than the character of Quaker women as a class? They are types and forerunners of what shall be when man welcomes woman to his side in every line of life. 'The woman's cause is man's; they rise or fall together, dwarfed or god-like, bond or free.'"

THE NUDE IN ART.

II.

BY ABBY FELTON.

All the arguments which were considered in the first paper of this series have not sufficient force, separately or collectively, to invalidate the objections and protests of the advocates of exclusion. They simply transfer the argument, throwing the whole force of the reply into aspersions of their opponents. The main points of those who protest are the inevitable effect on the common mind and the certain pandering—which all history forcibly demonstrates as the sure accompaniment of promiscuous exhibitions of the nude—to the degraded tastes of that portion of the public which is composed of "whited sepulchers" without, but within full of dead women's bones! Until society is pure and its individuals are known to be pure one cannot gaze upon such a picture as "Don Juan in Hell" in a mixed company like the one which for six months slowly filed through the rooms of the Art Palace at Jackson Park without an inward shrinking and wounding, and we venture to say that any mother would prefer to see it, if see it she must, with no one but strangers about her, rather than in the company of her own sons and daughters. The gentle Shelley never spoke harshly, it is said, of any other person than Byron, and that one lapse was caused by the publication of the poem, "Don Juan," for he felt that the poet was prostituting his genius by writing it. No one can deny that it was painted for the express purpose of telling graphically the story of a foul life and its hideous ending, but many will assume that it was painted to teach a moral, that its raison d' être is to act as a repellant and not as an attraction toward an evil life.

Very well, let us admit so much as that, for the sake of the argument, though we by no means thereby assent to its truth. A little reflection will convince any candid mind that such an admission simply emphasizes the impropriety of placing it in a public room exposed to promiscuous view. Suppose the father of a family, wishing to inculcate the lesson which this picture is supposed to teach, purchases a book giving a detailed account of the various "episodes" in the history of a man of evil life, ending with a careful exposé of the inevitable retribution. Does any one for a moment suppose that that father will gather his sons and daughters, of all ages, about him and proceed to read aloud to them the entire book from beginning to end, not sparing one "jot or tittle" of the recital? Which, think you, is the better way—this one, or a thoughtful, prayerful division of labor, the father reverently forewarning his sons, and the mother her daughters against the sure temptations that beset the path of youth, and thus forearming them to meet them bravely and subdue them victoriously? But this portion of the argument in favor of such pictures as the one in question is rendered absolutely nugatory by the attitude of the "new art criticism," whose advocates vehemently deny that pictures can convey a moral lesson.

Mr. George Moore, the eminent English art critic, once wrote of one of the figures in a picture by Deyas:

A life of low idleness is upon her face; we read there her whole life. The tale is not a pleasant one, but it is a lesson.

Later, he wrote concerning this extract:

I have written many a negligent phrase, many a stupid phrase, but the phrase, "It is a lesson," is the first hypocritical phrase I ever wrote. I plead guilty to the grave offense of having suggested that a work of art is more than a work of art. The picture is only a work of art, and therefore void of all ethical signification. In writing the abominable phrase, "but it is a lesson," I admitted the ridiculous contention that a work of art may influence a man's moral conduct. . . In the abominable phrase which I plead guilty to having written, I admitted the monstrous contention that our virtues and vices originate not in our inherited natures, but are found in the books we read and the pictures we look upon. . . To soothe the reader who is shocked by everything that lies outside his habitual thought, and to dodge the reader who is always on the watch to introduce a discussion on that sterile subject, "morality in art," to make things pleasant for everybody, to tickle the Philistine in his tenderest spot, I told a little lie; I suggested that some one had preached. I apologize for having hypocritically declared a great picture to be what it is not, and could not be—a lesson.

This sweeping iconoclasm completely and finally destroys the one argument in favor of such books as "Don Juan" and "Mlle. de Maupin," and such pictures as "Don Juan in Hell," i. e., that they convey a moral lesson and are produced for that purpose. If this is not their purpose, what purpose have they? Simply pictorial. To present to the "mind's eye," through the retina, a picture of an evil life. A noble employment for "great" artistic power, is it not? The new criticism protests unceasingly that the aim of art is not truth, but beauty. Do not the sources and the circumstances in which a great artist in literature or painting finds the "beauty" which inspires him set the indelible and unmistakable seal upon the character of his own soul, and of his genius?

We close this section of our argument by reminding the reader that we are now speaking, not of all nudity in art, but of such pictures as the one by the Spanish artist, which, if they have no moral purpose, as is now claimed, are an insult to the public and a degradation of art.

For ourselves we can say that that woman who can, without regret and pain, look upon the scene of a young man and young woman viewing this picture together—especially if the young girl be her own daughter, pure and unspotted from contact with evil—has reached a height in her progress upward toward the ideal which we have not yet attained.

It is claimed that numerous nude statues in public places have the effect to produce types of greater physical beauty, and by doing so elevate the race. The effect of mind upon matter, personal striving on the part of individuals of the people to approach the ideal thus set before them, and a reciprocal influence between the mind of the artist and his art, are the means by which the physical elevation of the race through the nude in art, is to be affected.

Even if it were true that the ancient Greek race was physically ennobled by "classic art," at what cost was such an elevation purchased! Praxiteles introduced the first nude female statue, which was at once rejected, then accepted, and finally cherished so affectionately that nothing would induce the city which possessed it to part with it. By-and-by the pure ideal of the Grecian artistic mind became a sensual ideal in the common mind; art, responding to the prevailing taste, passed inevitably through the phases of degradation and declension to its final destruction. First, a pure art; then a nude art; then a sensualized people, and, by reaction again, a sensualized art, the rediscovered examples of which are too prurient to be shown to the public even in this age of devotion to "high art"; then sure decline and at last complete downfall.

If the gradual dissolution of the Roman empire assisted in the going to decay of classical art, that decay came "all the more quickly and thoroughly," says James Jackson James, "because of the sensuality into which it had sunk."

Even the "divine Raphael" became intoxicated with "the beautiful forms of antiquity" which he "would fain revive," and the beginning of the decadence of modern art dates from that revival.

Let it be understood that those who desire a pure and refined art stand for no sweeping iconoclasm. Let it be conceded that the study and representation of the human form is a necessary adjunct of all highest art, but let it be as rigidly maintained that, as Ruskin says, "There is a right and wrong way to paint and carve the human form. It is difficult to say," he adds, "by just what minute difference the right conception of the human form is separated from that which is luscious and foul, for the root of all is in the seeking and love of the painter; who, if of impure and feeble mind, will color all that he touches with clay staining, as Bandinelli puts a foul scent of human flesh about his marble Christ, and as do many among the moderns; but if of mighty mind and pure he may pass through all places of foulness, and none will stay upon him, as Michael Angelo; or he will baptize all things, and wash them with pure water, as our own Stothard." Ruskin also affirms that the right use of color, and the careful severity of form and hardness of line practiced by the old religious painters, redeemed such nudity as they were compelled to treat. "These religious painters, with Michael Angelo and the Venetians, except Titian, whose Magdalens are truly disgusting, form a great group, pure in sight and aim, between whom and all other schools by which the nude has been treated, there is a great gulf fixed, and all the rest, compared with them, seem striving how best to illustrate that word of Spencer:

"'Of all God's works which doe this world adorn,
There is no one more faire and excellent
Than is man's body both for power and forme
Whiles it is kept in sober government.
But none than it more foul and indecent
Distempered through misrule and passions base.'"

It is well known to all students of art that Fra Beato regarded painting as an act of worship, to be engaged in only after a season of fasting and prayer, and thus he felt himself inspired for his work by God Himself. Such veneration of his art was incompatible with any use of it which would degrade the taste or morals of his fellowmen, and it was but a natural corollary from this that he esteemed it a sin to paint the nude, and refused to do so, and his representation of the human form stands to-day as the one perfect example of that portion of the art.

Correggio may be suggested as an example of the other extreme, wherein is shown the "seeking and love of the painter," who, as Ruskin says, "With less apparent and evident coarseness than Rubens, to whom much may be forgiven on account of his redeeming color, has more of inherent sensuality, wrought out with attractive and luscious refinement, and that alike in all subjects—Madonnas, St. Catherine, Diana, etc., not to mention any of his works more definitely evil." Beneath these works of Correggio, Ruskin again places some of those of Guido, which "are devoid alike of art and decency, and so on, descending to the absolute clay of the moderns, who, for the daring frankness of the old men—with whom much of what is evil and base in subject and tendency is redeemed by what is pure and right in hue, and whose art seldom missed of human grandeur even when it failed of holy feeling—have substituted a mean, carpeted, gauze-veiled, mincing sensuality of curls and crisping pins, out of which nothing can come, I believe, but moral enervation and mental paralysis."

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Honors to Women.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—A few mornings ago I went with Lady Henry Somerset to Westminster Abbey where perhaps a hundred invited guests assembled to see the Princess Christian unveil a tablet in honor of Madame Jenny-Lind Goldschmidt, that Swedish Nightingale, whose visit to America in 1850 was one of the events the knowledge of which reached us in our pioneer home on a Wisconsin prairie and set my eleven-year-old spirit agog with wonder and delight that a woman's voice could thus enthrall humanity. But most of all, I have from that day on loved her fame and memory because when asked if the laudation in the atmosphere in which she lived did not divert her mind from the highest ideals, she answered: "When I come forward and the people greet me so warmly, while I am glad and grateful, I only sing to God." She rendered back to Him His own who had given her the most marvelous vocal instrument of which the world has record.

As is the custom in this country, everybody remained standing because a member of the royal family was expected, and soon we heard a rustle along the aisle behind us, while every head was craned to see Dean Bradley, the chief ecclesiastic of the Abbey, marching along the aisle in his official robes, while beside him, with slow and dignified step, came a lady of medium height, rather stout, and as we should say, "well-to-do looking." She was in quiet, tasteful morning costume, and it was the princess. Behind her walked her husband and her daughter, and behind these Otto Goldschmidt, widower of Jenny Lind, and their daughter, with several other lesser lights. As the group formed around the medallion we heard the voice of the Dean intoning the usual prayer, "Prevent us, O Lord, in all our doings," and in a moment more there was a drawing of cords, the white cloth was pushed aside, and there was the medallion. Not a word was uttered so far as we could hear, and I wondered if it would not have grated on the sensibilities of that aristocratic group to hear a woman's voice break the traditions of that "silence in the church" which the State Church of Great Britain observes even to the exclusion of women's voices from its choirs! Just then at a distance we heard the clear tones of one of the Abbey choristers singing the words, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." So it was a man who, in the most famous pile of religious masonry that the Anglo Saxons have reared, was set to sing in memory of that great woman's voice forever hushed.

This was in keeping with the action of the Archbishop of Paris, who, a few days later at Notre Dame, went through the ceremonial of the canonization of Joan of Arc, but who, when it was suggested that a woman might well sing on that occasion, declared that no woman's voice could be heard in the great state church of France. As the ice lingers latest in the low places of the valley because the sun is longest reaching it, so the melting of medieval prejudice against the free action of woman's mind and heart will be longest resisted by the ecclesiastic mind with its predisposition inherited from the cloister; and we cannot wonder or blame anybody that this should be so; it is simply the effect of a cause, and to kill it out we must not inveigh against the individual who is what he is as the result of certain forces, but we must emphasize more and more, by word and work, the principle and practice of a homelike world in which men and women go side by side "through every lane of life."

The medallion that we saw is placed under a beautiful statue and monument to Handel, the great artist whose "Messiah" was her favorite composition, and around the tender and womanly bas-relief portrait of Jenny Lind (as one likes best to call her) are the chiseled words, "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

While singing in New Orleans, Jenny Lind heard that the wife of a Presbyterian preacher lay dying, and had expressed a longing desire to hear her sing "I know that my Redeemer liveth." She at once signified her wish to her manager, P. T. Barnum, to cheer the last moments of this unknown sister by her divine gift. Mr. Barnum objected stoutly, and endeavored to use his official power to prevent. But this high-souled woman put on her bonnet and, with her maid, sought the home of her about to enter into the new life, and made the prelude to the new song to the Lamb she was so soon to join in, by singing gloriously, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and she won the undying gratitude of a city.

When the somewhat uninspiring exercises were over we sought those flagstones of the great floor in Westminster underneath which lies all that was mortal of Tennyson and Browning. We remarked, as I imagine thousands must have done before us, how good it would be if the women of the world would place a bust of Elizabeth Barrett Browning and her poet husband side by side on the pillar that stands near the resting place of him who wrote "The Ring and the Book."

To my surprise, I find that my well-meant suggestion of a "love feast" at the National W. C. T. U. is strongly combated in several quarters. It had seemed to me to be the most harmless method by which we could outwardly express our heart affection as white ribbon women.

But as it is not at all essential and is objected to by women good and capable, I am most willing to "withdraw the motion," although I know that it has been seconded by many. I append one of the protesting letters.*

I confess my inability to see why any should also object (as some do) to the simple receiving of a little child by the W. C. T. U. members as a prospective recruit for our "peaceful war," and tying the white ribbon on the little one's wrist in token of our loving claim. More than this I did not mean to advocate, though as a matter of course, a woman minister has as much warrant as a man to administer any rite of the church that has consecrated her to that high calling, all of which is "respectfully" (and I may add humbly) submitted, by yours ever in the faith,

*DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I read Miss Willard's letter in THE UNION SIGNAL of March 15, 1894, in which she proposes or recommends to the state presidents that a day, preceding the next convention, "be set apart as Consecration day, and to open that by a love feast, at which bread and water be partaken of in unity of spirit, as an outward sign of our inward bond of peace." Now I am only one of our great white-ribbon army, but feel it my duty to protest in this matter, for the sake of unity and peace.

In the first place the W. C. T. U. is composed of Christian women of every denomination, and up to this time have been united all along the various lines of our work. To introduce a ceremony at our meetings in which all cannot conscientiously take part will be entering a wedge for dissension and trouble now and in the future. For instance, the "close communion Baptists" (as they are sometimes called) hold that the Lord's Supper is strictly a church or congregational ordinance, so they could not join in that ceremony, and it is the same with other denominations, they have their views according to their teaching in this matter.

I do not approve of infants and little children being "consecrated" to this work. It is the duty of parents to train their children so, that when old enough to understand these things, they will fall into line and work for God and Home and Every Land. These ceremonies are borrowed from the churches—and as no two agree, it will be impossible to introduce them into our gatherings and not produce trouble and dissatisfaction. If we faithfully follow out the lines already laid down in the W. C. T. U. by taking the pledge, giving time, talent and money, are we not showing sufficient fealty, without these useless (to many) ceremonies, in which all cannot take part? I hope our beloved leader will reconsider her request, and instead, have a prayer and song service—something in which all can participate.

Yours for peace and good will towards all,
ELLEN C. EDWARDS.

ECHOES FROM FAR-OFF BATTLE-FIELDS—SWEDEN

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In recent issues I have noted accounts of the temperance work in Denmark and Finland. Allow me to supplement them with a brief review of the temperance movement in another of the Scandinavian countries.

The temperance work in Sweden was not begun yesterday. Since the time of its inception it has, however, suffered many relapses and at times been held in disrepute. As early as the sixteenth century Gustof I., "the father of his country," passed a prohibitory measure and his grandson, the great Gustof Adolf (Gustavus Adolphus), followed in his footsteps. Those laws were, nevertheless, of short duration, but they were revived in 1756 and later in 1772, during the reign of Gustof III. Strange to say, this monarch suddenly changed his mind on the temperance question, and only two years afterward he established the famous state breweries and distilleries, through which he made the Swedes a nation of drunkards and the effects of which it will yet take decades to obliterate.

The circulation of temperance literature in Sweden dates back to the beginning of last century. Then the first tiny seeds were sown in the rocky soil—they were few and far between, but that they took root is shown to-day in the magnificent harvest. One of the first pamphlets was: "A patriot's thoughts regarding the manufacture of alcoholic drinks," (issued 1711) and the printed "thoughts" were emphasized by the voices of prominent men who breasted the waves of public opinion and declared the liquor traffic a menace to the welfare of the nation. Among those first "temperance fanatics" we find Carl von Linnæus, the great botanist, Urban Hjärne, one of Sweden's greatest medical lights, and others. Even the Muses sanctioned the temperance sentiment through one of the last of the eighteenth century poets and philosophers, Thomas Thorild, who stated the truth, that "a little is already intemperance because the thing itself is unnatural."

In the beginning of this century the flood, which since the establishment of the home stills in 1809 had swept over the historic country, reached high-water mark. Liquor was manufactured in every cottage, but at last the reaction came. Not until then was the temperance work properly organized.

The movement first began with so called "moderation societies." They were the first feeble efforts to stem the tide, and they were short-lived. It soon became apparent that no definite line could be drawn between "moderation" and intemperance, but, nevertheless, these societies were the foundation for teetotalism.

Sweden's first temperance speaker was Herr Wieselgren, a noted preacher. He formed a temperance society in his own parish, which, after three years' existence, counted one thousand six hundred members. During that time he also succeeded in closing no less than two hundred stills and distilleries and the same number of "speak easies," to use a modern parlance, in this same parish,—comment is unnecessary. If ever there was a nation "preserved in alcohol" it must have been the Swedish, and only the sturdy Norse stock could have survived such a "preservation."

Through the unceasing labors of Rev. Wieselgren and his followers similar societies sprung up in different parts of the country, and in 1837 these branches were organized into the "Swedish Temperance Society."

In 1855 the home-stills were at last abolished, and the purpose for which this society had been organized was in the main accomplished. The interest in the movement began to wane; the leaders had principally directed their efforts against the manufacture and sale of whisky, losing sight of wine, beer and lighter drinks, and now they considered their labors ended.

This was the turning point of temperance work in Sweden. Total abstinence became the battle-cry of the new standard-bearers, and the scattered forces rallied under the banner of the Bands of Hope in the sixties and seventies. 1879 the first lodge of Good Templars was founded, and the ranks were later on recruited by the National Order of Good Templars, the Swedish Society of Blue Ribboners and the Order of Templars. The membership of the different societies is now as follows: The Blue Ribbon Society, 55,309 members; the World's Order of Good Templars, 50,090 members; the National Order of Good Templars, 16,968; the Order of Templars, 25,000.

November 4, 1892, a bill was passed introducing scientific temperance instruction in the public schools, and in the parliament is found to-day many a champion for prohibitory law.

This much regarding the past. Of the present a few additional words later.

"A TENDERNESS OF SPOTLESS SNOW AND ROSE BLOOM."

SURELY there never fell so pure a light
From any crystalline cathedral
As that borne down with the soft, summer rain
Through the pink apple-blooms,
the lucid green
Of June's uncankered leaves, and branches
gray,
Scutcheoned with lichens, tracery more antique
Than earls or bishops bear upon their shields.

A color not of earth, a tenderness
Of spotless snow and rose bloom clothed the tree
That stood up underneath the heavens, one flower.
The multitudes that John saw in white robes,
Singing the Heart Divine, whose living drops
Had cleansed their stains and warmed them into life,—
That multitude looked through my window panes,—
And with them I joined praises.

To-day I worship in the apple-boughs,
With the great congregation of the flowers
That come up to their heights, as came the tribes
Of old unto Mount Zion once a year;
A passover of perfect, open praise.

The world we live in wholly is redeemed;
Not man alone, but all that man holds dear:
His orchards and his maize; forget-me-not
And heart's-ease in his garden; the wild
Aerial blossoms of the untamed wood,
That make its savagery so home-like; all
Have felt Christ's sweet love watering their roots:
His sacrifice has won both earth and heaven.
Nature in all its fullness is the Lord's.
There are no Gentile oaks, no Pagan pines;
The grass beneath our feet is Christian grass;
The wayside weed is sacred unto Him.
Have we not groaned together, herbs and men
Struggling through stifling earth-weights unto light,
Earnestly longing to be clothed upon
With our high possibility of bloom?
And He, He is the Light, He is the Sun,
That draws out of darkness, and transmutes
The noisome earth-damp unto Heaven's own breath,
And shapes our matted roots, we know not how,
Into fresh leaves and strong, fruit-bearing stems;
Yea, makes us stand, on some consummate day,
Abloom in white transfiguration robes.

THE MEMBER-AT-LARGE.

V.

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

It was at the top of University Hill and a mile away. Against the reddening sunset sky rose fair and white the beautiful dome of the capitol, small if compared with that statelier one at Washington, but perfect and pure in every line. The member-at-large whose hasty constitutional had taken her through the main street of the city, and who had pushed from her path banana skins and papers, and a tin can or two, and much general refuse from the small shops along her way, drew a long breath of relief.

"Of course if there were any way of depositing tin cans on the dome they would do it," she said. "It is almost the only spot where I do not find them."

"That is your craze," said her companion. "Your present one, at least. I don't wonder. There ought to be some sort of association for picking up things or hindering their being thrown out, which would really be better, but as matters are now I doubt if it would accomplish much. It seems to be part of the theory of liberty that every one shall deposit what he will at his door, and though the city ordinance forbids piling ashes and that sort of thing even otherwise respectable citizens do it constantly. I don't see what to do about it. Do you?"

"Look at those boys," returned the member-at-large, with apparent irrelevance. "So far as any sort of decent bearing goes they might be a set of young hoodlums. Hands in their pockets, and slouching along, feet scuffling, shoulders round, and their clothes looking as if they had been thrown at them. Of course base-ball and athletics and drill are going to alter all that, but think what sort of training lies in the background that makes it possible for them to appear here like that in the beginning."

"They are going through the cub stage," the friend answered. "Don't you know that that is inevitable with every boy?"

"A purely Anglo-Saxon theory. No other nation has its cub stage. It is not needed, and it robs the boy of a good-sized bit of his birthright. No; as usual it is the women who must be held responsible, and precisely they have not thought out the situation but accepted unquestioningly the time-honored falsehood that a boy must go through such a period of condensed disagreeableness. Do you suppose a young Greek ever held himself in such fashion or spoke in such tones? There is not a peasant abroad who would not be ashamed of them, but it seems to be considered part of the American Declaration of Independence. There are three hundred and eight reasons for it, however."

"What can you mean?" asked the amazed friend.

"Wait till my turn comes again and you shall know," was the reply; and when the turn had come, this is what the member-at-large read:

"What I want to talk of with you this evening has its origin in a series of facts, sufficient in number to satisfy the most technical mind, and each one capable of full demonstration. It was a newspaper reporter who made the first count, seeing in it an opportunity for the item in search of which he spends his days, and I followed in his wake bent upon seeing if he had told the truth. Up and down and across the pretty city, numbering one by one the three hundred and eight, hidden all winter under a coverlid of snow and ice, turning now to vapor in the unexpected sunshine and warmth of the early March days, showing their full proportions and astonishing their creators with the magnitude of the thing their own hands had made.

"For the three hundred and eight were ash-heaps, which the March winds took in charge, sifting generously on the passer-by, and distributing impartially wherever ledge or projection of building, public or private, offered lodgment. That a city ordinance forbids the piling of rubbish, ashes or garbage of any order in the street, or on the sidewalk appears to have made no difference in the formation of these piles, beginning in a mere scuttleful dumped into the fresh snow, sinking at once out of sight, and so satisfying such conscience as may in the first offense have stirred a little. Naturally, as each fresh snowfall covered all traces of repeated transgression, it gradually blunted, and at last even justified its acts. It is these three hundred and eight heaps that are my text, made up not only of ashes but of old boots and shoes, the omnipresent tin can and all flotsam and jetsam of household life in its most unlovely aspects. And the reason they were there can be better given you in the outraged comment of a German friend, whose consternation at American methods never ceased, and whose summary I have more than once used:

"'It is a country where always I find dirt and more dirt. I look to see why, and soon I find it is because all will throw down and none will pick up. Why is dot so? That I know not, but ever I find that big and little— all alike, will ever throw down; and so if there are none to pick, why not dirt? I look in houses much and see how it is. A German child play, and when it is done comes the mother, or it may be the nurse, and her must see all in place. All small things in drawers or shelves, maybe. All great things where the mother will, but order, order forever. Ach, himmel! But America is not so! The American play and throw while he play, till all is on the floor, and then say to mother, or nurse, Come, you pick up, or he go and say naught; but mother must pick without saying. That is so in house. Out of house, under the sky, how is that? Same as other time. Alway throw down. So in city is dirt and in country is dirt, and then say, Why so dirty? City must pay men to sweep, but they sweep not much. If I were ruler of city, I say, each man, each child pick always. Each man sweep his own share, and when that is done comes the wagon and all is taken. What I say is true. I find my own land clean. There every child in wood or field same as house, he must not throw on the earth. If he sees things lie there, then he knows someone is break the law, and he run sometimes for fear he be caught and told he is done dot. But in our wood, deep always, and green, and so still, so clean, one sees never tin can and paper. Himmel, what shame to see ever dot tin can! It make me shame for all American that do so that way. I go to picnic and always tin can and much paper; Ach, how much paper I see! And if I pick up then all laugh and say, "Oh, you German. Americans not mind. Let it alone. Who care?" I say that bad, too bad. Why not care? It is your own country. Do you want dot country always with paper and tin can? Why they not pick up?'

"Here we have one phase of dirt and its methods, viewed by eyes taught from babyhood the beauty of order and the power of law to compel it. Now take another, whose offence is voiced by the Englishman who, not only in his own but in all countries where English is known, has done most to make clear the inner meaning of beauty and order and law. It is the wail of John Ruskin over the once lovely pool of Carshalton, and this is what he writes:

"'Just where the welling of stainless water, trembling and pure like a body of light, enters the pool of Carshalton, cutting itself a radiant channel down to the gravel, through warp of feathery weeds all waving, which it traverses with its threads of clearness, like the chalcedony in moss agate starred here and there with white grenouillette; just in the very rush and murmur of the first spreading currents, the human wretches of the place cast their street and house foulness; heaps of dust and slime and broken shreds of old metal and rags of putrid clothes. They have neither the energy to cart it away nor decency enough to dig it into the ground, and thus is it shed into the stream to diffuse what venom of it will float and melt far away in all places where God meant those waters to bring joy and health.'

"Anglo-Saxon methods these it seems, for we too are Anglo-Saxon English, with but a few generations between us, and the old home, whose beauty is more and more at the mercy of trade, and the crowding manufactories whose smoke blackens the heavens and defiles the earth, and leaves no clean spot for the foot of man. How is it that for France and Germany such profanation would be impossible? How is it that in this America which boasts a system of universal education more comprehensive than anything that England has till recently known, there is still no education in that which makes most for happiness in outward living, and that beauty and its laws have no inch of space in the scheme?

"This is the statement for the mass. The fact that a genuine spirit of art is growing up amongst us, and that our work takes high rank among artists abroad, does not touch the fact that for the great rank and file of Americans there is not only no art but no sense of what it may mean. And here we come at last to our own share in the matter, and the recognition that the privilege of the cultured is their obligation also. Noblesse oblige; and it is for each one of us who meditates on the significance of the three hundred and eight ash heaps, to meditate also on what method will best prevent their reappearance with another and yet another spring.

"With the heads of these households it is practically impossible to treat. Their education must often be said to be 'finished.' But there are the children, our own often, hardly less aiders and abettors in the throw-down-and never-pick-up system. With them there is still time to work. Tree-planting day is opening up to them the meaning and uses of the thing that before had neither meaning nor use save as something to burn for fuel or climb in nest-robbing. Why should not every foot of ground on which we walk be also cared for and tended and made beautiful by the hands which have as yet never been taught what part they may have in beauty? Why is it not part of our privilege to see that such teaching begins, and that if the school cannot and will not admit it, that in our homes at least with every child that comes in faintest degree under our influence, the new system may begin?

"Not alone in the removal of mere unsightliness is there work to be done. The enormity of many modern conditions, the obtuseness of perception and the death of any real art spirit, have been mourned over, not only by Ruskin, but by Morris and every one of that school who are thinkers as well as art lovers. And out of it has grown something which is the seed for more and always more of the same sort; something so practical, so simple and so certain in its results that I want, at the risk of telling you something you all know already, to give you a little of its story, and ask why something of the same sort may not easily and directly begin its work here and now.

"It is the Fitzroy Picture Society of London, whose work is barely a twelvemonth old, and which came to it through precisely such discouragement and even bitterness as mark the words of Ruskin quoted in the beginning. Watts had added his wail to that of Morris as he wrote: 'Sensibility to beauty is, as a natural possession, nearly extinguished in modern times, and art as a factor in education is overlooked and neglected.'

"Sound economics, good ethics have been gradually demonstrating their necessity, but how is a sensibility to beauty to be aroused in a time when every tendency seems to crush out imagination, always the chief builder of hope in the heart of man? Only with the children could there be won a place in their hearts for beauty, and these men decided that photograph and lithograph must work where other forms of art were impossible, and that by it the masses might be reached.

"They designed at once a series of colored prints for school-rooms, workmen's clubs, churches and the like; strong and vigorous in outline, original and striking in conception, pure in form and beautiful in color. The first exhibition of the designs was in Liverpool, where deep interest was excited, and their educational value at once admitted. Later, in London, they found their place, and are gradually being introduced, the leader in the movement, the well-known artist, Mr. Heywood Sumner, writing of them:

"'To teach the young and the gracious of every age to see, to think and to feel, and therefore to become more actively and securely virtuous, is the sphere which Wordsworth gives to sight in education; and to free, arouse, dilate, is the special scope of art. School walls should raise an ideal for children's eyes. There will be small chance of a great public art arising again to express the public spirit of the time, if our children's eyes are left to be educated in reckless disorder by means of advertisements, and in triviality by means of low comic prints. For many of these little citizens will soon be playing their part in the shaping of democratic England, and by their votes will be deciding whether imaginative works of art are treasures to be valued by the people.

"'Accordingly I believe that the national school-room should be recognized as a serious field for connecting art with daily life, and that where there is a desire for simple vital art on school walls, there will further arise a desire that our other public modern buildings should be more expressively and worthily adorned. Thus our ultimate aim touches on the large and intricate question of the spectacle of modern daily life which has been shaped for us so long by men of commerce and men of science.'

"In Felix Adler's Workingman's School in New York, I have seen the child taken straight from the slums, in a few weeks modeling with delight a cluster of leaves, his eyes opened once for all to the beauty of lines, and what power his own hands may have in creating them. If for every child such chance were given, there would be an end forever to the hideousness that disfigures our towns and villages, makes the monuments for which our congressmen vote a terror, and their verdict on any work of art the grimmest of farces. And right here, we who talk of it and laugh or wail as temperament directs, can take the matter in hand and, for some one, at least, make these blunders impossible. It is as practical a form of Christianizing as we have yet attempted. It humanizes the hoodlum; it gives to restless hands an occupation, and to empty minds a purpose, and I guarantee that if work in these directions once begins, we shall find not only its good for the learner, but for the teacher as well."

HIGH ART IN FRIENDSHIPS.

BY LILLIAN WHITING.

Never strike leagues of friendship with cheap people where no friendship can be.—EMERSON.

People, like pictures, should have the advantage of a good light and of fair and true perspective. This is only simple justice. Many persons are like the pictures whose color is put on in the décomposition du ton—the method that blends only at a certain focal distance. Seen too near, the canvas is all one blot and blur of shapeless smears of paint, without meaning or values; but go to the true focal distance, and, behold—the purple smear becomes a mountain range; the shapeless patches of blue or gray or rose become a sky and clouds; the red and green spots show as scarlet flowers in the grass, and the entire landscape is palpitating with light and throbbing with color. It is luminous and beautiful; the artist has fairly painted light as well as color. But all this is only to be felt and seen at the true focal distance. Another school of painting permits the closest scrutiny, but at a distance you miss the wonderful atmospheric effects and the light and life of the impressionist.

There are people who correspond to each: those who suffer by being seen too near, and those who may be seen to advantage in small details, but whose character or achievements when viewed in perspective are not impressive. Each must be given the advantage of the true light and the true focal distance.

Again, friendship, like love, must be largely taken "for better, for worse." It is idle to "throw over" a friend who in many ways gives you pleasant and agreeable companionship because, indeed, you discover faults not at first perceived. If one waits to find perfection in his friend, he will probably wait long and live and die unfriended at last. The fine art of living, indeed, is to draw from each person his best. Friendship is in itself as fine an art as is music or painting or sculpture. Let the artist approach the key-board and what melodies does he evolve. Let the untrained and the ungifted come, and we have discords. The skilled fingers of the sculptor touch the clay into beauty of form and charm of suggestion; the painter, the poet, brings color and vision and power; but the one not endowed with the artist's genius produces discords, daubs or meaningless rhyme. So with life. The individual gifted with tact, faith, sweetness and charm creates the very qualities in which he believes and which he himself possesses. He "gets on" with people harmoniously. It is the exquisite result of high qualities.

Per contra, to be swift to discern the faults or follies of others does not argue the possession of superiority. It takes far less insight to discover defects than it does to discern noble and lovely qualities. "It requires a god to recognize a god." Noble people recognize each other intuitively. Of course there are persons with whom no friendship can be—people who are cheap, petty, selfish and self-seeking. One should not "strike leagues of friendship" with these, for with them no friendship can be.

Nothing is more fatal to friendly relations than complaints and reproaches and demands for explanations. People must be judged in the wholeness of their conduct. A thousand subtle influences, unexpected and unforeseen events, have their action and reaction on life. A thousand things occur that can neither be analyzed nor defined. Many a temporary alienation is effectively overcome by silence. Reproaches, questionings, but widen the gulf. Leaving it alone, taking up other interests and ideas, bridges it over. Then, too, if people would meet—really meet—it is in an atmosphere above the merely personal and local and visible. By different and very diverse paths they may gain the same spiritual plane, and when there, meeting is inevitable. In fact, there is this element of inevitableness in all friendship worthy the name. It is not so much an achievement, or an agreement, as it is a predestined relation. Its strongest bond is charm. "Men talk of morals,' says Emerson, "but it is manners that associate us." More deeply still, it is tastes that associate us. An expression that jars on one's sense of taste will undo in an instant all the influence or impression made by sterling virtues through a term of years. A defect in knowledge, or even in morals, can be condoned, but a defect in taste is hopeless. For its roots lie deep in temperament, in the lack of all that culture which is the result of a thousand subtle influences.

The defect in taste that results in fussiness, in want of consideration for others, in forgetfulness and carelessness in little things; that imposes upon the time, strength or resources of other people, is a defect more inimical to friendship than is many a graver fault in morals. It implies lack of good breeding, lack of refinement, lack of a thousand essentials of daily intercourse.

Cheapness of nature can be redeemed only from one source—that of the invisible power on the divine side of life. By seeking this in silence and concentration for a little time each day, all refinement and loveliness and charm can be achieved. It is the magic of life.

STRENGTH AND BEAUTY.

BY MARY A. LATHBURY.

Did you ever note the "joy of the Lord" in an apple tree? The life of the tree rises inch by inch through root and stem and branch and twig, drawn by the ardent sun, until some heavenly morning it bursts into an expression of joy and beauty that is as old as creation, and yet forever new, and the tree overflows with a rosy foam of flowers. It is a necessity of its life, and when the rapture has passed, the peaceful and orderly work of molding and swelling and coloring the fruit follows; but the "joy that cometh in the morning" of the year comes only then—like the song that the lark "at heaven's gate sings."

Later, it is a noble hymn of praise, far more deep and full; yet there are souls that have looked upon an apple tree in bloom, and have gone on the strength of that meat forty days, to whom an apple tree in full fruitage would not bring unusual delight or satisfaction. Such an one was Henry Ward Beecher. I also remember a certain good Doctor M—, who worshiped before a glorious apple tree one May morning, as Moses did before the burning bush, and for more than a month he tried to impart to his friends the vision of things spiritual that came to him with it; but it is only "the man whose eyes are open" who finds the Lord in common things, and it is he who leads his flock in the desert who comes upon "holy ground."

"As the days of a tree are the days of my people," says the Word. But we are a people who expect fruitage without a flowering time. We think we cannot waste ourselves in the joy of living, and the giving of joy, when so many are waiting to be fed. There are ten thousand flowers upon a tree that bears but a thousand apples, and why the Lord should be so wasteful we cannot understand, and so we miss much of the joy of our May-time; and when the time for ripe fruit arrives we bemoan our barrenness, or the smallness of our fruit. The wise believer is not so. "He shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season." He cannot make the life that flows through him, but he can let it flow in its own divine fullness into its own forms.

The overflowing life forces of Nature are but the type of the fulness behind our unready and uninstructed hearts, for the Lord not only waits to flood us with life, but with "life more abundantly." Nothing of genuine life is wasted in all the Lord's kingdom, and there is no such thing as "mere beauty." Beauty is goodness and truth made plain and clear to the dull, human understanding, and becomes its sacramental bread and wine. To "behold the beauty of the Lord" and to "inquire in His temple," whether it be under a roof of apple blossoms or of carven angels, is to eat and drink at His table.

Let none, then, who are looking for fruit, pass by the flowering time, or deplore the superabundance, if he can say, "My cup runneth over;" for our Lord came to "give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness, that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord that He might be glorified."

A MORNING AT NIAGARA FALLS.

Thoughts on Self-Surrender.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Of all the thoughts Niagara has evoked—and I suppose they would make many volumes if literature were searched for them—perhaps the one that comprehended best the panorama here spread out was written by James G. Brainard, a young poet who had never heard this roar, nor seen this whiteness of eternity. But for a single sentence, it seems to me that of Emerson is most suggestive, where he says, "Difference of level makes Niagara." Of this I thought one memorable day. The lower level of consecration and self-abandonment is the path of truest power. Standing here singing "Rock of Ages, Cleft for Me," there came a concept of analogies full of lessons to my spirit.

In all that roar and din the gentle whisper of Lake Michigan's soft summer wavelets came to my ear, the lake at home, beloved by all of us, and known so long and well in all its moods, rejoiced in when the foaming white caps chased each other like eager coursers at a tournament, and feared, almost, when the great yellow waves lifted themselves ocean high and roared their wrath in the wintry storm. But to Niagara Lake Michigan had come to lay its greatness down; it had traveled fast and far from its beautiful and varied shores to pour itself over these rocks, so awful and so high. In the thunder of it all, I heard the deep, orchestral voice of that supreme lake of them all, Superior, hastening onward with mighty tread from its northern fastnesses and dreary strips of wilderness; and then came Huron thundering down with heavy waves; and then the gleam of Erie, that had mirrored many cities on its cultivated shores, splendid in themselves and historic in the vast work back of them.

Yet all these wondrous waters had gathered in above the cataract, and though fretted here and there by obstacles of rocks and islands, and hesitating for a moment, they had poured themselves with awful majesty, their very semblance gone; spun, woven, whipped, beaten, over the billowy brink in the utter abandonment of self-surrender, as they took the leap of death, calling only upon God. But the rainbow of faith spanned their grave and heralded their resurrection. To me it was an emblem of the Holy Spirit let down from heaven with light and warmth and actinic ray of divine vitality—the real power behind all powers.

After the plunge the great lakes lie there seemingly sluggish and inactive, as if stunned by the descent. This, however, is of brief duration, for a mighty force is in them. I think Edison has said there is enough power at Niagara, if correlated into electricity and coiled and stored and transported to New York, to turn every spindle on the way and furnish the total forces needed to carry on all departments of mechanical work in the metropolis of America. So the great lakes have gained a mighty impulse, and because they have their powers are mightier. Those deep, strange waves, they start off, now, on their inevitable journey; for it was to reach the sea they took that leap, and all of gravitation drew them to it. The whole current of their being set that way, and they could do no other. They can really care for no less journey; they have no other home; their insatiable desire for unity with the source of their being, the great fathomless and restful heart of the ocean, urges them on. Nothing can stop them now; they are headed toward their source. But on the way men ask them to turn mills, to furnish power for various industries, and they take time for that, helping to the utmost in every pursuit of man, happy and blithe as they make the little wheels go spinning around, singing their song of sunny toil, laughing in foam as they come down the sluice-ways, and the moment that they are released, seeking their natural current, going away upon their unreturning journey.

So it is with the soul of man intent on God, who is its natural home, and happy is that soul and blessed that Christian, however great, that takes the holy leap of consecration and speeds onward toward the satisfying sea!

OUR FLOWER MISSION WORK.

Like all things of permanent value, the flower mission department of the W. C. T. U. is an evolution. Primarily it reaches back to one life, and that life unconscious of its far-reaching influence. No better illustration of Emerson's lines,

"Nor knowest thou what argument
Thy life to thy neighbor's creed hath lent,"

could be found; only the "neighbor" must in this case widen out in its meaning to the world, for the waves of divine helpfulness so simply set in motion are to-day washing the shores of an universal humanity.

Let us look at the links in this chain of evolution. First. A Boston school-teacher, going each day from her home in one of the beautiful suburbs to her school in the heart of the city. She felt a longing to carry some of the beauty and freshness of the green world into the stifled lives she saw about her, and so she drew upon her own and her neighbor's gardens, and each day passed through the streets with her arms filled with flowers which she gave to those about her. The children soon came to watch for her coming, to crowd around her with eager clamorings, till her daily journey became a triumphal passage, leaving light, perfume and gladness in its wake.

Second. A friend, knowing that summer's work, felt that its beneficent influence should not be confined to one locality, and wrote its simple record for one of the large religious papers.

Third. An invalid in a far-away city read that record. She had long since passed through the Gethsemane of recognizing herself as hopelessly cut off from her young activities; of knowing that the couch upon which she lay must be henceforth the center of her life. It remained for her to say whether or not it should also be the circumference.

Bravely she had faced that question. In a touching submission she had bowed 'neath the affliction, but with a faith and a courage indomitable she had also risen above it, and already her sick chamber was known as the center of many beneficencies which reached out to others. She was sought for by those in affliction, and bravely and sweetly did she minister to them of the comfort wherewith she had herself been comforted.

The story of that Boston teacher's work fell as seed in a prepared soil. Why should she not establish such a work in her own city—Louisville, Ky.? True, she could neither gather nor distribute the flowers, but others could and she could direct their work. Then the thought of those like herself tossing upon sick beds; of prisoners, of the weary and heavy-laden everywhere, came to her and she saw in some measure the glorious possibilities reaching out before her. That the divine inner beauty might be so closely linked to the outer as to be apparent to those who had not eyes to see it for themselves, she thought of tying the text card to the bouquets and thus the beauty of nature and the beauty of holiness were shown as one. Quietly she began her work, but quick hands were ready to take it up until its scope and province widened far beyond her thought.

Fourth. The President of the National W. C. T. U. was riding through the streets of Louisville with one of the most loved and most noted of temperance orators. Pointing to a cottage he said: "In that upper window you can just see the bed of the most loved woman in Kentucky." Always on the alert to learn of woman's work she plied him with eager questions; she visited the white shrine of that chamber of suffering, and, as a result, at the next National Convention the flower mission department became an accredited branch of the W. C. T. U., and the beloved invalid, Jennie Casseday, was made its superintendent.

To-day there is hardly a local union which has not taken up, to a greater or less degree, this beautiful mission. Those of the country pour the sweetness of their green fields and dainty gardens into the city; while those of the city travel miles with baskets upon their arms, climbing rickety stairs, up into tenement houses, through hospitals, through prisons, jails, police stations, asylums, poorhouses, into factories, on the street, everywhere scattering these living witnesses to the great truth that God is love. Each bouquet bears its text card tied with a white ribbon, thus linking heaven and earth together by the chain of sympathy and service.

For nearly ten years the center and soul of this work was left to rejoice in it; to date her letters "Sick Room" and yet to prove that a sick room may be a source of divine health to the world at large. A little more than a year ago she put on as an outer garment the immortality she had long worn as an inner. She has passed into the life beyond, but her works do follow her, and wheresoever this gospel of woman's work for humanity shall be preached this also that she has done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her.

The lessons? They are many. First among them must be this: that a living seed finds a prepared soil. In the economy of grace it cannot be otherwise. That which has life must live. Because that teacher's work was instinct with the divine life, which is love, it shall not return unto her void.

Another lesson is the ministry of beauty, and into that is so marvelously woven the ministry of pain that we stand in awe before the two as reverse sides of the same great truth. That pale, shrunken little human flower, lying among her pillows, seems at first thought so sad a contrast to the brightness of the roses and the lilies through which she ministered; but if we look more closely we see that the brightness and joy of the lilies were in her soul, that they were, after all, only a faint type of the perfume her life exhaled. We see that as the pain of pruning and the toil of culture minister to the beauty of the vine, so the pain of her life had ministered to and brought forth the beauty of holiness.

Great is the mystery of suffering, but there are times when its uses are shown to us in object lessons so clearly outlined that we can never quite forget, but for all time we must associate it in some dim, mysterious way, with the light and warmth and gladness of life. It is beautiful that our flower mission saint did this for us; that the room which radiated beauty and perfume to the world was a room of pain and suffering such as is given to but few to experience. Some day the riddle will be read clearly.

But the ministry of beauty per se must not be overlooked. It is a glad thing for the world that it is coming to recognize, even dimly, the mission of the beautiful. When it shall be fully recognized God's kingdom will be established upon earth. We have lived too long in the shadow of the old thought which made beauty a thing to be feared. Why God made beautiful things must have been a sore puzzle to men in other days. To us who are beginning to recognize Him as Infinite Beauty, it is becoming more and more apparent that He could make nothing else. The wealth of outward beauty is only a type of the beauty which dwells in the heart of God. Each flower by the wayside is its manifestation. The rocks and the mountains declare it; the seas and the trees join in its unfoldment. In the highest sense of the term sin is only a violation of the law of beauty, whether that beauty be physical, mental or moral, while the very fact that the beautiful can be so cruelly perverted as to make of itself sin proves that the salvation of humanity depends upon a true conception of what constitutes beauty. Therefore, everything which tends to increase man's right appreciation of and love for the beautiful, is of God.

Rejoice with great joy, therefore, ye who go forth on this roseate mission. Scatter flowers, smiles and kind words together.

Let the outward expression of beauty but voice your own inward peace of soul and verily there shall awaken, wherever your footsteps tread, a hunger, not only for the flowers you carry in your hands, but for the flowers which grow in the gardens of your souls.

The day is coming when all beauty shall be known to be one; when music, and laughter, and perfume, and sunshine, and flowers, as well as righteousness and justice shall be recognized as the garments in which He clothes Himself, "in whom we live and move and have our being."

"A GREAT MOTHER."

Frances Willard once said: "Never forget that the only indestructible material in destiny's fierce crucible is character. Beauty, money, fame cannot be carried beyond the horizon line that shuts around this cradle of a world; but love, joy, peace, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, are jewels which by their very nature will survive the transit to the world invisible."

The truth and power of this expression has been recalled by a careful examination of the pages of "A Great Mother," just out of press,—the loving tribute of her daughter and cousin, Mrs. Minerva Brace Norton, to the "survivals" that existed in the character of Mary T. Hill Willard, so long known as the mother who gave a leader to the white ribbon movement of the world.

It is a great thing to have given such a priceless legacy to mothers as this book will prove. The quickening mother-heart of the world needs demonstration, not theories, of child-culture. It is the province of some to be the inspirers of deeds by the verbal expression of high ideals; it was Madam Willard's higher destiny to be the illustrator of ideals, the very spirit of deeds, the prophet-souled mother-spirit.

The keynote of her life may be found in the following words from her own lips: "I thank God that He ever said to me, 'Bring up this child for me in the love of humanity and the expectation of immortal life.'" Her training had one formula: "Conquer by love, if possible. It is more masterful than all other correctives combined." "We blame too much and praise too little. Tenderness and sympathy are the best teachers. Children understand these things very early. If you withhold your meed of praise where it is due you are simply a defaulter."

Miss Willard says: "If I have any gift as a public worker it is one I learned from my mother, that of developing the talents of others through warm appreciation and practical encouragement."

The difference in the parental government of the family is thus stated:

The father desired to train his children after his own preconceived models; he would have planted and watered and grafted and clipped and pruned character as he did the trees in which he delighted, making them to fit the places he chose for them, and realizing his solemn responsibility as a parent, not so much to the children as to their Maker. . . . . The mother's instinct was less dominating, and for that reason, more influential. When a child was given her the overpowering vision was of its inherent personality, its endless life and the responsibility laid upon her as guardian and helper of its development, rather than architect to shape the young immortal according to her preconceived plans. God and immortality were her pole-star.

Madam Willard had a Spartan soul, a Roman presence and an ideal Christian's dignity of character and cheerful trustfulness in the universal Good. There was a calm, non-assertive assurance about her, as though she knew she had made her "loftiest moods the guiding constellations" of her life. Her recognition of individual human rights was so clear that it gave her the unbewildered insight and singular courage to be as true to herself as she was to others. "I will not be unhappy for anybody; nobody can make me so, and nobody shall," was her royal edict of self-protection. "Life has nobler uses than regrets," was so practically her creed that she shook off the bondage of yesterday with a self-reliant, "I am free to say I did what I thought best," and then kept her face steadily in the dawn of the eternal present. "You have got your own life to live and look after; don't forget that," was her divine practicality.

But "the spiritual realm was her familiar abiding place." She knew no eternal life to come; it was here. She was a part of it. "Landscape of earth and sky" were her daily environment. "The existence and love of God are the pulse of our being whether we live or die," was her frequent saying. She believed in the perpetual revelation of God to truly seeking souls. Her daughter says: "Mother's whole concept of a perfect universe was that of a home. Concerning those who left us she said: 'They hasted to safe shelter on the other side. . . I have never really lost them. . . They are here in my room with me every day.'"

In speaking of Rest Cottage home she said: "I do not take all the resources with me, and I shall be often here. . . I often wonder whether I shall not be able to do more for her (Frances), for all whom I love, for this world in which I take so deep an interest, when no longer imprisoned in the body. It seems the most reasonable thing possible, and I look forward to it with keen anticipation."

The best summary of her character is given in the words of her young relative, Rilla Norton: "Madam Willard was a perplexing example of independence of environment. Living in this intense age, within a few miles of the most feverish activity known on this planet, she passed a life calm and placid. Yet no one cared more for progress than she did, no one was more conscious of the onward movement of the century. . . Like all great personalities, like nature itself, she was totally devoid of futility and impatience. You had a sense of space and time in her presence. Her whole being suggested immortality. . . Struggle for place and precedence, for wealth, for superficial culture, each would have fitted her as ill as the modern garments a Greek goddess. In these days of exciting, ephemeral pleasures, of hasty, inconsiderate action, of one-sided, inharmonious development, such a personality speaks more eloquently than could any essayist, of the beauty and value of the higher life."

Madam Willard's great nature was saturated with God and immortality as revealed in Jesus Christ. The vitality of her faith is contagious. Soul-study and soul-destiny will be approached with new certainty because of the "Great Sunset" of her life. Endless generations of mothers and their little ones will acquire a steadier motion Godward because this mother-natured woman was given to the world—and because she reared a reverent child who has known how to "pass on" the living spark to new home altars, to translate her mother's nobleness into words for holiest mother-growth.

THE MONEY POINT OF VIEW.

Bishop Haygood, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, has a characteristically keen article in a recent number of the New York Independent upon the matter of finance. He calls attention to the fact, several times emphasized in THE UNION SIGNAL, that every subject is viewed from the money standpoint. He then observes that as a person may look at a spot so long and steadily that at last he becomes unable to see it at all, so excessive attention to finance has seemingly rendered the people incapable of having clear ideas on the subject and instances as proof the present distress. He thinks that the subject of finance itself would be better understood and the national finances better managed if the nation could think of anything else. If our representatives would but remember that righteousness has something to do with establishing the foundations of a nation, and would occasionally propose a measure because of its rightness, instead of always and only looking at its bearing on the financial interests of the country, those very financial interests would be greatly benefited.

There is not a shadow of doubt but that Bishop Haygood is precisely right. We have run mad over money. Even the secular press acknowledges that craze for wealth is the curse of our times. One paper says: "When we think of nothing but money, how can we think of morals?"

The temperance advocate, or other reformer who goes before his audience with no argument save that eternal right is on his side, can hope for little success. Unless he can also show that the reform in question will better the financial condition of the people, or at the very least will not injure it, his views may be acknowledged as all right in "theory" but will be denounced as impracticable and visionary, and only possible of being acted upon in the millennium. Christ said, "Take no thought what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink or wherewithal shall ye be clothed, for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things;" but modern Christians interpret this to mean that we are to work to the utmost limit of our capacity, strain every nerve in the fierce contest with our fellows, "save" pennies and dimes, no matter at what cost to brain and heart, and—trust God for the rest.

All this is true and "pity 'tis 'tis true," but merely preaching against it is not going to make it much better. Persuasion reaches only individuals, and the cause of this state of things lies in the very organization of society itself. Individuals may and will rise above their environment, but the race as a whole, never. We shall continue to put money above everything else, to estimate a man's worth by the number of dollars he possesses, to consider the needless expenditure of dollars and cents a sin, and to pass by without comment the reckless waste of physical strength, the starving of brain and heart power, or even to look upon these with commendation if only they serve to gain more money, we shall continue to apply to every moral question the one test, how will it affect the wealth of the nation; in short, to make money our god so long as the system in which we live is a rough and tumble fight for mere physical existence. If we wish to change all this we must go back and seek the causes of it in the organization of society.

AN INTELLIGENT CRITICISM.

William T. Stead's new book, "If Christ came to Chicago," has received a keen but kindly review by the trenchant pen of Lady Henry Somerset in a recent issue of the Woman's Signal.

From the chapter on "Whisky and Politics," Lady Henry quotes the expression of the saloon-keeper, which seems to have been the keynote of Mr. Stead's crusade against evil in Chicago. This is the sentence:

If you want to do any good in this town, begin a crusade against the indecent saloons. You will do no good at all if you go against all the saloons, but you should distinguish between the decent and the indecent saloons.

In reply the loyal temperance reviewer says:

This is no new gospel; it has long been preached, and doubtless will be to the end. It was the great argument advanced by the anti-abolitionists—keep the good (?) masters, and restrict the traffic within certain prescribed limits. It is served up again by those who defend the legislation of the public house; but it appears to me that no one can read this chapter without feeling that in all probability this very "oasis of cleanliness and light," for thus Mr. Stead describes Brant's saloon, has done more to ruin Chicago, to demoralize its citizens and debase its politics, than the indecent saloons shunned by all who still retain the vestiges of self-respect; for here is planned the political prostitution of the voters, bought up at so many dollars apiece that men may be continued in power under whose leadership the reign of misrule, which the author deplores, may steadily strengthen and extend its malign sway.

Lady Henry shows her appreciation of the status of the W. C. T. U. in America when she suggests that Mr. Stead omitted one of the most potent agencies for good in Chicago, and concludes her able review thus:

But honor to whom honor is due; Mr. Stead, throughout his entire presentation of the political situation in Chicago, has absolutely failed to recognize the only philanthropic society that had the Christian fortitude, the womanly love, to "dare to be in the right with two or three," as his favorite poet, James Russell Lowell, has so truly described this divine courage. I mean that band of women who rose superior to rooted prejudice, social ostracism and religious rebuke, and stood for the new movement in which whisky and politics are to be mixed no longer. He is probably unaware that in 1884 the Women's Christian Temperance Union, for the first time in the history of American philanthropy or politics, stood for a political party whose rallying cry was the protection of the home, and dared the obloquy of the Republican and Democratic party, both of whom feared to antagonize the liquor power. Their action brought the expected result. Up to that time they had been upheld by the churches and praised by the press, but from that day on they have suffered financially, socially, and ecclesiastically the retribution which in earlier times fell on the abolitionists when they dared to pass from theory to practice, and tried to act as they believe Christ would have done had He been there.

"WHAT a grand bureau of communication THE UNION SIGNAL is between the sundered hearts around the globe," writes Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew from China, and she adds: "I would do wrong if I did not tell you what one of our grandest workers in central China said about THE UNION SIGNAL. It was something like this: 'I owe more to THE UNION SIGNAL than to any other one influence. It has broadened my mind and my sympathies. It has kept me in touch with the whole world and its needs. The paper is an incalculable blessing to women all over the world. No other newspaper can possibly take its place; it is so bright, so interesting, so helpful, so truly Christian.' So thoroughly is this consecrated woman acquainted with every phase of our work that, although for ten years pursuing her labors as a missionary in China, and separated from the home-land, yet we found her alive to every interest and awake to every forward movement of the W. C. T. U. The native women who take up our work are so dignified and self-respecting, although all women in China bear the weight of ages of oppression and slavery, and thousands of girls are sold every year into degraded lives with no power to defend themselves, being regarded solely as property." Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell are holding meetings of wonderful interest in the far East, and find that their remarkable work for purity in India has opened rather than closed the hearts of the Orientals to them. They were to sail for Japan April 18, where they are to work for several weeks. Thence they go to the Hawaiian Islands and hope to return to this country before our next annual Convention in Cleveland, November 16–21.

On Duty is so charitably disposed toward the flower mission that she cheerfully consents to turn her colnmn this week into a bureau of suggestions for the observance of this most beautiful of all white-ribbon red-letter days.

In the first place the date which all unions celebrate in unison is June 9, the birthday of our promoted missioner, Jennie Casseday, but the three summer months in the North and the entire twelve in the South may be utilized in the observance of this department.

Enter into the celebration with the spirit of privilege, remembering that the flower mission work, like mercy, is capable of a twofold blessing—it blesseth him that gives as well as him that receives.

Carry flowers to the rich as well as to the poor, and in doing so remember that the wealthy may more keenly appreciate a simple wild flower or an old-fashioned nosegay, because such are not to be found in their conservatories or to be purchased in the greenhouse.

Always attach the Scripture text card and white ribbon. Heavy bevelled cards, neatly printed and with a smooth, round hole punched in one corner for the insertion of the ribbon, may be purchased cheaply from the present flower mission superintendent, Miss Gertrude Ferguson, 3208 Rudd Ave., Louisville, Ky.

Enlist the children. Send them out to gather up the flowers, and take them to the least objectionable places of visitation. It goes without saying that they should not visit the jails or penitentiaries.

Children may be taught flower culture and thoughtful generosity by planting and tending their own garden beds, whose products may be devoted to this mission.

Utilize the reserve force. Every union has a reserve force; silent and passive it may be at other times, but ready always to be called out on pleasant occasions. This is a work in which outsiders and even opponents may be pressed into service. Many men and women who coldly criticize or even aggressively antagonize our work in general have nothing but commendation for the flower mission.

Liquor sellers themselves have been known to contribute flowers or the money to purchase them. To visit the sick and imprisoned is regarded, as one saloon-keeper was heard to remark, as "strictly within woman's sphere," and, no doubt, liquor men generally would rejoice if white-ribboners limited their efforts to this and kindred ministrations.

Such men do not realize that a bouquet of flowers is oftentimes the entering wedge, that behind it—nay, within it, is a subtle and potent power which ofttimes opens the door of the heart to the Divine Gues

The pre-requisites for the flower mission visitor are Christian tact and consecration; at least one who can speak to the sick or the sinner of God's love and mercy should accompany each visiting group.

Fans, on which flower mission texts are written or printed, are very welcome to the sick in summer, and will waft an enduring breeze from heavenly heights.

Books, papers and scrap albums may be loaned to prisoners, and jellies, fruits and broth given to the sick.

Do not forget the pledge. It is the opportunity of the entire year for enforcing total abstinence doctrine, as the softened heart is open to all good suggestions.

Make a careful, a religious study of color harmony in the arrangement of bouquets. On Duty has known instances where the beauty of the flowers, the uplift of the text and the sweetness of the ministration were each nullified because of the glaring combination of incongruous colors. So far as possible group only flowers of like kind together. A spray of lilies of the valley nestling in their broad, green leaves; a bunch of violets, though few in number; a cluster of gorgeous nasturtiums, indeed, almost any flower will count for more and be more highly prized if shown in contrast with no other. ON DUTY.

HAPPY JACK—A CALIFORNIA CHARACTER.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

It is such a beautiful old garden. In it the air is sweet with a thousand delicious perfumes, and everywhere the eye is greeted by color and beauty of flower and foliage. There are rows of orange trees, whose dark, glossy, green-leaved branches bend almost to the ground under their weight of golden fruit, while from the same branches gleam forth starry and white the exquisite orange blossoms, whose waxy beauty and delightful fragrance fill the air.

Then there are snow-balls,—dear, old-fashioned flowers, that remind one of childhood days at grandma's. Syringas, with their clinging, sweet perfume; carnation pinks, giving out their spicy odors; great glowing red peonies; petunias of almost every shade; fuchsias, drooping gracefully here and there in great clusters; stately magnolias, with their glossy leaves and great waxen white flowers, heavy with sweetness,—and roses—oh, roses without number, and of almost every conceivable color and variety! The graceful Bankshire rose, with its bridal-like whiteness and purity, the Jacqueminots, the Gold of Ophir, the Duchess, the moss and the tea roses, climbing roses, and in their midst a great bush of the curiously-beautiful green rose of California.

Into this Garden of Eden wandered one day an old man who announced himself to me as Happy Jack. I had heard of the character and knew that his self-given sobriquet was associated in everybody's mind with drunkenness and vagabondism.

I was out among the flowers with Baby Alice near me in her carriage when the old man drifted in from the street and looked about him with bleared eyes as full of appreciative delight as such eyes could be. He was in his usual condition of intoxication, but he went to the purpose of his visit with straightforward promptness.

"I am Happy Jack," he said; "I'm an old miner from 'way up on the top of the mountains where they ain't no flowers at all. I'm awful fond o' flowers, and I'm willin' to pay you any price for a bunch of 'em."

Little Alice looked up at him with her serious blue eyes, and he returned the look with a long, wistful gaze. "You like flowers, too, baby?" he asked.

Refusing his proffered money, I sent the old fellow away looking down at his great bouquet of roses, geraniums and calla lilies as happy, apparently, as a child.

Happy Jack came again and again that summer, always telling of his great love for flowers and going away pleased and delighted with his fragrant burden. Once he came when the afternoon sun shone very warm, and not wishing to go into the garden I told him to help himself. He appeared astonished at the thought of being allowed to pick them for himself and hesitated a good deal about it.

"I don't know nothin' about makin' a bouquet," he said, appealingly glancing back at me as I stood in the door. Later I saw the gray-bearded old man go down the walk and out at the gate with the oddest collection of flowers bunched awkwardly together in his hand. Great red peonies (which seemed to be his favorite flower), red petunias, brilliant scarlet and crimson geraniums and red roses. Not a trace of white or green in the bouquet—nothing but red. "Red is Happy Jack's color," I thought as he passed on up town, doubtless to his favorite haunt—the saloon.

Often I have seen, in passing this saloon, a lovely great cluster of waxy calla lilies lying on the steps—an incongruous resting place for such pure-hearted flowers,—sometimes a bandana handkerchief full of oranges that some one had given him, and knew that Happy Jack was within.

What a strange contradiction is the poor old fellow's character! Given over, body and soul, to the worst vices, living a vagabond existence, respected by no human being, an outcast from decent society because of his miserable life and debased habits,—yet still with this keen love of the beautiful ever strong and fresh within him, like a thrifty, ever-blooming flower itself. Surely his heart cannot be all bad, since flowers can hold him in such bondage!

I have wondered if better thoughts did not come to him when I have seen him gazing down absorbedly into the golden heart of some sweet lily, or delightedly inhaling the perfume of a rose.

Who knows! Perhaps there come to him then sweet, indistinct memories of more innocent days, of youth and childhood, and perhaps of an upright manhood. I like to fancy that the flowers do him good in this way, that higher, better thoughts and gleams from a long past, sinless childhood come to him, even though no aspirations for a better future ever creep into his poor, bewildered old brain.

I know but little of the life history of Happy Jack. It is said that he came to California many years ago, when the gold excitement brought so many here in quest of riches—leaving a wife and children behind, praying, perhaps, for the safety and welfare of husband and father—that he had had "bad luck," became discouraged, got into bad company, ceased to write to the loved ones at home—and never went back.

Drifting downward with each year, a confirmed drunkard, a wanderer on the face of the earth, depraved, debased, homeless,—a familiar figure to the towns-people's eyes, generally considered a harmless old creature who was no one's enemy but his own,—such, outwardly, is Happy Jack.

But there must be some spot of goodness in him still, I think, since the flowers in my garden can entice him in from the busy street, and soften his old face with the tenderness their beauty and fragrance wake in him. I cannot condemn this wretched soul, but pity him. I cannot call him wicked, only weak.

Who knows what fierce temptation he had to battle with at the first, in that mad rush for gold when, if a man lost all in the eager grasp for more, it was so easy to go down,—easier than to fight it out. Weakness of character might have been his only sin at first. Is it sin or is it mere misfortune? It is hard to tell. Very little is known of the poor old wanderer's life. Happy Jack and his eccentricities are good-humoredly tolerated, and people are fairly kind to him—at least he never asks for flowers in vain.

SUCCESS OF THE MERCY HOME.

It is four years since the Mercy Home at Manchester, under the care of the W. C. T. U., was opened. Since November, 1889, there have been received one hundred and ten inmates, the ages ranging from thirteen to fifty years, the average age of these unfortunate females being less than twenty. Almost invariably these applicants have gone to the home without decent apparel and some suffering from the effect of a recent debauch. They have been met with kindness and love and welcomed to the household as members of one family.

The industrial life of the home has proved very fruitful in its results; it is a training school for these girls that will fit them for a useful life when they go out into the world. Washing, ironing and cooking are taught to each girl as fast as possible.

The laundry business was started in May, 1890; the receipts for the first month were fifteen dollars. The next year, beginning with September, 1890, the receipts were $596.75. That year the house was enlarged and the facilities for carrying on a laundry were so improved that in 1891 the receipts were $1,080.07. The growth is steady and this year nearly $1,650 have been received. During all this time there has been a constant and faithful effort to build the character upon a higher plane, and to save their souls from degradation. It would be worth all the effort put forth if only one were helped to a better and more Christ-like life. Devotional exercises are held night and morning, and a service on Sunday at which all are expected to be present.

Miss I. J. Jenness, of Epping, has been in the home as assistant matron for a year. She has conducted an evening school, where reading, writing, spelling and arithmetic have been taught to those who in early life had no such advantages.

There have been five sewing bees—this year the ladies' societies of different churches going out for the day with their lunches. Busy fingers make light of the work which drags in overburdened or inexperienced hands. The girls are taught to do their own mending neatly.

There have been between three and four hundred callers the past year.

The new department of "finding homes for homeless children" is under the supervision of Mrs. M. A. C. Calef, of Tilton. She has sent out her circular. "Let all with the mother heart reach out and become the friend of every homeless child in our state, and if possible secure a home for all where they may be kindly cared for."

Wilton union has this winter sent twenty dollars as a thank offering for the reformation of a girl of that town, brought about by our Mercy Home. Hollis union is pledged to pay two hundred dollars annually, toward the running expenses of the Mercy Home until it becomes self-supporting. Hillsborough county W. C. T. U. voted, three years ago, to pay five hundred dollars annually to the Home until it became self-supporting, and they have fulfilled their agreement. Greenville union, last year, paid seventeen dollars for land purchase, besides giving for furnishings. A cow has been purchased recently by the Home, and Hillsborough county unions paid for it.

One of our most earnest workers passed from her earthly duties on March 1; Mrs. C. E. Albee, of Claremont, had reached the middle life, and was descending the sunset hill. All her family had gone before her some years ago, and she must have laid down her life-work gladly, while she was yet in her prime. She has been county president, president of the local union and one of the trustees of the Mercy Home.

There was a general observance of Neal Dow's birthday throughout the state.

Some five hundred persons met in the Methodist church at Rochester to celebrate Crusade Day, which had been postponed on account of sickness. The pastors were there and made lively speeches; a petition was circulated to the mayor and marshal, asking for the enforcement of the prohibitory law in the city. It was a rousing mass-meeting.

Rev. J. C. Mitchell, the local Unitarian pastor of Wilton, gave a lecture not long since in which he showed figures that are startling, and it is only want of space that deters us from quoting from it.

The seventeenth quarterly meeting of the W. C. T. U. was held in Keene. Though the assembly was not large it was very earnest and several fine papers were read. Mrs. Hunt had a paper on evangelistic work; a sketch of the general work was given by Mrs. M. Griffen; Mrs. Wright had a paper on contests; Mrs. Spaulding was the author of an essay, and Mrs. M. A. Sabin wrote an original poem.

The convention was fortunate in having Mrs. J. R. Nichols, of Indiana. She also lectured in the evening upon "Homes versus the saloon."

The quarterly convention of the Belknap county W. C. T. U. was held in Tilton. Good reports came in from New Hampton, Belmont and Tilton unions. Gilmanton and Meredith are striving earnestly to do more work and are gaining in favor. Laconia gave a report of work. Mrs. Calef reported her work among the home for homeless children which I have mentioned before. Mrs. Emery, of Tilton, delivered an essay upon temperance in a broad sense. A paper on franchise kindled a desire in every woman's heart to handle the ballot. Miss C. E. Rowell urged the ladies to work earnestly for the Mercy Home. Mrs. Nichols, of Indiana, had charge of the question box. Mrs. Hoyt spoke upon the subject, "Consecration, and what it means." Mrs. Nichols addressed a full house in the evening. Tilton W. C. T. U. have given eight Demorest contests, seven silver and one gold. They have the hearty support of the churches, the president of the seminary and the professors, thus securing the best talent in the town for speakers.

Hopkinton sent forty-seven comfort bags in a recent barrel of reading to the lumber-camp—the largest number ever received in one barrel. Mr. Dury's report of his trips through the camps is very interesting—every one should subscribe for this tiny sheet at twenty-five cents per year. It is in charge of Mrs. W. A. Loyne, Jefferson, N. H.

The Hillsborough county W. C. T. U. held their convention early in March at Nashua. It was voted by the committee to have the county commissioner asked to provide a night matron at the county farm, also to attend the purity meeting at Manchester. The county president, Emily K. Jewett, opened the regular meeting. A letter was read by Mrs. Loyne regarding the work at the lumber camps. Mary L. Goodale opened the discussion upon the "Power of Persuasion," which was participated in by many of the ladies. At the roll-call it was shown that a good delegation was present from fifteen towns. After a bountiful dinner furnished by the ladies, the afternoon session was opened and many matters of interest discussed; one upon "Training children for temperance" was opened by Mrs. Addie N. Field, of Bedford; the second, "What can young women do?" by Miss Ella Abbott. "Our Mercy Home—its claims and needs," was presented by Mrs. Hatch, the matron. The afternoon was filled full of good things and the convention did not adjourn till five o'clock and met again at half-past seven to listen to a lecture by the talented young lawyer from Ayer, Mass., George J. Burns. He spoke in a stirring and telling manner of the needs of enforcing the prohibitory law or for the credit of the state changing it, as it reflected discredit upon any state to have a law which they were unable to abide by—a law not kept is worse than no law at all.

Henceforth the state paper, the Granite State Outlook, will be issued from its new publishing house at Rochester, N. H., the first week in every month. The subscription, twenty-five cents per year, should be forwarded at once to Mrs. A. N. Abbott, Rochester, N. H. Let it be the duty, as well as pleasure, of every white-ribboned sister to help this, our state paper, by a personal subscription. The unions must take this matter in hand and send their subscriptions each year, or the paper must be discontinued, for want of support from the W. C. T. U. members, who should be only too glad to read each month what is being done all over New Hampshire. Surely our state would feel ashamed to have it said that its state paper was discontinued for want of proper support. Wake up, sisters, and look at the matter with open eyes, and then act, as becomes a true New Hampshire woman.

WORK ALL ALONG THE LINE.

To the many workers who have so kindly sent reports to help fill my letter, I wish to send my hearty appreciation. Were it possible it would be a pleasure to write a note to each one individually.

Canton union, in the first district, has sent papers to a lumber camp and done what local work came in their way. They have recently held very interesting meetings on suffrage, mothers' work and health and heredity, and have been encouraged by the addition of new members. The village lately voted no-license and the good results are evident, though the saloon element has been trying to create disturbance.

Dexter union meets once a week. They use the Bible readings and have taken up thirteen departments of work. Each member of the union has pledged herself to try to induce at least one person to abandon the use of tobacco.

One union in this district (name not given), composed wholly of farmers' wives and daughters, meets once in two weeks and has not missed a meeting for six months. Five departments of work have been taken up and all are being ably carried on. Every member takes the state paper.

Prosper union reports much interest if not much accomplished, but "still want to keep up their dues and be counted in." They have no saloon within twenty miles! Oh, blessed village! Would there were more such.

Lanesboro has held no meetings during the winter on account of the sickness and absence of members, but has invited the county convention to meet there this month, and expects to receive new impetus therefrom.

Chatfield has eighteen members, and is constantly at work, remembering the command of the Lord to "go forward." They labor under the discouragement of a saloon voted in this year, while last they were free from its influence.

Rushford union has suffered from the sickness of some of its most active members and the removal of others. Saloons are around them, and breweries as well, but in the name of the Lord they mean to keep sowing the seeds of truth and temperance.

Wykoff union boasts only six members, but there is no doubt as to their willingness and anxiety to do their all. Mr. Taylor gave three lectures here, which did much good for temperance.

Spring Valley Y union numbers eleven members, most of them busy in school, but they have held one public meeting when six young girls put on the white ribbon. The union afterward voted to make the "honoraries" active members, and elected one their president.

South Troy, a farming community, meets once in two weeks, but just at present the "women-folks" can't have the horse, so they have to postpone the meetings. In January they had a ten cent tea and raised over seven dollars, two of which went to help the Windom union build their temple. They sent literature to the lumber camps and distributed leaflets and will take up flower mission work as soon as the season permits.

In district No. 2, South Branch union sent newspapers to one lumber camp all winter, sending each week in time to have the papers reach their destination by Saturday night. The union takes the White-Ribboner for each member. A silver medal contest was held in March and a series of lectures is now being planned.

Madelia union in the same district began work against the saloons three years ago, but made little headway until the saloon stuck its own doom. Two years ago Christmas eve a saloon row ended in the death on the streets of one of the participants. On the New Year's eve following the incoming train brought a young lady to take charge of one of the country schools. The man who was to carry her to her destination had been waiting in a saloon, and was unfit to manage his team, which ran away, throwing the young lady out and killing her instantly. The train which had brought her was hardly out of sight ere the wires were carrying back the news of her death. These two sad tragedies aroused the town to vote no-license. But though the saloons were gone, "blind pigs" were not until unearthed by detectives, and made to leave. No-license was carried again at the next election, when, lo! instead of blind pigs the saloonists have adopted wholesale liquor houses under "United States license," with bar and billiard and pool tables. A citizens' league has been formed to test the law and several temperance organizations are working together against their common foe.

The press superintendent of Redwood Falls union in the sixth district, writes that the department meetings of the union are growing in interest. Recently a large and enthusiastic company of women, many being "outsiders," met for a study of scientific temperance instruction. Able papers were read and discussed, and those present realized as never before the importance of training the children in temperance principles. Teachers testified to the interest of pupils in this topic. One mother said the instruction her boy received at school remains with him, a safeguard against the use of tobacco and alcohol. A Sabbath school teacher found to her surprise and chagrin that many of the little ones in her class knew more of the effects of alcohol and narcotics on the system, and of temperance work and workers than she herself did. But it was found that the majority of the town school board oppose temperance instruction in the schools, and so another lesson was brought home—the duty of women to be present at the school meetings and to vote. Temperance Sunday was observed in nearly all the churches of this town by temperance sermons and Sunday-school lessons. At the M. E. church the pastor addressed the Epworth Guards on the life and work of Neal Dow, with whom he was personally acquainted. Four lumber camps have been supplied with literature weekly, and that this labor was appreciated is shown by the following extract of a letter:

"BRAINERD, MINN.

"DEAR MADAM:—Allow me in behalf of the lumbermen of Camp No. —, to thank the ladies of the Redwood Falls W. C. T. U., for your kindness in sending us reading matter. And I am happy to say your action has been productive of much good, as it has changed the course of some of our boys' lives. . . . Woodsmen naturally grow careless, as their associates are ever the same, and little but the dark side of life is known in a lumbering town . . . . Again thanking you for your kindness we remain, yours respectfully,

"CAMP NO. —
"Per W. N."

Mrs. J. A. Clifford, president of the seventh district, writes that the work is progressing since their last convention. In Goodhue county the state suffrage superintendent, Mrs. Julia B. Nelson, filled twelve appointments at least, three of them being in localities where no union existed. As a result, in one place, Denison, a new union was organized, which has taken up work in a most intelligent manner, and will soon hold a medal contest. Organizations are hoped for in two other places where Mrs. Nelson spoke.

Glencoe union, in Scott county, hold "little socials" after their business meetings which are pleasant and helpful. Rev. Mr. Knowles, of the M. E. church, has delivered for them a fine lecture on "The Virgin Mother." Mr. Knowles is in full sympathy with our work, as was also his predecessor, Rev. Mr. Ellery, who left them last fall. Mrs. Ellery was one of their most cherished members and her sudden death almost immediately after leaving Glencoe, was a great shock to that union. The president writing of Mrs. Ellery, says: "Her appearance in our meetings was a rest to us. She was never discouraged. The last meeting at which she was present she made a remark I shall never forget. Some of us were making the old complaint about doing no visible good, and Mrs. Ellery, in her quiet way said, 'All we are expected to do is what little we can do!'"

"NOT WILLING THAT ANY SHOULD PERISH."

With the return of spring the work for county conventions once more begins, and North Dakota W. C. T. U. is preparing for an active campaign during the pleasant months that are to follow.

Our president has been in the quiet at her father's home for the past few weeks, and, during the brief respite from field work, her pen has been busy, and she now goes forth again with renewed energy and the same untiring zeal.

Numerous are the reports of the Neal Dow anniversary. In spite of the storm which prevailed all over North Dakota that day, most of the unions held their meeting with good results, nearly all reporting not only interesting but enthusiastic meetings. A few, however, postponed the event until the following week.

Cooperstown union held their meeting in the court house, the Y's uniting with the W's, and the program was a most interesting one, the prominent feature being the prohibition states, with a brief history of each represented by young ladies prettily costumed for the occasion, and the twin states, North and South Dakota, by two little four-year-old girls.

The M. E. district conference and the Presbytery both occurring at the same time, were held at Drayton at the time of the Neal Dow anniversary. The W's and Y's gave these two bodies a reception. Upon anniversary day a union meeting was held and a fine reform program, Neal Dow and prohibition, was rendered, the ministers taking an active part.

Sabbath observance was brought before both bodies, and both passed resolutions recommending ministers to preach on that subject the first Sabbath in April, or as soon after as practicable.

Wahpeton and Casselton observed Neal Dow anniversary with an afternoon meeting.

A good program was rendered, followed by refreshments, and both report profitable and pleasant meetings, with a good attendance in spite of the storm. Uxbridge, a small country union, held their meeting one week later, with a large attendance. Lunch was served at noon, followed by a program. Tower City and Elliott report pleasant and interesting meetings on that day. Northwood reports a grand L. T. L., which is their special work.

Hillsboro's special work for the past winter and at the present time, consists mostly in the line of help and mercy. They are paying the expenses of a sick woman at the city hospital, and have provided fuel, groceries, clothing, etc., where it has been needed in some cases.

Forest River is becoming famous for its success at enforcement of our prohibitory law, although at the expense of some discord in their own ranks. The secretary writes: "What discord and confusion is created when a few women dare to put their puny might in defiance of the time-honored (?) liquor business." The "discord" in this case being occasioned by the circulation of petition among the ladies of the town asking them not to sign a certain druggist's permit.

Ardoch reports their special work, help and mercy, narcotics and scientific temperance instruction. Uxbridge Y's, also Drayton Y's and the W's at Bowesmont and Joliette, have adopted the triple pledge. Fairmount holds its public meetings regularly, keeps a box in depot supplied with literature, and reports its meetings as profitable and interesting.

Elliott has good meetings and good attendance. Lisbon and Grafton hold mothers' meetings which are well attended and very interesting. Portland has a large Loyal Temperance Legion and schools savings bank. The system of schools savings banks is growing in favor, and it is only a question of time, we believe, when they will be generally adopted throughout the state. Our superintendent of this department, Mrs. H. C. Ruth, is an enthusiastic worker, and being an excellent business woman, her efforts are usually crowned with success.

Sheldon, though a young union, has a live and energetic membership and an enthusiastic L. T. L. and is doing excellent work. Mrs. Pierson, our active and energetic secretary of young woman's work is in the field and flattering reports are received wherever she has been, the latest being from the Wahpeton Y's. These Y's have held two public meetings during the past quarter.

Wahpeton is greatly blessed in having among their workers Prof. M. V. B. and Mrs. Knox, so well known among the New Hampshire workers so many years. The M. E. college is located at this place with Rev. Knox as president and Mrs. Knox as one of the faculty. Both are earnest advocates of temperance and equal suffrage and never lose an opportunity of instilling their principles into the minds of their students.

The Casselton W's at present are caring for two little waifs. Two little boys aged thirteen and nine years, their mother dead, and deserted by a drunken father, were put off the train in the middle of the night and were found the next morning at the depot cold and hungry. They were taken home by a kind man, warmed and fed. Their case being reported to the Help and Mercy committee, steps were at once taken to look into their case. A temporary home has been provided, and they are now comfortably clothed and are being sent to school, and an effort is being made to provide good permanent homes for the poor little outcasts.

Pembina being a border town, the enforcement of our prohibitory law is a difficult and most discouraging task. The union at this place is making heroic efforts for the enforcement of our law, and we are watching with great interest the results. This union is also doing good work in the circulation of literature.

Jamestown has a circulating library and much credit is due the workers there for the efforts put forth to sustain this library which does much good. We have had in our Crittenton Home during the last quarter thirty-five inmates and at present thirteen. We are about to lose our matron, Mrs. Blair, who has filled the position most acceptably for some months, and we trust another may be found equally as able with a mother's tender heart and sympathies. Miss Briggs, who owned the lots upon which our home is built, has recently most generously given us a deed of the same and now our faithful and efficient board of managers are devising ways by which to raise an amount sufficient to improve the grounds and complete the unfinished portions of the building, for it has become apparent to our sisters who have the work in charge that the time has come when it is necessary to add a nursery. The secretary writes: "We must tell the Father all these things. He knoweth the needs and will supply them."

Our superintendents of narcotics and Sabbath observance are both young women new in the work, but have taken it up with a zeal that is truly pleasing and encouraging. Miss Bena Halcrow is superintendent of the former, and Miss Louise Crunmy, of the latter department. At Bowesmont, the home of Miss Halcrow, the merchants have consented to place in their stores notices forbidding smoking in the same.

Our very efficient superintendent of foreign work, Mrs. Mary Bennet, of Jamestown, who has won her way into all our hearts, has been compelled to resign on account of failing health. During the past few months she has several times been at death's door, but God has spared her life and we trust she may be spared to us for many years of usefulness.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

Our honored National evangelist, Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, has been "trying her wings for a short trip." Long detained from her loved work for the Master by ill-health, as returning strength cheered, she heard and accepted a call to join in a "Pentecostal Service" at Fort Atkinson, Wis., speaking on temperance and reform May 12, and preaching twice on Sunday, the 13th, and again on Monday, the Pentecostal day. "In the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength," and we believe our sister will be sustained while she thus ministers to others.

The spring W. C. T. U. state conventions are in progress, Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi and Indian Territory having been held under hopeful conditions, though with some official changes.

Mrs. Fannie L. Chunn was elected president of Arkansas, in place of Mrs. Hart, who declined reëlection, and Nellie N. Somerville, corresponding secretary of Mississippi. New Mexico, Wisconsin, Michigan, Texas and Oregon follow. Thanks to those who have already sent the full address of officers elected, and we shall hope to hear from each state.

It is always somewhat humiliating to be obliged to confess one's self mistaken, but in my last note from Oregon I gave to Portland credit which belonged to Newberg, and am sorry to say the former has saloons and other evils as other cities. Mrs. Helen D. Harford, the nominee on the state prohibition ticket for superintendent of public instruction, is one of our active workers who is in the field constantly speaking on the issues of the day, in which is ever included our beloved cause. Mrs. Harford is a graduate of the state normal school at Auburn, N. Y., and has been twenty-five years a teacher.

A mass-meeting was held at Topeka, Kan., May 9 and 10, in the interest of the pending suffrage amendment. We find among speakers advertised the names of our honored friends, Susan B. Anthony and Anna H. Shaw. This meeting was followed by a school of methods at North Topeka, with an evening devoted to a suffrage symposium, at which Mrs. L. B. Smith, state W. C. T. U. president, delivered the principal address, supplemented by state superintendents of franchise and gentlemen advocates of the cause.

A friend writes: "An interesting point came to me recently. Helix, Ore., W. C. T. U. was organized from an inspiration received through Miss Willard's appeal to the young women about three or four years ago. It is a small village situated in the sparsely settled district adjacent to the Umatilla Indian reservation. We can scarcely measure the good that has come through the efforts of our sister, L. Elizabeth Rehm, who was the prime factor in organization and subsequent work. Notwithstanding they are in a great wheat belt, they have suffered greatly during the year, first from loss of crops by unprecedented early rain and the low price of ten cents per bushel for their wheat. In spite of this the union is pushing Demorest medal contests and doing much for education of public sentiment."

Mrs. W. P. Kuhl, president of the fifteenth district of Illinois, is surely the right woman in the right place. Her definite knowledge of our work, clear setting forth of plans and principles, parliamentary drills and Bible readings, marked her at the late conventions of Champaign and Vermillion counties as a workman needing not to be ashamed, having commanded the respect of all.

The town of Guinda, Cal., has been said to be without saloons, but when our National organizer, Henrietta Skelton, entered the express office she scented the enemy, whom she faithfully pursued until a federal license was discovered when her helplessness was manifest.

A man who had spent some weeks in the town trying to secure five signers to a petition, by which he might purchase an acre of land and erect a saloon, disturbed Mrs. Skelton's meeting. Finding him in the post-office the next day she administered a Skeltonian rebuke, and upon the opening of the evening meeting she presented her compliments publicly. Before the lecture closed the bells rang violently but a word put the constable on his feet and the bell ceased to ring.

Mrs. E. A. Cranmer, president North Dakota W. C. T. U., is possessed of unconquerable "grit, grace and gumption." Having decided there is no reason for a state to be in debt even in hard times, she has been making a little trip among her constituency during which she has raised over one hundred and eighty dollars for state and district work, beside meeting all her own charge, and one hundred and fifty have been added to the unions (including honorary members) and two new unions have been formed. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

Treasurer's Corner.

Mrs. M. E. Bryan, treasurer of Kentucky, in sending ten cents for each member of Millersburg union and a check for state dues, writes: "I have tried hard to get in enough to send a respectable check to you for state dues, but have succeeded in getting but twenty-five dollars to date. Many of our unions pay but once a year, and that in September. I know the times are hard, but if each one would help a little how soon our debt could be paid."

Mrs. Barnes, National secretary of the Y's, writes in a sisterly letter: "Our Y organizers have been so self-denying this last year, that it has made my heart ache, and it is most trying to see on one hand young women waiting to be gathered with us, and Y's going down for just the help that the organizers could give if we only had money enough to bring the need and the supply together. I suppose we must pray on in faith, work on with courage, and some day the gold will flow our way in a more copious measure." Does any one wonder that Mrs. Carse was moved to try and secure an income for our great work? Surely one need be at headquarters but a brief time and hear the cry for money from every department, and from every state, to feel that one of our great drawbacks is lack of means to carry on our work.

Mrs. Alice Ames, treasurer of Wisconsin, writes of the desirability of each local sending all funds through the state treasurer and says: "The head of the financial department in the state ought to have a knowledge of the exact financial condition of the state, and thus be able to act intelligently when she may conserve the best interests of her constituency. Her annual report of the aggregate amount of such moneys received into the local treasuries of the state and the total amount expended for the work, would give to the unions themselves and to all the friends of the cause a more definite idea of the extent of our work."

Mrs. Stoddard, Texas' intelligent president, writes of dollar dues as follows: "The local dues in Texas are one dollar, of which forty cents goes to the state. A less sum is too small to enable a union to do effective work. Discouragement comes to unions, especially if inexperienced, if the treasury is empty. We would raise rather than lower our dues." NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE Clara M. Selkreg W. C. T. U. of Ithaca, N. Y., mourns the loss of one of the oldest members, and at one time county president, Mrs. Joan B. Nourse. At the time of her death she was local superintendent of heredity. April 4 another member, Mrs. Mary A. Warner, passed to her reward. She was the wife of Rev. F. M. Warner, and had lived a life of courage and great usefulness.

A DECADE of work was completed by the Phœnix W. C. T. U. of Arizona on May day, its tenth anniversary. Miss Mattie Quinn, president of the union, told of the purpose and scope of W. C. T. U. work, and Dr. Eliza Ingalls gave a résumé of the society's history. Other addresses were given, and the remarks of Mrs. L. C. Hughes, president of Arizona W. C. T. U., and her husband, the territorial governor, greatly added to the interest of the occasion. This stirring union has a building fund, which is to be devoted to the erection in the near future of a temple consecrated to its work.

THE commencement exercises of the American Temperance University, at Harriman, Tenn., will begin on Saturday, May 26, with a field day for athletics and military drill by the gymnasium classes and the cadets, and will conclude on Wednesday, May 30, with the graduation of a senior class of eight young ladies and gentlemen. Rev. C. H. Mead, D. D., is to preach the annual sermon on Sunday morning; and the baccalaureate sermon will be delivered Sunday evening by Chancellor Spence. Examinations will close on Monday, May 28. Tuesday will be a temperance and educational field day, with addresses morning, afternoon and evening by Judge East and Prof. J. A. Tate, of Nashville, Rev. Geo. Stuart, Rev. Dr. Mead and others. This new institution has had a remarkable first year, and prospects are fine for the second year, to begin in September next.

A VERY beautiful fête, called a Prismette, was given in the Temple, May 15, by the Central Y's of Chicago, who were granted open sesame to the connecting rooms of the National and local W. C. T. U. offices, for the day. Visitors on the eleventh floor of the House Beautiful that afternoon and evening found that a transformation had been wrought by the deft fingers of the enthusiastic young women. A "rainbow" arched the corridor near the entrance to the Temple trustees' room, in which a violet rustic bower framed the young ladies in gowns of lilac tint who served the sweets. Violet shades covered the chandeliers and the well known room assumed a changed and lovely appearance. Passing on into the cozy office of our National corresponding secretary, her quarters were found to be usurped by old-fashioned china and furniture draped in indigo hues. Candle light shed its dim radiance upon the Puritan maids who served coffee and sandwiches or whiled away the hours at the spinning wheel. A dream in blue had descended upon the octagonal room where the financial matters of the National W. C. T. U. receive daily attention, and surely no usurpers were ever more welcome. Silver stars studded the cerulean draperies and a soft blue radiance gave the odd shaped room an ethereal touch. The National reception room became Y headquarters for the nonce, where signers to the pledge were received; a gypsy-palmist in her green tent, and maids in yellow with delicious lemonade carried on a competitive contest in the familiar apartment. The room of the Central W. C. T. U. was given over to the riotous tints of orange and red, while in a vacant office the seven colors were combined in a pure white apartment where refreshments were served. A mandolin orchestra filled the corridors with sweet sounds, and the first evening entertainment at National headquarters was pronounced an unqualified success by the several hundred people, young and old, who were in attendance.

Children's teeth should receive early attention; if the first teeth are well cared for the permanent ones will be satisfactory.

RUBIFOAM FOR THE TEETH is splendid for children. They like the delicious flavor. It is most cleansing and healthful and absolutely harmless.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

He (Abraham) staggered not at the promises of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that what he had promised he was able to perform.—Romans 4:20, 21.

It is with joy that through the Temple Items column I am again permitted to greet the friends of the Temple—to thank those who have sustained me during my absence by their prayers and letters of sisterly sympathy, as well as by substantial gifts to the "House Beautiful," at a time, too, when giving means sacrifice to most. It is with such gifts the Lord is well pleased; in fact, I doubt if we ever please Him unless we give so that we feel it. To me, while away, the thought of the little faithful band at the Temple meeting each day at twelve o'clock to join in prayer for the success of my efforts for the Temple, was a source of great strength. I could never think of it without a moistened eye and inexpressible tenderness of heart. The prayers of these faithful women and others like them accounts, no doubt, for the kindness and consideration with which I was greeted by those that I called upon.

I found financial conditions in California unexpectedly stringent, yet in my whole trip I did not meet more than half a dozen persons who said: "I cannot give toward your object." The rest asked for time, until a change takes place for the better in the business world, and then they will only be too happy to help us secure our National building. I think I can truthfully say, the journey, when times take the long desired turn for the better, which all are so anxiously longing for, will bring in a net return of $100,000. Besides, we cannot expect to sow and reap in the same day.

There was one rich field I came across, however, where the seed had already been sown, and the harvesting was an easy matter. I refer to the princely sum of $50,000 pledged by General John Bidwell and his noble wife, Annie K. Bidwell, who is a devoted white-ribboner. The promise given in writing was signed by both. The preamble to this pledge shows so conclusively the high esteem in which this noble man and distinguished Prohibitionist holds the W. C. T. U. and the Temple enterprise, I hope he will not consider it a breach of confidence if I make it public.

"Having it in my heart," he says, "to aid the cause of temperance, and believing there is no way to that end so promising, so certain, so enduring in its beneficent and far-reaching results as to assist the National W. C. T. U., and at the earliest practicable period, say within two years, to free their magnificent house in Chicago, known as The Temple, from the burden of debt, Now, therefore, I," etc. The document goes on to state that he will sell for a certain sum per acre 6,500 acres of his estate in Butte county, California, and from the sum so realized pay $50,000 towards the Temple indebtedness. This land is part of the well-known Rancho Chico, consisting of 25,000 acres in the fertile valley of the Sacramento, which has been owned by General Bidwell since 1849. This magnificent tract, when it came into his possession, was wholly in a state of nature, and partially occupied by a degraded Indian tribe, rapidly wasting away through the vices and injustice of the white man. It has become, in forty-five years, under the fostering care of this man of exceptionally noble, broad and progressive views, a perfect Eden. A land seeming to flow with milk and honey. The poor Indian is no longer poor and degraded, but happy, Christianized and educated through the patient, self-denying labors of Mrs. Bidwell, warmly seconded by the efforts of her noble husband. The Indian village, with its comfortable homes, is within half a mile of the mansion; all this adds a most unique and ideal charm to this beautiful estate, and sets one wondering if Eden could have been lovelier, and Adam and Eve more noble specimens of manhood and womanhood than the owners of Rancho Chico. But more of this wonderful place next time.

The Godey Company, New York.

The current number of the NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE publishes a sketch by Elizabeth Porter Gould, of Hannah Adams, the pioneer woman in American literature. Other women resident in America had before attained to some literary distinction, but it was reserved for Miss Adams to be the first native-born American woman who made herself known through her pen. She is described as "an unusually retired young woman in private life, never heard of in the great world, until in bold letters appeared her name on her book." She was born in Medfield, Mass., within twenty miles of Boston, in 1752. "To realize the loneliness of Miss Adams in her literary career, it is only necessary to remember that when this, the last of her six books, was published (in 1824), not a book of the now well-known American literary women had appeared."

Warren F. Kellogg, Publisher, 5 Park Square, Boston.

One of Olive Thorne Miller's most charming volumes is A BIRD-LOVER IN THE WEST, which relates her own experiences with her feathered friends. She studies their habits from the standpoint of scientist, writer, friend and lover, and her boundless painstaking and patience are rewarded by the revelation to her of many beautiful bird secrets, which, when told by her felicitous pen, make chapters of reading that are full of artistic beauty and rural rest and refreshment. The book in question contains material gathered at different times in Colorado, Utah and Southern Ohio.

KORADINE A GIRL'S OWN BOOK. By ALICE B. STOCKHAM, M.D., AND LIDA HOOD TALBOT,

A MOST FASCINATING STORY, GIVING THE ART OF TRUE LIVING, AND THE POWER TO MEET EVERY DIFFICULTY.

Saturday Herald.—No more charming book could be placed in the hands of a girl. It is so bright, so piquant, so full of delicious bits of nature, and withal so original, that one can hardly lay down the book without finishing it at one reading.

Argus.—a guide to parents in training sons and daughters. Gives a sure road to health and happiness.

Nellie Blessing Eyster.—In Koradine the science of right thinking and right living is portrayed in a way so fascinating to the reader that one closes the book with a realization that he has been breathing the air of heaven. No other book like it in scope of thought, in elegant simplicity of language, nor in sweet and wholesome purpose, has appeared in this century. Although written for the benefit of young girls, it is equally enchanting and instructive to thoughtful boys; and the wise, loving mother, seeking for the highest spiritual and physical development of both, can obtain no better aid than by placing in their hands this incomparable book.

A VISIT TO DREAMLAND.

BY DAISY MC LEOD.

THERE was a pretty maiden,
Who always would delay
The tasks she should have done at once
Until another day.
One night she went to Dreamland,
And saw—what do you think?
A garden full of lovely flowers,
Red roses, white and pink.

She loved such blossoms dearly,
So stopped to gather one.
When suddenly she saw near by,
Within the glaring sun,
The queerest little creature
In suit of green and gold;
She could not rightly guess his age,
He might be young or old.

"A secret now I'll tell you,"
The funny fellow cried,
Then opening wide two roses,
He bade her glance inside;
She saw some busy fairies
Refreshing with sweet dew,
Each flower before it shriveled up,
Or even thirsty grew.

"They always do their duty,"
Observed the tiny guide,
"And see how fresh these blossoms look!
In those I have no pride."
He pointed to a number,
Which hung their heads with shame,
And as the maiden looked within,
She saw who was to blame.

A very lazy fairy
In each poor rose was found;
Instead of keeping it alive,
She lay in sleep profound.
"Now, human flowers, called children,
Have nestling in their hearts
A sprightly elf, or one who works
Only by fits and starts.

"Which kind is in you dwelling?"
Inquired the keen-eyed man.
Downcast, the lassie left his side,
Towards home she quickly ran;
But, as she went, she stumbled,—
Why,—strange to be in bed!
"Go, lazy fay, I'm done with you!"
The drowsy maiden said.

THE HUMMING-BIRD.

BY MRS. WYNFORD PHILIPPS.

(Concluded.)

Such a cheerless view now met the gaze of the bird. Inside the shop such cheerless people coming to it as purchasers, or oftener still to sell or pawn their dreary bits of finery.

One afternoon a woman came in and said she wished to buy the hat, and with her was a little boy carrying a very big basket. After trying it on and gazing at herself in front and behind and sideways for some time by the aid of a cracked piece of looking-glass she said to the shopwoman, "I will buy this hat if you will put a bunch of flowers in here, nice bright blue ones, instead of this bird that is all squeezed up and makes hardly any show," and the bargain was thus concluded, our poor friend with untender hands being plucked from his resting place.

"How much does the bird cost, please, missus?" inquired the little boy with a big basket.

"You may have it for sixpence, and very cheap too, and a beautiful toy he would make, my little man!" But the little man had no sixpence and so he followed the woman out of the shop, carrying her bundles for her. But next day he came again and entering timidly asked with a deep blush and eager heart beating, if the bird were still to be had; and he pulled forth a battered coin with a hole in it, and the string still attached by which he had for long worn it round his neck.

The woman examined her rag bag and gave the little crushed golden creature to the child. It must have felt new life, I think, as it was held softly and with unutterable care in childish, tremulous fingers.

Away through the streets went the boy, on and on till he came to a dark alley and out of that into a noisy court and up a shaky staircase, higher and higher, till it seemed that he would never reach the top.

At last he did so and pushed open a low, creaking doo and from a little bed in the corner of a bare room, a pair of loving hands were stretched out in greeting, and a glad, faint voice spoke its welcome.

"Joey, Joey, where have you been? I've been frighted a-thinkin' you were lost in the streets, and it's so lonesome like when you're a-gone—"

"I have brought you something, Allie," answered the boy, and he knelt by the bed and opened his hands to show his treasure. "It's a bird. A dead bird, you know, that can't sing and jump about, but I minded what you said about never seein' the sun in here, and the yaller in the wings of the bird seems bright like sunshine, and I thought it would mind yer of the lovely land you was a-tellin' me of where the sun is always a-shinin' and the flowers grow in the alleys and courts, so that the poor folk can pick 'em, and where there is no more trouble and sickness, and I s'pose the birds is all of 'em gold and green and blue like this."

Joey had often listened to Alice's tales of fairyland, of foreign countries and of Paradise, which she culled from her few beloved books, and in his untaught fancy the stories grew confused, all the stories of the Garden of Eden, of foreign countries or of fairyland, related to the beauties of the same wonderful place. He knew only one earth, of squalor, of misery, of ugliness, and all he heard of a land beyond was strange as a fairy tale and beautiful as heaven.

Alice took the bird and kissed the broken plumage and laid it tenderly beside her on the pillow.

"I wish I could bring it to life again," she said, "poor, pretty thing, and I would let it fly away if it wanted to, back to the beautiful warm country that it came from."

Joey brought Alice her pet geranium flower—a splendid plant that had grown from a cutting carelessly thrown aside by a gardener for whom the boy had worked, and he now helped the girl to fasten the humming-bird amongst its leaves and place it where she could gaze upon it.

"It will never seem so dull and wintry again, Joey," she said, "for you see I always can pretend to be in the places I read of, if there's something to help the pretending, but it used to be so difficult to pretend here where one cannot see the sky and where there is nothing to look at but the shadow on the wall."

"Now with the geranium and the bird, Joey, I can guess what the country's like. I can imagine streets full of flowers like that in red and yellow and blue, and thousands of birds like this one, able to sing and to fly like flowers got loose from their stems; Joey, dear, I feel sore and weak, and I shall soon be in the land of the flowers and the angels; then, dear, you'll keep the plant carefully and think of me often. But oh, Joey, dear," she said with tears running down her wan cheeks, "I didn't mean to make you cry—I can't go, I won't go, if you wish to keep me here."

"Alice, don't," whispered the boy; "I ain't worth a-stayin' for, I know, I ain't much of a feller, but I can't a-bear to be left here all alone."

The humming-bird trembled with emotion as the little desolate children of earth clasped one another and he wished that he, too, could have wept in sympathy.

"The wretched frizzly negro must have struck her," he thought, "and now they will stuff her too, and put her in a tall hat, poor, poor little mortal!"

But Alice lingered through the long winter months, and was able to cheer and comfort Joey even when the pain was worst. Many a day would he sit beside her gazing with her at the humming-bird and letting his thoughts fly with hers, borne on the golden wings to lands of beauty and wonder far away. So much suffering and yearning and hope in her voice as she spoke of the land where the sun always shines and trouble never comes.

No wonder Joey said one night, "Alice, I feel that I want you to go and I'll bear it all right, and wait here alone for a little," and as a flicker of content came over her face he gave a great sob, and knew she had said her last good-by.

When they came to carry her away he took the humming-bird from the perch on the geranium flower and placed it in her hand where none could see, so that the poor bird might journey back with her to the land of joy and sunshine; and he planted the geranium over her grave. As he trudged wearily homeward he saw a marvelous sunset, it seemed as though cloudy gates of purple and orange had opened, showing a dreamland of exquisite loveliness.

"Ah, she and the humming-bird are happy now. I am sure that they are safe and happy in the heaven she told me of."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Flower Mission! What does it mean? What does the phrase bring to your minds? A good many hands go up, and yet a good many of our new Cornerers look a little puzzled.

Yes, you are right, Norma. The flower mission is the work of visiting the sick and poor everywhere and carrying to them God's messengers of love and peace with a Scripture text.

And Frank tells us that the flower mission saint is beloved Jennie Casseday, who lay for many years in a darkened room and sent from her bedside messages of love and comfort to others equally as unfortunate as she. A year ago God called her home.

June 9 is her birthday, and has been called Flower Mission Day, because on that day workers everywhere unite in special services at public institutions and in the homes of the sick. Isn't that a beautiful way to have one's birthday celebrated—by trying to relieve the pain and brighten the sorrow of others?

What can your part be on Flower Mission Day? The flowers and the sick are everywhere, and God's love is over all. Shall we not each try to spread just a little sunshine on that blessed day?

Affectionately, your

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

I have four brothers and one sister, and we are all for temperance. There are no saloons in our town now.
Weston, Ore. WALTER WHITMAN.

We did as you requested, and my brother and I sent a message to Neal Dow on his birthday. We were very much pleased to receive a letter in return, for we did not think it possible for him to answer all the letters he received at that time. We also received a copy of the Portland Express, which had a great deal about him in it. I cut it all out and put it in my scrap-book. I value his autograph very highly. CLARA GOODRICH.
Mankato, Kan.

May I join the Cozy Corner, please? I am a temperance girl through and through. I never tasted a drop of whisky. I never saw a drop, either. I am one of the editors of a little temperance paper in our school. My teacher is a temperance woman, too.
Barnesville, O. CLARA B. SEARS.

I am nine years old. We have no L. T. L. in Blair now but I am a temperance boy, and my mamma is a member of the W. C. T. U. FRED. SHUMAKER.
Blair, Neb.

I would like to step into your Corner. I guess it is a very nice place. I would like to belong to an L. T. L. There is none here. We have one saloon here. I have signed the pledge, and mean to keep it.
Hennepin, Ill. ISA OLLA BOYLE.

I guess I belong to your Cozy Corner for I am a temperance boy. My pledge I suppose had its place in the late Exposition. I like my little cousins and their little letters very much and will correspond with any of them.

Dollars or Kicks

for women, according to whether they do, or don't do, their washing in a sensible way. If they use Pearline, it means good, hard dollars saved.

Pearline is economy. All that ruinous rubbing that makes you buy linens and flannels twice as often as you need to, is spared, to say nothing of your time and labor. See the troubles that women have to endure with other ways of washing. There's that hard, wearing-out rub, rub, rub, or the danger of ruining things with acids if you try to make it easy. Washing with Pearline is absolutely safe. 418 J. PYLE, N. Y.

SYSTEM OF SELF-GOVERNMENT FOR GIRLS.

Miss Pride, principal of the Huguenot Seminary, South Africa, and a white-ribboner of the true stamp, is a Virginian by birth and became devoted to the W. C. T. U. at the time of the Crusade, for it took place with full force in her own town near Richmond, Virginia. Miss Pride has recently been entertained by Lady Henry Somerset, and mentioned that she had introduced the system of self-government for girls which Miss Willard has described in her Autobiography, and which she carried out in the Woman's College at Evanston. Miss Pride says that Dr. Kate Bushnell, who had been a pupil at Evanston, gave a full account of the system at the seminary when she was in South Africa, and they were so pleased with it that it was at once adopted by the faculty, and has been in successful operation for a year. We feel sure that if teachers would carefully study those chapters in "Glimpses" where this method is set forth, they would find their cares greatly lightened, and character would be more strongly developed in their pupils.

CHILDHOOD: Its CARE and CULTURE

By Mary Allen West.

A sad interest is given to this noteworthy book by the calling to a higher life of its gifted author. It was written with a purpose—the purpose to make better men and women. Through it her voice is still heard in many Christian homes, and from a rare experience she still speaks as only one can who has devoted a large part of life to the care and culture of childhood.

Young mothers are hungering for the information contained in this book, for in it the grave question is answered, For what has God designed my child?

Though sold largely through our subscription book department, single copies can be obtained in cloth for $3; full morocco, gilt edges, $4.25.

Signal Notes.

A UNION of all the charitable women's societies in Germany is being talked of.

FIVE thousand dollars has been willed to Harvard University by Mrs. Harriet Hayden to found a scholarship for colored students.

A MEMORIAL to Jenny Lind, the great-hearted singer, who died seven years ago, was recently unveiled in Westminster Abbey.

IF all the drunkards in the world were formed in line, marching five abreast, the army would be sixty miles in length, and its numbers 536,000.

ACCORDING to a recent foreign dispatch, Belgium, Denmark, Great Britain, Germany and the Netherlands have concurred in an agreement against the sale of spirituous liquors in the North Sea.

THE premier of New Zealand informed a delegation of women voters recently that their political education should first be acquired before they could become eligible as members of Parliament.

A NOTORIOUS inebriate recently made her two hundred and sixty-third appearance in a London police court, remarking facetiously to a reporter: "I don't know what we should do without the police!"

HARD times have not interfered with the liquor business of Russia, where during a single month last winter the excise receipts were twenty million roubles, just double the receipts for the same month last year.

THE British Association for the Advancement of Science has opened its medical section to the membership of women. Twenty women doctors are now enrolled as members in full standing by the British Medical Association.

THERE are ten fruit schools in France which receive an annual grant from the government of three thousand francs each. The pupils are taught how to cultivate and husband fruits and especially to make the world renowned French cheeses.

AN invention worthy to be classed as "a Yankee notion" is that of the Australian confectioner, who prints the daily news upon a thin paste of dough with an ink of chocolate. The customer reads, then eats the novel newspaper with his coffee.

DESPITE the general cry of hard times, the American Sunday-school Union is able to report an increase of gifts for its work during the past year. The amount received was $120,158 which was nearly eleven thousand dollars more than the previous year. Although the largest supporters of the work have been compelled to give less, the number of givers has increased.

AN interesting regulation is just announced from autocratic Russia, by which the government hopes to prevent overcharges of physicians. By the new rule cities are divided in three classes according to size, and the patients in three grades, as follows: The first, capitalists, proprietors and manufacturers; the second, members of professions, and the rest of the population is included in the third. Fees are then named according to the grades. First class, five roubles; second, three roubles and thirty kopeks for the third.

SWITZERLAND has stringent rules for the repression of drunkenness which add somewhat to the orderliness of localities where public houses are situated. The regulations vary in the different cantons. The unemployed father of a family dare not loiter about the public house in Ticino. Berne's special laws are that drunken and disorderly persons may be excluded from the saloons for two years, and abettors of pauperism, drinking and gambling are subject to a sentence of sixty days hard labor. Homes for inebriates are provided in Zurich. Saloon-keepers are bound to maintain good order and are responsible for the behavior of their servants. These laws are based upon present enlightenment on the drink evil and must eventually be displaced by the liberty by which all are made free—the removal of the temptation which weakens and debases.

AN ASTHMA CURE AT LAST.

European physicians and medical journals report a positive cure for Asthma, in the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa. The Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending free trial cases of the Kola Compound by mail to all sufferers from Asthma, who send name and address on a postal card. A trial costs you nothing.

The following remarkable statement, to which we direct special attention, is from a Tennessee farmer.

My age is 63. I suffered intensely from catarrh 10 years; dry scabs formed in nostrils, one or both sides stopped up continually dryness and soreness of throat, hoarseness, intense headache, took cold easily, and had continual roaring, cracking, buzzing and singing in my ears. My hearing began to fail, and for three years I was almost entirely deaf, and continually grew worse. Everything I had tried, failed. In despair I commenced to use the Aerial Medication in 1888, and the effect of the first application was simply wonderful. In less than five minutes my hearing was fully restored, and has been perfect ever since, and in a few months was entirely cured of catarrh.

WOMAN'S DRUDGERY ENDED.

The last piece of drudgery in woman's work is at last about to be rid of. Invention has come to her rescue in a dish-washer, simple, efficient and at a price within the reach of all. It is called the "MARY JANE DISH WASHER." The writer has used one of the washers in his home for some time and it has become an indispensable article in kitchen work, and would not do without it for several times the cost. The machine is simple and can be operated by any one and the washing can be done in a few minutes, the dishes drying to a brighter polish than by washing by hand. For pots and skillets use the wire pot cleaner which accompanies each machine, and the whole dish-washing can be done quickly and without putting your hands in the water.—Advertising Manager UNION SIGNAL.

It has been claimed that members of the W. C. T. U. are so much occupied with other people's business and their efforts to convert the world, to the neglect of home duties, that they have no eyes to see or disposition to avail of many of those things which conduce to the betterment and elevation of the home and its environments and that to advertise in THE UNION SIGNAL is of comparatively little purpose. This statement, however, is easily refuted, being fully confirmed by the testimony of one of our most progressive advertisers, the Mosely Folding Bath-Tub Co., who, though but a short time in the field soliciting public favor, state that their advertisement in our columns has brought them volumes of correspondence and orders, not only from this country but all over the world; thus they have been warranted in placing a larger and attractive advertisement in this issue on the rear inside cover page, to which we invite particular attention, feeling that our readers fully appreciate an article of merit. We cheerfully give our assurance that this unique and progressive idea in a bath service is of unquestionable merit, hundreds of these indispensable articles are in use all the world over, with marked satisfaction. Our readers can rely upon the integrity of the manufacturers of these excellent goods. Write them inquiring about the goods, and they will supply you with all necessary information and handsome catalogue.

FLOWER MISSION DAY, JUNE 9,

Is the birthday of Jennie Casseday, the first National Superintendent of Flower Mission work, to be observed by taking flowers with text-cards attached, to prisons, jails, hospitals, almshouses and to the poor and sick and sinning everywhere.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Six Spanish anarchists were executed last week.

Civil service commission appropriations have been refused by the House.

The constitutional convention of Hawaii met May 30 to form a new republic.

The National Conference of Charities and Corrections met at Nashville, May 25.

Congress has repealed the law which deducted from members' salaries for absence except during sickness.

Charles W. Buttz has been found guilty, by the Senate investigating committee, of an attempt to bribe Senators.

Preliminary Memorial Day services were held at Saratoga, N.Y., Sunday, by delegates to the religious gatherings.

The French cabinet has resigned, being defeated on a question of permitting state employés to attend a labor congress.

The loss in Williamsport and Lycoming county caused by the devastating floods in Pennsylvania last week is ten million dollars.

The House committee on elections has reported favorably on the election of the United States senators by direct vote of the people.

Over four hundred changes have been made in the schedules of the tariff bill since it left the lower House, and the debate is still going on.

King Alexander of Servia, by proclamation, has revoked the National constitution of 1888, thus accruing greater powers to the king.

Michigan W. C. T. U. closed its twentieth annual convention, Friday, with an address by John G. Woolley; Mrs. Lathrap was reëlected president.

The three leaders of the Coxey commonweal army were sentenced to twenty days in jail, as the result of the May-day demonstration at Washington.

France has instituted a suit against the World's Columbian Exposition Directory for $100,000 damages caused by fire before exhibits were removed.

Queen Victoria's seventy-fifth birthday was celebrated officially, Saturday, throughout the Empire. A number of noted Englishmen have received knighthood.

Strikes and rumors of strikes have been the order of the week. Nine companies of the Illinois militia were ordered to the mines at La Salle to quell the riots.

More than forty societies and charitable organizations of all sects and creeds are named as beneficiaries under the will of the late New York banker, Jesse Seligman.

Drunken Canadian soldiers tore down the American flag which was floated in honor of Queen Victoria by the United States consul at St. Thomas. An investigation has been ordered.

Twenty-four thousand school children of Toronto celebrated Flower Day, Friday, by planting 10,500 flowering plants in the grounds of the forty-eight schools, with musical and literary exercises.

The American Baptist Educational Society held its sixth annual gathering at Saratoga, N. Y., discussing topics related to religious education. Governor Northen, of Georgia, was elected president, and the appropriation of public moneys to sectarian schools was vigorously opposed.

THE electric wires carried a ring of victory into National Headquarters last week from the old dominion city of Norfolk, Va. Here is the joyful message: "Entire city government prohibition; clean sweep; straight party ticket; old Virginia places first municipal jewel in crown of National prohibition. It is a gift from God." All credit to the Southern city for its regal conquest over rum. "Entire city government prohibition!" Does that look like a "twenty years' set-back"?

OUR columns may not have stated with sufficient clearness that the special feature of the International Temperance Congress, to be held at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, June 3, 4 and 5, is a reception to General Neal Dow, in honor of his ninetieth year. The entire exercises of Sunday, June 3, will have for their focusing point the celebration of this happy anniversary and will lead up to the general temperance meetings which follow on Monday and Tuesday. THE UNION SIGNAL of June 14 will report this notable congress as fully as our space will permit.

WE have watched with keen interest for the action of the general assemblies of the Southern and Northern Presbyterian churches on the Breckinridge case. The Southern assembly in session at Nashville, Tenn., simply passed a general resolution declaring that it desired and intended "in all orderly ways" to require personal purity in its people, and added: "As the supreme judiciary of our church it would be manifestly highly improper for the assembly to express an opinion in a case which is before a lower court." Pray, what relation does a church assembly sustain to a civil court? Has it taken the affidavit of the sworn juror to hold no conversation with outsiders upon the question at issue?

BUT the general assembly in session at Saratoga, N. Y., has not passed even so much as a general resolution upon the subject of personal purity. An earnest overture was presented from the presbytery of New Albany, Ind., asking that the assembly memorialize Congress to enact such regulations with reference to the personal life of their members as will prevent the presence in the national councils of men of immoral and dissolute habits. The answer returned to this overture was: "We recommend no action be taken." We are glad to notice that a "few dissenting voices" were raised to this summary disposition of an all important matter. Some member remarked that "that was not the business of the church." If it is not "the business" of a religious council, representing the church in which a notorious offender against morality holds his membership, to pass such a resolution, will not some "statesman" arise to the emergency and explain whose "business" this is?

IN our Correspondence Columns will be found Miss Willard's account of the annual meeting of the British Women's Temperance Association. This meeting was a great test of Miss Willard's strength, but she bore it surprisingly well, and although being called upon to speak several times, refrained from any lengthy address. She has but three engagements previous to sailing for home, and those are at a peace meeting of the Friends, at the temperance convention of Kent county, whence her ancestors sailed to Massachusetts in 1634, and at Dublin, Ireland. At all of these her addresses will be very brief, as it is her desire to husband her strength for the long journey and the home-coming. In this connection we are constrained to ask that the friends in this country refrain from urging Miss Willard to address conventions and summer meetings. Knowing the great desire of the white-ribbon women to once more see and hear their long-absent leader, and her own accommodating spirit, we beg that she be allowed to take up her work gradually and quietly, so that her strength may grow rather than diminish during the summer months.

"SUNDAY closing" is in the air, and it is mightily augmented by the opposition of the liquor traffic, which, in retaliation to closed saloons, in some localities, is determined to close all kinds of business on Sunday. Would that the enemy would carry this war to the gates, and that every form of industry and trade be forced to rest on the Lord's day, if necessary, to secure closed saloons. Verily, "the wrath of man" shall be made to praise Him in these latter days.

BY an inadvertence, we have neglected to make an earlier public explanation of the appearance in our business columns of a watch advertisement offering cigars as a special inducement to boys. The advertisement was one of a series sent in an electrotype plate; hence, did not require any type-setting or proof-reading, and was not critically examined by the advertising agent, as the others had contained no objectionable matter. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty"—from the all-insinuating cigar, and no one could regret so keenly as the editors of this paper that a moment's cessation of vigilance cost us the annoyance of a supposed acceptance of an advertisement which our editorial columns constantly decry.

"TELL a man that he can't get whisky on Sunday and he will at once start in search of a side door." This is the position taken by some of the anti-prohibition newspapers with regard to Sunday closing of saloons. They say it is "human nature" to desire forbidden fruit, and because in New York more than two-thirds of the saloons are open every Sunday in defiance of law they declare that in order to promote Sabbath day sobriety the Society for the Suppression of Vice in that city, instead of fighting open Sunday saloons, should encourage them. According to this philosophy, a man should—because the grocery store is closed on Sunday—become possessed of an inordinate desire to buy flour or coffee or soap, and the same spirit of contrariness should impel him to start in search of a side door to the tailor's establishment on that day. Is it not a little strange that "human nature" should feel the promptings of original sin in so much greater degree when it is saloon commodities that are the "forbidden fruit"? And that prohibitory law when applied to the "liquor traffic" should be more difficult to enforce than prohibitory law when applied to anything else? It will be found on investigation that the trouble lies not so much with the man who buys the drink as with the man who sells it.

IT is gratifying to note the trend of all organizations of women towards deeper thought and declarations upon all social and moral questions. Notably so is this true of the National Council of Women which recently held an important executive session in Philadelphia. As the council represents seventeen national organizations and a total membership of seven hundred thousand, every forward step of the executive is of far-reaching importance. Four aggressive and highly commendable positions were taken: An equal standard of moral purity for men and women; an equal number of women and men on divorce reform commissions; the appointment of a committee on patriotic teaching in the public schools, and fourth, the offering of a prize for a dress design, suitable particularly for students and business women. The requirements of such a costume are: "No interference with the free and natural action of the organs and limbs of the body; no contradiction of the natural womanly outlines; simplicity of construction and ease of adjustment to the wearer, and adaptation to a variety of materials and to change of temperature." At its next biennial meeting in February, 1895, in the capitol city of Washington, we trust that these most needed reforms will be adopted and that the further advanced stand of total abstinence for the individual may be embodied in the council's declaration of principles.

MEMORIAL DAY—"MISSING."

BY DELLE M. MASON.

Again comes the day when the native flowers are strown;
I have no grave to cover, and I sit here alone.
Dear Lord, I am weary and I only long to die!
I thank thee every day that the end is drawing nigh.

And yet, I must linger, for if my boy should come
He must find his mother waiting to give him welcome home.
But it's only in stories that the missing come again,—
My heart is burdened sorely with its heavy load of pain.

I remember that morning,—the weekly paper came
And reading down the fatal list I saw my Willie's name;
I couldn't hold the paper nor read another word—
For all the room grew dark and my heart was all I heard.

It was his corps and regiment, it was his company,—
And though I hoped against it, I knew it must be he.
Spelling over every letter I found it just the same,
And "wounded and missing" was after Willie's name.

Sometimes I live again the days that followed then;
And when we had the letter from one of Willie's men,
He wrote that their captain had received a saber wound,
And when they cleared the field next day he was not to be found.

How oft in dreams I saw him, and saw the ghastly wound
From which his blood was oozing as he lay upon the ground.
I saw his white lips tremble as he breathed a homesick prayer,
Once more to feel his mother's hand upon his tangled hair.

How often the thought came to pierce my heart again
That perhaps my boy lay starving within some prison pen,
While on our orchard grass fell the peaches ripe and red,
And the pantry shelves were crowded with mother's pie and bread.

Oh, the sickening suspense, the mingled hope and fear,
When the prisoners were released and the end was drawing near.
How I sprang to meet my boy, if a tap came at the door,
And my heart was ever longing for his footstep on the floor.

And when the boys came home at the closing of the war,
Som with empty coat sleeves and some with many a scar,
I could not bear to look at my neighbors in their joy—
For my heart was bleeding yet in its sorrow for my boy.

Day after day I watched, but my Willie did not come,
And at night I set a light in the window of his room.
In prayer his mother's heart ever palpitates his name,
And though he never comes yet I ask it just the same.

Others have graves to cover with flowers and garlands fair,
Our flag is borne above them and music fills the air.
Ah! what can be more grand than a nation turned from toil
To place the wreaths of memory on such heroic soil!

But I sit alone, and I say within my heart:
"I gave all I had and I think I've done my part."
Not even a grave for my boy, my only son!
Dear Father, help thy servant to say, "Thy will be done."

ANOTHER ST. GEORGE AND HIS DRAGON.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

"If you could prove to me that Christianity is all a delusion I would go home whistling."

George Young, a rich young man, who startled me with this remark, I had met for the first time a few minutes before, in Bonanza, the great silver city, at a teachers' meeting, where the lesson studied had been the rich young ruler. George had been all that study hour the heart and soul of that group of teachers, the most thoughtful, apparently the most spiritual also, of them all. He was the teacher of a class of fifty young men, whom he held, not by greater age but by mental mastery. However, his superior physique, six feet and straight and round, added to the admiration and loyalty of his class, which had become his clan. He had been, in previous years, a physical director in the Y. M. C. A., and by an all around education of his muscles, avoiding the one-sided development of an athletic specialist, had made the most of his physical possibilities. The members of his class were the more ready to accept his opinions when he had outplayed them all in the gymnasium and the ball field. He was also president of the Y. M. C. A., and a church trustee. In business he was a bank teller, with promising investments in several new silver mines. In that frontier city, where nearly all young men drank, gambled and gave free rein to passion, he had kept himself pure. In the crowd of faces about him, tanned by tobacco juice, alcohol and lust, his face seemed as white as a Greek among Turks, although it was not pale but hale. His voice was full of vim, and his step showed his whole being astir! He was what was called "a hustler" by native frontiersmen, "a rustler" by the more refined people.

When the preacher who led the lesson study that evening stated, as a matter of course, that it was love of money that made the rich young ruler go away from Christ sorrowful and disobedient, this rich young man had dissented with as much intensity of feeling as if he, himself, had been the subject of discussion, as indeed he was in his own mind.

"Young men," he said, "seldom love money for its own sake. They do not at first seek it and save it even for the sake of the honor that it brings. The young man's ambition is to achieve success in whatsoever he undertakes, whether ball or banking. The rich young ruler held on to his money as the foot-ballist holds on to the ball, not for its sake but for the sake of victory."

Being introduced to this young man at the close of the teachers' meeting, we found that our homeward walk would be in the same direction, and so left the house together. As we started out, he startled me by asking with manifest earnestness, about some Bible difficulties. I replied that to my mind Christianity, in its great essentials, is a science, not a dream. He suddenly interrupted me to say, "I have no doubts. I wish I had. If you could prove to me that Christianity is all a delusion I would go home whistling."

I was stunned into silence by such words from such a source, and he continued: "If that lesson we have just studied is really the teaching of Christ, and if Christ is our Lord and Master, what business have I rustling for the million I hope to make? Imagine Christ lolling at ease in a millionaire's coach and castle while men and women and children die all about Him for want of relief or reform. A Christian has no right to devote his chief energies to making his fortune, and that is the very thing I want to do."

I could only say that a good Dives can do much good.

He repliéd almost fiercely, apparently speaking not so much to me as to himself: "The devil has told me that a hundred times, but it's a lie—in the sense he means it. I may have the feast if I will not forget to do good to somebody with the crumbs. I don't love money but I love success. I want to excel in business as I used to in ball. I want a fine house as I used to want the lesser prizes that crowned my victories in sports."

He paused, hesitated, and went on: "And the girl I love I want to enthrone as my queen in a palace. She is not poor exactly but she has never tasted luxury, and nothing is too good for her. But to disobey Christ for the love of a girl is no better than to do it for the love of gold," he added bitterly. "He that loveth father or mother (or any other) more than me is not worthy of me."

He paused, expecting my rebuke or consolation. I gave neither, but looked on with awe at this battle between the new St. George and his dragon.

"My dear Ruth, I have something important to tell you."

"What is it?" she said with trembling, for his pallid face made her fear the worst, and the worst was a break in their affection.

"It is not that," he said, reading her thought, and the blood which had left her face so suddenly at his first sentence rushed back in a rosy tide at this assuring word. "It is not that, but I had hoped to enthrone you as my queen in a palace worthy of you, especially if the Sherman silver purchase law should pass and make my silver shares a bonanza. This morning's papers brought the report that it passed yesterday, and my stock went up to half a million in value. I had been battling all night in my mind about what I am going to tell you, and the right had won when this news reënforced the other side, and it has taken me all day to regain the victory."

"Do you mean," she said, "that you have been tempted to gamble with your stock?"

"I mean," he said, with swiftness, as if he feared something would cut him off in his story, "that I have given my silver shares to God for the poor, and appointed myself manager and administrator without salary. My salary as a teller is as much as a Christian ought to spend on himself and his—family."

Ruth glanced toward the door. Had her lover gone crazy? She turned an inquiring, searching look upon him. His face seemed unnatural because preternaturally calm, that calmness that is intensified by appearing on the background of a retreating storm. She could not understand that face, and so her thoughts returned upon herself. An average Christian, she had liked preaching next best to a party; had said her prayers regularly, but had never given more than a passing thought to the great sorrows and wrongs that raged like billows outside the secure ark of her own home. In dreams of night and day she had anticipated luxury with her lover, with a casual thought, now and then, as she met a beggar, that charity is one of the duties, perhaps privileges, of wealth. Stunned at first by her lover's announcement, she now realized that the palaces of her dreams, which she expected him to turn to brick and stone, had instead, been broken like a bubble by the breath of his words. Her heart overflowing with disappointment and resentment, she pulled her engagement ring from her finger and handed it to him, saying, with mingled pity and scorn, "Crank or crazy, whichever you are, here is my contribution to your new scheme for mending the universe."

Our St. George had given his silver stock to God in word only after two victories, each at the end of a twelve hours' struggle with selfish ambition. But in dealings with God a man's word is not always as good as his bond. Partly from fear of the scornful laughter of business associates, who could not appreciate his motive, and partly from a secret hope, hardly whispered to himself, that he might recover his lost love, he used a part of his silver profits to build a fine mansion, surrounded by a stately private park, ostensibly for his mother and himself. He tried to compromise with conscience by ordering generous supplies of food to be given to all beggars who applied at his door. In leisure hours, partly to escape thinking, he investigated in tenements and public institutions the causes of sins and sorrows, and found them to be appetite and lust and covetousness.

Thus it was he came to attend a temperance meeting of the W. C. T. U. He had never been identified with temperance work, thinking its advocates rather fanatical, and so took a seat in a half hidden nook near the door. A woman was speaking whose face he could not see, but her voice set his heart aquiver.

"Pshaw!" he said, "it can't be Ruth. She never cared for such meetings."

He listened eagerly, not daring to look out lest she might see him, if indeed it was she. It was. She told the meeting how she come to give up what she called her aimless life and enter into temperance work. She had been sent by her mother to carry relief to her aunt, who had made a pitiful appeal for help. She found that once beautiful, that cultured aunt in what was hardly better than a hovel, to which her once wealthy husband had dragged her down through drink. And so she had become a member of a W. C. T. U. and was now their president.

When the meeting was over she lingered to write a note, some message of mercy, and so all others had left the hall when she reached the door.

They met. "I am so ashamed of my selfishness," she said.

"And I," said he, "of the cowardice that took the place of my consecration."

. . . . . .

The palatial residence is now not only their home but also by irreversible deed, the home of the friendless, the aged, the orphaned—a great headquarters of charity and reform; and the park is the park of all.

THE ANNUAL RATE OF MORTALITY FROM INTEMPERANCE.

BY CARL F. ELTZHOLTZ.

It has generally been admitted that about sixty thousand deaths are annually caused by intoxicating drinks in the United States. The popular idea in England has also been that sixty thousand drunkards died every year in the United Kingdom, but as some thought that this was an exaggeration, Dr. Norman Kerr, one of the leading physicians in England, was led to investigate this interesting question. He was afterward invited to introduce the discussion of this subject to the British Medical Association at Worcester some years ago.

In reporting the remarks made by Dr. Kerr, the Medical Temperance Journal, London, says: "Some years ago Dr. Kerr was led by the feeling that the popular idea that sixty thousand drunkards died in the United Kingdom every year was an exaggeration to inquire into this intricate and difficult question. He had noted all the deaths in his own practice which were caused either directly by acute or chronic alcohol poisoning, or indirectly by the induction of secondary causes. Applying his own results after due corrections for the special characteristics of his clientèle to the whole number of medical practitioners, he had been unable to bring the probable number of annual deaths from personal intemperance below 40,500. The records of twelve medical brethren—some engaged in London, some in provincial practice—had shown a considerable higher average."

After reference to an investigation by Dr. Thomas Morton, which brought the annual deaths from personal intemperance up to 13,953 more than Dr. Kerr's estimate, and to an investigation made by the Harveian Medical Society of London, which also brought the annual mortality from intemperance several thousand beyond Dr. Kerr's estimate, the Medical Temperance Journal continues its report:

"Dr. Hardwiche and other experts had endorsed this estimate as most moderate, and Dr. B. W. Richardson had stated that he thought the deaths in this category were at least 50,000 annually. But this was not all the mortality from alcohol. Besides those who died from the effects of drinking in their own person, a larger number of lives were lost through the indulgence of others in strong drink. There were deaths by violence and by accident; the suffocation of children through the drinking of one or both parents; and a long chain of innocent victims, weak women and helpless children, either literally starved to death through the intemperance of the husband and father, or with life gradually crushed out of them through the tyranny and brutality of him who ought to be their cherisher and protector. This indirect mortality from the intemperanc of others than the slain was not only much greater than the direct mortality caused by the lethal of alcohol on the person, but was infinitely more difficult to compute. Though he had closely studied the subject for years, and had done his best to reduce the figures to as low a compass as possible, Dr. Kerr could not shut his eyes to the probability that, for every death from personal intemperance, there were about two deaths from the excess of others. The estimate of 40,500 dying every year in the United Kingdom from their own intemperance, and 79,500 dying from disease, violence, accident or starvation consequent on the intemperance of others, had been submitted to several representative medical gatherings, and had, he regretted to say, not been seriously disputed; in fact, it had been pronounced moderate and far within the truth by such competent authorities as the late Dr. Hardwiche, and many other coroners and medical officers of health."

As the above lengthy quotation from Dr. Kerr's remarks gives "the annual rate of mortality from intemperance" in the United Kingdom to be at least 120,000, should it then be considered an exaggeration to say that the drink demon annually murders 280,000 persons in the United States?

Think of a legalized monster devouring daily 767 persons in this fair land of ours! Think of the treasures worse than wasted! Think of the innocent victims slain by this monster; the desolated homes; the shattered hopes; the lost souls, plunged into eternal misery—a drunkard's hell!

This monster evil is touching every vital power of the nation—and it withers, blasts and defiles everything it touches. No country can continue to prosper if its vital powers are thus drained every year. This infernal drink traffic, this murderer of soul and body, must therefore be destroyed or our boasted civilization, purchased by the precious life-blood of our fathers, will be wrecked on the rock of intemperance.

THE NUDE IN ART.
III.
The Use of Models.

BY ABBY FELTON.

Concluded.

"The pest of modern classical and religious art," says James Jackson Jarves, "is the predominance of the model. So that this is conspicuous, and the artist himself intrusively manifested by academic legerdemain, the fundamental idea is left to shift for itself. Out of very shame at its ignoble position, it hides its ethereal form from mortal eyes." Thus in the paintings of the nude in the art of to-day, no matter what is the subject—whether it be a so-called "Madonna" or a "Wasp's Nest"—the artists seek not to embody or represent some noble and sublime thought, but simply to show how perfectly they, Bougereau or Kenyon Cox or St. Gaudens, can draw and paint the female form. But, as Jarves says, something besides absolutely correct, by rule drawing and painting is necessary to constitute one an artist,—these should be means, not ends—means by which the true artist can worthily say something which is also in itself worthy. If he has nothing to say he is no true artist. We are well aware that a sentiment like this is altogether antiquated, and that the "new critcism" scores nothing so mercilessly as the "vice of subject" in art, and the "absolute idiocy" of those artists who put ideas into their pictures. "The object of art," say the exponents of this newest dogma, "is beauty, not truth." But a new generation must be educated and the old one must pass away before it will b possible for spectators to eliminate all thought from the pleasure they receive in viewing a fine picture. Whether the thought suggested by the artist and perceived by the spectator be something abstract and noble, or concrete and expressed in the term Hans Makart or Apolloni, remains, we fear, altogether in the power of the modern artist to decide and enforce.

If it is conceded that there can be no highest art without the study and representation of the nude, it must also be admitted that the living model is equally indispensable. "No great painter," says Ruskin, "was ever able to do without the use of the model." The historians of Michael Angelo, however, assure us that that greatest genius of all time, who "put unconscious life into stone," whose statues of "Morning" and "Night" "live and breathe, and will live on for ages," accomplished all these immortal works and all the wonderful Sistine frescoes entirely without the use of models. Twelve years of indefatigable study of the anatomy of the human figure, and of practice, in the beginning of his career, gave his conceptions—those lightnings of thought—such supernatural clearness, and his hand that sure dexterity which enabled him to "strike the marble into shape," as with an improvization.

Though all writers on art agree that the use of the living model is necessary, they just as unanimously agree that such a practice is not without its dangers. "All artists," says Rossetti, "unless they have emancipated themselves into such an imaginative attitude, far from the gross region of fact, as to dispense with models altogether, are exposed to the danger of an injudicious choice of models; Virgin Marys and Cleopatras are not always to be found for the wanting."

Raphael is a conspicuous example of one of the evils to which a young, "heaven-taught" artist is exposed by this practice. The "corrupted" Raphael could not, or did not, restrain within due bounds his love of beauty in form, nor succeed in keeping his use of the model up to an ideal level. His St. Cecilia, which some esteem as his greatest work, is so far from being "idealistic" that it is only a "mere study of a passionate, dark-eyed, large-formed Italian model," at least so one writer regards it.

Of the more subtle dangers, pertaining less to the artist than to the man, of the comparative morality between the profession of art and that of other professions, of the great artists, "few of whom," says Jarves, "were rigid in their religious observances or scrupulous as to the stricter moralities," it is unnecessary to speak. Those who would "treat these subjects with the calm and dignified strain that matters of high art deserve" and that St. Gaudens bespeaks for them must appreciate the truism that it is not the profession but the individual that marks the dividing line between "what is of good and what is of evil report."

But, it may be asked, would not artists themselves occupy a more dignified position and exhibit a higher and nobler advocacy of their art if they refrained from caricaturing the sensibilities of the "outer public" in such pictures as the one entitled "Shocking!" in the German section of the Art Palace at Jackson Park?

As a final word concerning models, we are most happy to record the dictum of an experienced artist who declares that the American model is far superior to her sisters across the sea. Let us hope that the superiority is not wholly an intellectual one.

There is still another aspect of our general subject, which, perhaps, should be touched upon. It is said that Ruskin believes that it is an artist's mistake as well as a moral wrong to expose the human form in art, for what is morally wrong cannot be artistically right. The new criticism, as it calls itself, would easily dispose of this aspect of the question by reminding us that art is simply and exclusively pictorial; that all subjects, all ideas, abstractions, moralities and the like have no place whatever in art. But the aspect to which we referred in the beginning of this paragraph concerns the moral wrong done to the victims. We may, perhaps, be condescendingly allowed the simple privilege of at least questioning, What right has any man or woman, artist or cartoonist, to deprive a woman of all clothing and display her unclothed form in public? and we may appropriately add a second query, Will the matter be made more or less an evil when the dawning custom of representing the forms of unclothed men becomes a "fad"?

There is but one answer to the question of right in this matter—at least in the present day when the mistakes of Moses and those of Jesus of Nazareth—the two great expounders of moral law, are so freely "exposed," and that is to ignore it, or to reply by refraction, that "whenever and wherever the common mind demands the indecent, the vulgar or the meretricious, it gets it," or in other words, the much-vaunted "high art" drops like a plummet to the level of the demand, and, moreover, by that token it is known at once to be "out of its legitimate sphere." As our quotations are, each and all, from the writings and criticisms of well-known artists, we feel no hesitation in presenting them or in emphasizing the last clause of the one just given. If artists would remember that to paint pictures which come under the above classifications, they are, not only in the minds of the public but of the artists also, placing themselves once and forever outside of all true art, the consideration might prove a valuable deterrent.

But just so long as "artists" will paint and carve canvasses, marbles and ivories which must be kept under lock and key, (their only suitable abiding place, by the way,) and just so long as purchasers can be found for them, we are justified, we think, in wishing that the whole matter could be quite done away with and that all men and women would live beautiful pictures so that artists would be impelled to paint only such.

Ravenswood, Ill.

A LEADING QUESTION.

BY FRANCES W. LEITER.

A communication, written some months ago, has recently come to notice, in which the writer makes this inquiry: "The pledge of one thousand prominent ladies to use their influence in favor of dress reform, doubtless meant a word of encouragement; and it was. Is it not possible to devise some plan whereby all who desire to adopt correct dress will act in concert? Can this not be brought about through the W. C. T. U.?"

Experience in the varied demands of a rapidly growing organization has surely fitted our women to face prejudice and overcome some serious difficulties. It will be noticed, however, that the reform measures in which we have been courageous, and, in a remarkable degree, successful, have not had so personal bearing as correct street dress involves. If we were all addicted to the use of alcohol, opium, and tobacco, and could, under such circumstances, command sufficient will-power to act, perhaps we would venture no further than declaring our intention to lend our influence against such habits, trusting the hour to come when there would be concerted movement among women to step from under the yoke of narcotics.

There was a time in the history of our country when we emerged from a disastrous civil war, with commercial and monetary interests depressed. The average business man, looking through the pessimistic lens, regarded paper money with a sense of weary disgust, evidently believing that times never would be any better, and that bankruptcy stared this great nation in the face. If, during the protracted discussion over the situation, the men of the country had been women instead, with no broader outlook than law and popular voice grant to women even in these progressive days, they would likely have congregated in conventions, or issued documents for signatures, declaring themselves ready to "lend their influence" in favor of specie payment; and this would have ended the matter, for a season at least. Fortunately, this government places its great financial interests in the hands of an executive head with power to act, particularly in crucial periods, and the country is expected to follow. The secretary of the treasury, in those days, proved himself a statesman. With the courage of inborn patriotism, backed by fitting mental caliber, he declared that upon a certain day the treasury would begin matching every piece of national paper with an equivalent in gold or silver. From that hour the nation retraced its steps toward peace of mind and prosperity.

According to the divine standard, womankind is, to-day, below par. She emerged from barbarism and low grade civilization, possessing, it is true, some remarkable guarantees of power, but bearing serious indications of having become a depreciated product of creation, even under the more favorable circumstances of modern times. Legislation is gradually releasing us from bondage over which it has any jurisdiction and is protecting our rights. The church is surely opening wide its doors, granting to women all the privileges that a "whosoever" gospel extends to humankind, while the philanthropic field recognizes no barriers. There is, however, a type of slavery to which we are yet subjected, that unfits us, in a large measure, for the opportunities so freely granted. Upon this the church and the law will not likely attempt to draw the line, because the remedy rests with woman herself. While this disability remains we are thus far responsible for the limitations placed upon us.

An aeronaut may sit in the car of an inflated balloon with all the conditions for rapid ascent fully met; but so long as it continues anchored to earth he remains an aeronaut only in name. No argument is needed to prove that woman is denied the highest pleasures and possibilities of existence, through the slavery of inappropriate dress more than any other one known cause.

Drunkenness is called vice, and continues such so long as this indulgence remains under control of the individual. Vice of any kind means a perversion of the human, whether of body or mind, from the design of the Maker. The permissions of fashionable life in dress may become vice, lowering the standard of morality in men and women. Dress, even in meeting every day requirements, that hinders and cripples the discharge of conscientious obligations, is removed from vice only so far as it is not the result of voluntary choice and from which there is no power to escape. Centuries of acquiescence have settled upon woman a style of costume wholly unfitted for the privileges and responsibilities of the present day, and popular prejudice binds this to her being with all the relentless tenacity of unwritten law. This is the tyranny under which the progressive, liberty-loving woman frets; from whose displeasure the influential sister shrinks, and about which the writer has asked: "Can release not be accomplished through the W. C. T. U.?"

If the ten thousand locals in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the country would decide to adopt an appropriate costume for outdoor service, and persistently wear it, this might prove a little leaven which, in time—perhaps a very long time—would extend to the entire sisterhood. It is safe to affirm that this will not be done. Why? Because even women whose lives are given to philanthropic effort lack important conditions which make the step probable. The solution of the dress question does not depend upon law which must be peremptorily obeyed; nor upon leadership which the rank and file not only may, but must follow, as do the votaries of fashion's dictum. The fact is, the conditions of women must change. When this requirement is fulfilled, the dress problem will have been solved, and without consciousness of the process. What are the conditions?

Who has not heard even sensible women say: "I know it is not in accord with common sense or decency to wear trailing skirts upon the street; nor to indulge in a costume so bound about the person as to impede locomotion? In fact, it is not right; but I must confess that I have not the moral courage to be out of fashion." In the course of events, it becomes the style not to wear trailing, fettering skirts. The representative woman falls into line—not by exercise of moral courage, and because the style happens to be more sensible—but through the overwhelming desire to be in fashion. In settling the matter of correct dress, an element of moral courage will doubtless be needed; but the lack of it does not wholly explain why we continue victims of inappropriate attire. Yes, we shall have occasion to command moral courage—and women possess it; but something else is necessary before this emancipation fully comes. The truth, plainly spoken, is this: We are not all gotten up, physically, according to a plan which will permit us to adopt a costume allowing freedom and comfort without disturbing our vanity somewhat. So, vanity must be conquered but not through the medium of moral courage more than is already possessed. Let us illustrate.

During the Denver National Convention it was announced that one would appear in a newly devised business suit at a noon intermission. That locality, so noted for its remarkable weather, produced, unexpectedly, a genuine snow-storm. Upon the day mentioned, scores of W. C. T. U. women were seen wending their way to the church through snow, wind, rain, mud and slush, vainly attempting to manage with only two hands, an unruly umbrella, pounds of documents, and dry-goods that persistently obeyed the laws of gravitation. Once inside the lecture-room these courageous reformers dropped their belongings with a woeful expression of face, ejaculating, "Isn't this dreadful?" Of all the conferences that occurred during the convention this one commanded even eager attention. As the apostle of decency and fitness, appropriately attired in short dress and leggins to match, with simple walking hat, stood upon the window-sill that all might see, from every direction could be heard, "She looks splendidly." "Now that is sensible." But what gave the whole crowd away was the frequent, unguarded utterance: "Yes, but how would I look!"

At that wonderful congress of women in Chicago last May, no conference proved so overwhelming as the one in the interest of correct dress. The program presented a coterie of prominent lights, each bearing her pet torch—from dear Lucy Stone who simply recounted her trying experiences in other days, to the more modern designers whose great purpose seemed to be escape from the prejudice against "bloomers." It was reasonable to suppose that these same enthusiastic women, so appropriately suited, would consent to appear daily in their costumes as an object lesson to the multitude who needed education along that line. But the frocks disappeared to be produced only on a later special occasion.

These two experiences thoroughly convinced one student of the situation that before hygienic, sensible dress can ever prevail, women must possess waked-up, trained muscles, better digestion, healthier blood, more perfect nutrition, more active moral sense regarding the fitness of things, and physical courage which comes through proper body discipline under circumstances of health. We may not all scream at a mouse or faint at the sight of blood; but we do, as a sex, lack the physical courage to carry out that which our moral sense assures us is right. The most illiterate man with reasonable health and no more than ordinary body training, prides himself upon physical pluck. Women have been educated to pride themselves upon the lack of it. This was the deplorable bequest of the days of chivalry.

What cannot be accomplished by simple decree may be reached by indirect methods. When women are built up physically according to the Creator's standard, and have acquired a keener sense of the relation which a healthy, disciplined body sustains to the demands of life, some of the questions which truly perplex us will have passed away. Let us, then, cease talking about "lending our influence" in favor of correct dress, and work with zeal which is born of knowledge to establish a gymnasium for women in every center of more than one or two thousand inhabitants, with an experienced director or leader in charge.

Some of the surplus energy in children which distracts tired mothers, and woefully upsets the plans of well-regulated households, can find fitting harness in the easily constructed home apparatus which should be the adjunct of every nursery. If, as the inheritance of long-established prejudice, girls are found wanting in energy, then the privileges of early body discipline are all the more imperative. To systematic physical training during the public school course, we are earnestly looking for the balance which women of to-day unfortunately do not possess. As a reform through education which vitally concerns the success of women, this organization should not be slow in seeking legislation which shall make this discipline compulsory.

If the spirit-level of feminine life must be fashion, for the sake of our children's children, let us make it the fashion to possess such physical conditions that the possibilities of the individual may have chance, not only for existence, but progress. Under these circumstances, dress for women will easily and naturally adjust itself a fitting servant rather than an oppressive master.

NOTES OF THE NOON MEETING IN WILLARD HALL.

BY JANE EGGLESTON ZIMMERMAN.

In my notes of the meeting in THE UNION SIGNAL of March 29, I spoke of a mother in the South who expressed a desire that our "House Beautiful" might be the spiritual birthplace of her son and his wife. As he was a good singer, she thought he might be gotten to lead our singing, and so have some reason for coming to the hall. But our singing was led by Mr. A. W. Shaffer, who freely gave us his services, so much appreciated by our audiences, and I saw no way of compassing the mother's desire. Mr. Shaffer, however, was just about this time tolled away from us by the Y. M. C. A., which offered a handsome salary, and we could but acknowledge it was well deserved; with great regret on both sides we parted with our cherished leader.

Thus was the way opened to invite Mr. W. to sing for us. He came, but was at first very indifferent and inattentive. He afterwards told me that he did not dare to listen to what was said, or to allow himself to become interested in what he sang. Little by little, however, he showed more attention, and now both he and his wife are truly converted and thoroughly enlisted in the Lord's work. Every day at noon his mother, in a distant city, was locked in her room praying for their conversion. Thus does God honor faith in himself.

A young man mentioned in my notes of May 10 is still standing, humble, chastened and deeply in earnest. While he was absent from the meetings I wrote him a letter of Christian counsel. He told me afterwards, that receiving it at his place of business, after reading it he turned it over to the young man whose desk was next his own. The latter read it with tears dropping down upon it. Afterwards, seven of the clerks in this establishment went out to get a drink, my friend, to whom I had written, among the number. As they waited for their drinks to be mixed, he, being a little intoxicated already, pulled my letter from his pocket and read it to his six companions. They listened silently till it was finished, and then went out, leaving their drinks untouched upon the bar. He also called for the bill, paid it, and went out without drinking. The barkeeper remarked that in all his life he never saw the like of that before. Pray for all these young men that good fruit may result from this, humanly speaking, chance seed sowing.

During the latter part of April, a large, powerfully built man was brought to me at the close of the meeting, as one desiring help. I give his story as nearly as possible in his own words: "My mother died when I was four months, and my father when I was nine months old. I was put to live with a farmer who misused me in every way. When I was five years old I ran away and came to Chicago, and sold papers for a livin'."

"How did you live?" I asked.

"Live? Like the rest of 'em. I slept in boxes or under the sidewalk, and got what I could to eat. I've been all over the western country. My best friend is Texas Bill—maybe you've heard of him? Him an' me's been together since I was twelve years old. He's an awful good-hearted kind of a man, though if you was to make him mad he'd just as soon shoot you as not. I want to get him in here."

"What led you in here?" I asked.

"Well, I never heard of God, only in a bad way, that's swearin', except just twice. I was in a church once, an' I heard 'em talking about God, but I couldn't make out nothing what they meant. An' once, when I was out on a ranch, the ranchman an' me got to talkin', and he said: 'John, you're an infidel.' 'What's an infidel?' I said. 'Well,' he said, 'there's two kinds o' people in the world—Christians (they believe there's somebody higher than they are who rules over 'em that's called God) and the rest's called infidels.' After that we got to arguin' about it, an' that's all I ever heard. But I've been thinkin' about it for a year past, an' I've watched people comin' out o' church, an' I said to myself, 'Them people's got something I ain't got, and I'd like to find out what makes 'em so different from me.' The other day me an' Bill was walkin' along the street, an' he says to me, 'John, we ain't no better than the dogs. We are livin' like 'em an' we'll die like 'em.' 'That's so,' says I, an' I made up my mind I'd find out something different. So to-day, when I was goin' by here I couldn't get past the door; my feet wouldn't go by, an' I had to come in an' see if you could help me any. I supposed you was some kind of an organization, an' I didn't think you'd let me in, but I couldn't get by, so I had to come in."

To instruct John Marsh was a difficult task since the terminology of the Christian life was an unknown tongue to him.

"I s'pose doin' wrong that's what you call sin, ain't it?" he asked. "You promised to get me a book,—what do you call it?"

"The Bible," I replied.

"Yes, that's it. Well, I wish you'd get one for me, for I want to learn all about this thing."

The next day Mr. Malcolm McNeil, the converted seaman, came in, and I introduced the two, knowing that Mr. McNeil, who had had a similar experience, could lead him. He took him up to the office of a devoted Christian lawyer, Mr. Moony, who gave him some money to buy a Testament. With a few cents that were left, although, like the Son of Man, he had not where to lay his head, he bought a candle and betook himself to a box-car, where he read his Testament till three o'clock. As he read the old, old story so new to him, sweat covered him from head to foot, and when he came to the account of Christ on the cross, speaking pardon to the dying thief, his heart broke. That was his case, and the Saviour of sinners became his Saviour.

"I've been all through the western country," he said, "for twenty-three years, an' I've seen men drinkin' an' shootin' an' killin' each other, an' I never once saw or heard of anybody tellin' 'em not to do it, not a single time. Now, when I've got this book all learnt, an' it won't take me long I'm goin' back to the western country to tell 'em about God, an' bein' good."

A wealthy cattle dealer who knew him in Texas wanted to supply him with money for his needs, but he has repeatedly refused, saying he was big and strong and was able to earn whatever he needed.

Thus has this new apostle received his heavenly call. Nor theological seminary, nor church, nor any institution of men, with chairs and endowments and professors and degrees, nor any human agency called him to his life work, but a little book whose name he could not readily remember, and the Spirit of the Lord, whose "testimony is sure making wise the simple."

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

White Ribbons to the Fore.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The eighteenth annual meeting of the British Women's Temperance Association and the fourth since Lady Henry Somerset was president, has occupied us during the week just closing. It was a marvelous meeting; there were as many delegates duly accredited as we have at our largest National W. C. T. U. Conventions. Three hundred new societies have been organized this year and Helen Hood has had much part in this as secretary of the department of organization of which Lady Henry is chairman. The principality of Wales has been added to the society. Eight and a half million pages of literature have been published; over three hundred thousand copies of the Woman's Signal have been circulated since it was started in January last. The total membership of the society is about one hundred thousand, and the total amount expended during the year, exclusive of that required for founding the weekly organ, is about twenty thousand dollars.

As a memorial of the twenty years since the Crusade, Lady Henry and coadjutors asked the local societies to collect money in boxes to establish an Industrial Farm Home for inebriate women, and for this purpose they have raised eight thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars, and besides this one lady—Miss Sarah Hinton—gave two thousand five hundred dollars.

A White Ribbon Publishing Company has been organized on the same general plan of our sturdy old W. T. P. A., and brings out the women's paper, books, pamphlets, leaflets, etc. One Industrial Home for girls and one Rescue Home have been affiliated with the B. W. T. A. this year. Sixteen departments have been organized to which (after an earnest plea from our World's superintendent of that department, Anna A. Gordon) the council voted to add a new one—juvenile work or the Loyal Temperance Legion. The Bands of Hope in Great Britain are such a power that until recently the white ribbon women have not felt the necessity of such an organization of their own, but they believe that they can reach an army of children who do not belong to Bands of Hope, excellent as they are.

The question of scientific temperance instruction is very difficult to handle here because the department of education has entire control, no Parliamentary enactment being possible; and the method of introducing subjects into the schools is rather by suggestion than by demand, the local boards being the final authority. But strenuous efforts are made and these earnest women will doubtless reap in good time—for they are sure not to faint.

The work for social purity is steadily advancing, as the resolutions adopted by the council clearly indicate; and while they do not pledge their constituencies, the delegates, almost without exception, rose in the annual meeting to show their personal loyalty to the equal franchise for women.

Lady Henry Somerset was reëlected with but two dissenting votes; Mrs. Aukland, one of the veterans, formerly associated with Margaret Bright Lucas, was reëlected honorable secretary; Miss Mary Gorham, who has a talent for raising money hardly second to that of our own Mrs. Carse, was made treasurer, and Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith "of ours" was chosen recording secretary, with Mrs. Ward Poole as her assistant; Miss Gertrude Hunt is office secretary, and has an alert-minded gift for details that I have not seen surpassed. Miss Helen Hood, whose talent for organizing local unions has been known to us so long, is made superintendent of that department for the year to come, also a member of the executive committee and the central committee, which speaks well for her work here. By an amendment to the constitution, Lady Henry was permitted to choose a vice-president who should represent her in case of her illness, absence, or if for any other reason she should be temporarily unable to perform the duties of her office. Mrs. Eva McLaren, wife of Walter McLaren, M. P. (woman's chief champion in Parliament), was chosen to fill this responsible position; Mrs. McLaren is a niece of John Bright and Margaret Bright Lucas, and, like them, a member of the Society of Friends. She was chosen in Chicago at the Women's Parliament as the secretary of the International Women's Council, of which the Countess of Aberdeen was made president; and is treasurer of the Women's Liberal Federation, of which the Countess of Carlisle is president. She has been for a year superintendent of the department of franchise in the W. W. C. T. U.; she is a woman in the early prime of life, of remarkable executive capacity, and most discriminating and trustworthy mind and perfectly equipoised manner toward everybody on all occasions. Mrs. McLaren is an invaluable acquisition to the official force of our white-ribbon movement in Great Britain.

Lady Henry's own work has been unusually arduous, Heavy debts weighed upon the new executive, and the subscription list was absolutely unequal to the demand. By an arrangement with the United Kingdom Alliance large meetings were held throughout the kingdom, they arranging the meetings, and Lady Henry, as speaker, receiving any balance left from expenses. This arrangement enabled the Alliance to hold immense mass-meetings on the Veto Bill without any loss to their society, and Lady Henry's report states: "I have placed in the treasury of the British Women's Temperance Association the sum of £470, which I have thus been able to earn."

Concerning the tremendous meeting in Queen's Hall with which the council closed, I do not feel adequate to write; suffice it that the Exeter Hall meeting pales its fires of enthusiasm in the glow of this beautiful panorama where three hundred children dressed in white rendered the music from Miss Anna Gordon's Y Song Book; Canon Wilberforce, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, Ben Tillett (the labor movement leader), Miss Florence Balgarnie, the Rev. Dr. F. B. Myer (the "beloved disciple" among the London clergy) and many others spoke; where memorials and gifts, that will be the delight of our women when placed among the archives of the Temple, were presented; where Lady Henry Somerset presided, and Monseignor Nugent, of the Catholic Total Abstinence Society, pronounced the benediction.

A cable came signed "National, Chicago. Titus 3:8." It was too late for the council, but is hereby gratefully acknowledged. More anon.

A PERSONAL WORD.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—An explanation seems necessary to the many friends all over the country whose letters of business, friendship and sympathy have remained unanswered for several months.

Ever since the coming in of the new year, I have been out of the battle and have only heard it from afar. At no time have I been able to keep even with my regular correspondence either by pen or dictation, and only part of the time could do any work.

I am now improving and expect to be ready to "begin all over again" soon. I have thought best to plan no hard work for the summer, but to play and get strong, and this is only to tell why letters and letters have brought no response. MARY T. LATHRAP.

A LETTER FROM COULSON KERNAHAN.*

Author of "A Book of Strange Sins."

DEAR FRIEND:—My aim in writing "A Book of Strange Sins" was that I felt that when men like Oscar Wilde speak of some form of wrong-doing as "more beautiful than the seven deadly sins" (!); and when some of the ablest of our writers in prose and poetry are using their abilities to make vice look attractive, and to throw the glamour of poetry over what is foul, it is time for earnest men and women to show sin as she is—to strip her of her harlot powder and paint and show her for the loathsome hag that she is.

I have in this work tried to reach the men and women who will not read sermons or hear them, and to do so I had to paint sin as it is, to draw aside the curtain and show it in all its nakedness. I did not "point the moral" because to have done so would have frightened away the people I want to reach, but I did feel that no one who is on the side of right and purity could misunderstand my aim, however he might fail to sympathize with my method.

The adverse criticisms in the London Quarterly Review made me feel at first as if I must—to be so misunderstood—have been guilty of publishing what was "loathsome," as if I had actually struck a traitor's blow at the cause which is so near my heart. But when I found how utterly religious people repudiated the London Quarterly Review, I took heart again and your generous and sympathetic words helped and encouraged me beyond telling. The book is meant to set people thinking for themselves, and for this reason I have tried to make the articles suggestive.

"The Lonely God," for instance, seems to me to point to the one and only answer to the question it raises—the Christian belief in the Holy Trinity; and "A Strange Sin" was written to show our terrible need of some help outside ourselves—our inexorable need of salvation by our Saviour. The "Richard Armstrong" of my story is a man who is (in his latter days at all events) a moral man but not a Christian. Had he brought his sin to the Cross of Calvary (I am old-fashioned enough, though a young man, to believe that the Cross of Christ is poor humanity's only hope) he would never have let his blind longing to atone for his sin drive him into the doing of so mad and morbid an act as the committal of another sin.

Outside Christianity I see no hope for the man who is weighed down by the burden of sin. I do not mean, of course, that I see no hope for his ultimate salvation. What I mean is that the dead weight of his sins is often the surest clog to drag him down again into the mire, and often deeper mire. But the man who brings his sin, and even his inability to free himself entirely from sinning again to the Lord Christ, has such hope and help as are nowhere else to be found. It was humanity's terrible need of a Saviour to which that story "A Strange Sin" was meant to point. . . It seems to me that men and women who write on the terrible questions of the day must adopt some other methods than the sentimentality of the old-fashioned temperance tract. That sort of literature only appeals to men who are not likely to go wrong. The Y. M. C. A., and kindred institutions, are doing noble work in keeping the well-disposed fellows from harm, but I fear they have but little influence in reaching the men outside—the very men who are most in need of help and warning, but who turn away resolutely from such influences. The ordinary temperance tract may strengthen the steady steps of the friends of temperance, but I fear that it very rarely turns the feet of the intemperate away from the dangerous road. The temperance novelist of the future must be equipped with the same intellectual power, the same dramatic vigor and strength of presentiment which make the "literary" novel a success.

*By permission we publish this extract from a letter to Miss Willard.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And what shall I more say? for the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephthah; of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets; who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions.—Heb. 11: 32, 33.

The small space allotted last week did not give me an opportunity to speak at length in regard to my visit to the Pacific coast. I will therefore continue the subject. I had a delightful visit in Southern California, especially in Colton, at the home of Mr. Sudduth, the father of our busy and talented editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, Miss Margaret A. Sudduth. "Marguerites," the name of their home, is a lovely cottage, embowered in marguerites and roses, in the midst of a fine orange grove, where mocking-birds sang all the night long. Mrs. Sudduth is the president of the Colton W. C. T. U., and although a very small union, she pledged $100 for them for the Temple. Redlands, Riverside, Santa Barbara and the many unions centering in Los Angeles, are all going to work for the Temple. Besides several individuals promised large sums as soon as the times improve. Mrs. M. E. Garbutt, president of Southern California, was very kind, so, also, was Mrs. Sturtevant Peet, president of the W. C. T. U. of North California; both ladies are heartily in sympathy with the Temple enterprise, having discernment to see the good that must accrue to all state W. C. T. U. work through the success of the project.

Southern California is a delightful winter resort, but to my mind the valley of the Sacramento is the garden spot of the Pacific coast. Here, between the thirty-ninth and fortieth parallels, the flowers bloom and the birds sing the year round, while in the country east of the Sierra Nevada Range in the same latitude, severe winters prevail. This stupendous mountain barrier, in connection with the topography of the Sacramento valley, as well as the ocean currents which sweep around the coast, which is but one hundred miles distant, gives to Chico and its adjacent regions the delightful, even and healthful climate for which they are noted. The rainfall here is also much greater than in Southern California. This is the one spot where the vegetation of the cool, temperate zone and of the semi-tropics meet on common ground and find all that is essential to their perfect development. Grain—especially wheat and barley—are most productive, besides all kinds of fruit, including oranges, lemons, figs, apricots and nectarines; the almond is especially productive and remunerative. The cherries and peaches of this region are wonderfully delicious and abundant. Chico, containing six thousand inhabitants, and Rancho Chico, for they are one and the same, as the city is built on one end of the Rancho, is beautiful for situation. An enthusiastic admirer writes of it in the following glowing terms: "Chico, 'the city of roses!' the gem of the Sacramento valley! the charming emporium of Butte county, is located on Chico creek, in the northwestern part of the county, about midway between Sierra Nevada range, uplifting itself to an elevation of eight thousand feet, a mighty barrier between the warm, flower-ladened valleys of the coast and the colder basins of the east. Nothing can excel the beauty of her location and surroundings. Within this vast amphitheatre of hills and mountains there is a land as rich as any in the valley of the Nile or the Po, with a climate so warm, balmy and hospitable that all the verdure of the temperate zones and fruits find a most congenial home." It is six thousand five hundred acres of land in this beautiful valley which General John Bidwell now offers for sale, out of the proceeds of which he is to give $50,000 to the Temple. A syndicate of Prohibitionists in San Francisco are now planning to purchase the entire tract and make a temperance settlement of it, dividing it off into small farms. If they succeed it will indeed be a Utopia for our temperance people. Happy, indeed, will the men and women be who are fortunate enough to secure a farm in such a favored locality.

Mrs. Emily P. Nichols, North Chatham, N. Y., sends a check for $100 in memoriam for her husband, Bradley Nichols, the trend of whose life was for temperance and righteousness. Mrs. Nichols writes: "He, too, was an unfaltering worker for those better things which carry eternal life with them." It is surely appropriate therefore that the name of such a man find a place under the beautiful text which is cut on the marble band running along the south wall of Willard Hall: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them." A $100 check comes from the W. C. T. U. of Minnesota. The ever loyal and true state president, Mrs. H. A. Hobart, writes: "This is in response to the letter of Mrs. Carse, requesting the state presidents to pledge the state union for $100 by January, 1895. Will you please call Mrs. Carse's attention to the fact that Minnesota state W. C. T. U. has responded promptly and cheerfully and is standing by her every hour of every day? Our women have sent the request that Mrs. Eliza Sheeks Wright's name accompany the one hundred dollars to be placed on the Minnesota tablet." Mrs. Nancy A. Morse, La Fayette, N. Y., an aged white-ribboner, sends through her lawyer $100 on which we are to pay her six per cent interest during her life; at her death the money is to revert to the Temple. Are there not some others whose sands of life are growing few, who would like to be their own executors and give to the Temple, if they could be assured of an income from their bequest during their lives? Several now have bequeathed money to the Temple in this way. One good man sent almost two thousand dollars under such an agreement; before our answer of acceptance reached him the call came for him to go to the land where gold and silver are of no value unless it has been coined into good works.

STRENGTH IN WEAKNESS.

Lord, carry me.—Nay, but I grant thee strength
To walk and work thy way to heaven at length.

Lord, why, then, am I weak?—Because I give Power to the weak and bid the dying live.

Lord, I am tired.—He hath not much desired
The goal, who at the starting point is tired.

Lord, dost thou know?—I know what is in man;
What the flesh can and what the spirit can.

Lord, dost thou care? Yea, for thy gain or loss
So much I cared it brought me to the cross.

Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief!—
Good is the word; but rise, for life is brief.
The follower is not greater than the chief;
Follow thou Me along my way of grief.

WHAT MEMORIAL DAY DID FOR JOHN.

BY MRS. MC VEAN-ADAMS.

My brother John, I mean,—John Parsons; I make my home with him, being an old maid.

A kinder-hearted boy never lived than John; and he is the same as a man, but heedless, needs a sight of reminding about some things. When they first began to observe Decoration Day here at the Corners' burying ground, John didn't take to the idea.

He was an old soldier, he said; had been in the war more than a year, until his fingers—two of them—were shot off and he had his honorable discharge, and was drawing a pension, and that was all there need be of it. He said he didn't know as he'd feel any better, when his time came, to have a salute fired over him and a flag set up at his head, and have flowers laid on his grave once a year by a passel o' girls that knew nothing about him, and cared less.

But one spring he was put on the committee with a couple of Grand Army men from the post over at Longtown, to find and mark the soldiers' graves in our burying ground. There wasn't but three of them, and their folks had moved away, and such a hunt as those men had! Why, the weeds were taller than the headstones!

Well, after that year, John began, of his own notion, to call out those interested, to put the grave-yard in order before grass started. They fixed the fence up so that it kept out cows and sheep, cut down the old dead weeds, trimmed the trees and took out some dead and broken evergreens and raked the leaves out of the way. It was surprising what a pretty place it looked. The elms, not being too crowded, had grown into beautiful forms. On some lots the white clover had spread and showed sheets of white clover blossoms, and in other places the periwinkle—we call it the blue-eyed myrtle—had formed a thick mat of green even across the paths, and blossomed full of blue stars. By Decoration Day the air was full of the smell of lily of the valley—you know how that will spread—and all along the fence were rows of green spires, each shielding a stem hung with fairy bells. I noticed the change, for I had been at John again and again to fix up our lot, at least to fill in the sunken graves and seed it down to tame grass. But he never could get to it till his pride was touched by having others notice the difference after their lots were in order.

So off he goes, day after day, and works by himself until he was just suited. Evenings he would sit awhile thinking, and then he would speak up to me and say, "Patience, I've thought a good deal about mother lately," and he would go on about remembering how she carried flowers to father's grave when we were little, and how good her chicken pies used to taste, and how she used to talk to us about leaving the world better than we found it and being on the right side of every question.

I took notice that when Wilkins came over to beg off from paying his mortgage because his wife had been sick so long John told him he'd wait till better times, and gave him a load of wood besides. And Mary, John's wife, told me she went over one day when the union met at the Corners, slipped out and ran over to the burying ground, and there John stood leaning on his rake, looking down at their baby's grave—the only one they ever had—it seemed such a pity to lose it.

She said that night he spoke to her about the baby, which he hadn't done for a long time, and he said: "Such a little grave as it is!" And he had kept thinking, what if his boy had lived what comfort they would have taken providing for him. Mary had always been lonesome since the baby died, and she spoke up and told him how many little ones were suffering for care, and were neglected, abused and taught to do evil.

"Why, right at our own Poor Farm is the baby those movers left in the road last week," she said.

And that was how it came about that a baby was brought to our house, a year-old boy just trying to walk, and as full of fun and grand in his ways as if he owned the whole establishment.

You never saw a woman grow young so fast as Mary did, and pretty, too, especially when that blessed boy had his arms around her neck. And John, why, he took that boy with him all over the farm, and the child knew all the animals before he could talk plain, and would sit on John's shoulder, and pat them with his mite of a hand, all pink and dimpled. Such an interest as he takes, too, in all John's affairs—the garden, the crops, the hay and the orchard.

Of course it made a great change in John, musing over mother's grave, and remembering so many of her teachings, and grieving over his baby's grave, until he sought out a little one to train in his place; but there was one grave in our lot over which he brooded with a bitter sorrow—"Brother Willie"—the youngest boy, that mother had left in John's care. We never knew he had taken to drinking (we all trusted him so) until one night he was shot in a drunken fight, in the back room of the grocery at the Corners, and we all felt heartbroken; fairly crushed by the disgrace of it as well as the agony of losing Willie, the baby of us all.

It seemed only a little while since mother had wound his long, yellow curls around her fingers and said: "Willie will take care of mother when she is old." And now they lay side by side in our lot.

Working over Willie's grave John had thought it all out, how other mothers' boys had been led to ruin, swiftly or slowly at the grocery and at the new saloon at the Corners. Above those graves he had vowed again and again to drive out the cruel enemy from the Corners. How he did it (with the help of the new preacher and our union) the whole township knows.

So I often wonder if, in other village grave-yards and neglected country burying grounds, the yearly preparation for Memorial Day—which teaches patriotism to the young and revives love of country in the hearts of the old—also awakens in other Johns' minds thoughts that bloom and bear fruit of blessed deeds, such as those of my brother John—John Parsons. I make it my home with him, being an old maid.

TRUE UNDER STRESS.

BY MARY E. ALLBRIGHT.

"I am actually too busy to be good!" exclaimed a conscientious little woman despairingly to a confidential friend. "Not just industriously, methodically busy, but driven, overwhelmed, rushed to death. Circumstances are too much for me, and I've lost command of the situation. So I feel worried and unhappy and wicked most of the time."

The experience of this mother, the center, and almost the slave, of a flock of little children, is duplicated by most of us at some period or other. There are days, and sometimes weeks, of stress, when "everything comes at once" and the ordinary burdens of our lives are augmented almost to absurdity.

Woman meets this condition of things at house-cleaning time, with bad weather, poor help and a thin pocketbook, or maybe in a siege of scarlet fever, with days and nights of wear and watching. Perhaps she has been drawn beyond her strength into church or charitable work, and suddenly finds herself in the meshes of a network of outside interests and cares. Or, if she chance to be a public school-teacher, with her "field of action" a crowded roomful of restless boys and girls, she has the condition to meet in its chronic and most aggravated form.

"The times which try men's souls" usually come to them in the line of their business or profession. Financial stringency, competition, hard times are only different forms of stress which result in much strain of body and wear and tear of nerve and brain. Epidemics come to the doctors, exciting cases to the lawyers, and times of special interest and work to the ministers, and "every man" certainly has "his own burden," however well or ill he bears it. Even the children reach their difficult places, and earlier sometimes than we think suffer from this kind of pressure.

"Fred, you look pale," said a mother to her boy one evening. "You'd better go right to bed. I'm afraid you are sick."

"No, I'm not," answered Fred, forlornly, tossing his Latin grammar into a corner preparatory to climbing the stairs. "I'm not sick a particle—it's my griefs!" The boy had been through a day of stress, and he felt it.

"Sarah, I wish you would try to be a little more pleasant!" a lady exclaimed in irritation to her kitchen girl. "There's nothing so disagreeable to me as the sulks."

Sarah burst into tears. "I wasn't sulky," she protested, "but we all has our ups and downs."

Ah, yes! there it is. We do have our ups and downs, and sometimes the "downs" seem to predominate to an amazing extent.

There is nothing more trying to one who is sincerely earnest than the sense of defeat which is sure to follow one of these periods of stress. Flesh and blood—and nerves—have been unequal to the strain, and in some moment of utter exasperation have given away. The poor tired soul has "gone all to pieces," and the faithful, patient life and self-restraint of weeks before, perhaps, seems neutralized by the outburst. The valley of humiliation lies just here, and Apollyon is ready to meet one, strong on his own territory. The temptation is to lose patience with self and faith in God, and utterly to give up the fight. How shall we be saved from yielding?

One great secret of strength in these trying times is plan and preparation for them. Too often we are taken by surprise, as "if some strange thing had happened unto us." We must take such experiences into the account. We are so likely to make out a schedule or model of Christian living, in which all shall be smooth and orderly, and work to it. We formulate theories and try to live them out, having no patience with irregularities or hindrances. Just this was the motive of the old monks when they "fled the tumultuousness of this world" and hid themselves in caves and monasteries. But we of later days have learned better than to shirk responsibility by running away from it. We are here to meet the storm in whatever way it breaks. And that it will storm at times we can be sure from history and our own observation. Then "forewarned" should be "forearmed."

Another safeguard against defeat is a proper estimate of the relative importance of things. Some way, in our planning and calculations we are so likely to get things all out of proportion. If we could remember, for instance, that a sweet temper is more desirable than a house in perfect order, or that a sympathizing heart often counts more for good in the world than a capable head, we might suffer from less friction and subsequent mourning.

Then there is the wise little admonition uttered so long ago, "Fret not thyself." Think of it! There was fretting even in those slow, quiet times of the early days, when life was simple and the pulses beat evenly. How much more in the whirl of 1894! Then, when the next rough place comes and "the ends of the earth" seem to be upon us, let us decide at least not to fret ourselves, but keep our heads as cool and our hearts as patient as possible.

And, last of all, better than all our philosophy and expedients, is a single unfailing remedy. Was not Paul thinking of stress and emergency when he wrote the four words: "Continuing instant in prayer?" If we could only take this motto literally and live by it practically, we would never be overcome by the troublous times. No matter how great the crisis or sudden the onslaught, we would be on guard and ready. And whatever the stress or the extremity, the answering help would fully avail, for the Lord himself has said, and is willing to prove it, "My grace is sufficient for thee."—The Congregationalist.

"MODEL" PLANS FROM A STATE PRESIDENT.*

"Our county conventions begin next week and there I find my new workers for our summer meetings. I am looking for the 'coming woman' as you have taught us, so that besides developing new members we show to the public that we have more than one clique of workers, and attract audiences by the novelty of new faces and voices. Next week, too, Mrs. —— comes for a month to begin a series of engagements in our state. Dr. —— also comes this month, and I am having a different woman make up the appointments for each speaker, as it works so well, and gives each an acquaintance with state workers and the localities they represent. We arrange one set of speakers to include our spring meetings and another for summer and others for autumn and winter, giving so much for so many successive appointments. In that way the unions get reduced rates, and the speakers receive more money with less worry by travel, irregular meals, printing testimonials, etc.

"Recently I addressed a Sabbath-school and a meeting in the W. C. T. U. Hall, and we sent congratulations from our seven thousand to the brave General of the Pine Tree state. My mission is oftener to the unions with empty treasuries, who could not otherwise have any parlor meetings or public gatherings, but when started they move along grandly.

"Our Y's are really in a prosperous condition, and at one of their meetings lately I was delighted with the arrangements. The program of the committee plans for two meetings ahead, then this committee is replaced by another; the proceeds from a recent musical were voted for scientific temperance work. Gleanings from Oak and Ivy Leaf were read by one member; two vocal solos were rendered; a spicy paper on Prohibition given, etc. As Sunday was Temperance Lesson Day one teacher asked if the other teachers would tell how they intended to give the lesson; then a committee of five was appointed to consider what this Y could do for temperance with the factory girls in ——. Our state is trying to make this a grand year."

HOW PATTY BECAME A PEACE-MAKER.

BY HELEN SOMERVILLE.

They were very great friends, grandfather and little Patty. Grandfather was getting old, and he had to lean more heavily on his cane than he did ten years ago, and his hair—what there was of it—was perfectly white, while his eyes, once so bright, were now growing dim with age.

Patty was a tiny creature, with eyes as blue as violets, and hair, which in the sunlight, was just the color of gold.

The two were sitting in their favorite resting-place, the large arm-chair, the child nestling in her grandfather's arms and talking rapidly, while he listened with closed eyes and a pleased smile. He loved to listen to Patty's prattle.

"Grandfather, it was so lovely! I wish we could have Children's Day every Sunday! The flowers were so beautiful, and the birds sang, and everybody looked so happy! Our Dick sang just as if he was at home, and another bird just opposite talked back to him. I just know what they were saying. Dick said, 'Well, my friend, don't you think we ought to be very happy to be in such a place as this? Don't you think the Lord is very good to make this world such a bright, beautiful place?' And the other bird answered, 'Yes, indeed, Dick, let us sing, 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow.' But, grandfather," and the merry voice softened down, while a troubled expression came into the happy face, "I was so sorry about one thing. When Miss Eaton's class got up to give their texts, there was cousin Fanny in such a faded old calico dress, and it was so short for her! I saw the other girls laughing at her, and I felt so 'shamed of them, and wanted to go right up to her and kiss her. Grandfather, you are so good to me, and give me everything, but never let me speak of Uncle Ned's family. You know I've wanted to ask you about it, and you always make me stop."

Patty looked up into the dear, wrinkled face, and saw that the smile had disappeared, while a harsh, forbidding expression had taken its place. Winding her arms about his neck she whispered:

"Grandfather, I love you very much, and don't want to make you angry. But dear, dear grandfather, you are so kind to me always that—that—oh, grandfather! I'll be willing to share some of your—your kindness with cousin Fanny!" And she ended up with a storm of sobs.

Grandfather soothed and comforted her with soft words and loving caresses.

"You must not worry about these things, darling. You are your grandfather's joy and sunshine, that should be enough for you."

"But won't you tell me why I must not have anything to do with Uncle Ned's family?" persisted the child, gently patting his hand with her tiny one.

"Well, child, I'll tell you a little of the disgraceful story, though it isn't what a child should hear. Your Uncle Ned was my favorite child, the youngest, and I spoiled him. So when he grew up he was headstrong and willful, and when he was eighteen he ran away from home. I thought I could never forgive him, but when he came back, sick, discouraged and penitent, I received him just as the father in the Bible received his prodigal son."

"Yes, of course, dear grandfather," and Patty looked up with beaming eyes.

"But it didn't last, child. Ned had contracted bad habits, and it was not long till I discovered that he was drinking—just think of that, my precious. You know how grandfather feels about liquor. And Ned went on from bad to worse, and finally I had to send him away."

"What, grandfather!" exclaimed Patty, starting back, and looking in astonishment at the face which always beamed so lovingly into hers. It was now so changed that she was frightened. "You don't mean to say that—that you sent Uncle Ned—away from home!"

"Of course I did. Disobedient, ungrateful son that he was!"

"Oh, dear, oh! How dreadful! Poor, poor Uncle Ned! But when did he come back?"

"He has never come back. He knew I would not receive him!"

Patty burst into tears, and it was long before she would be pacified. When she had calmed down a little, she said in a trembling voice, "Oh, grandfather, how could you? How could you? And you say yourself that you spoiled him. Then poor Uncle Ned wasn't to blame at all!"

Grandfather looked a little surprised at this, as if a new idea had struck him. Before he could reply, Patty added:

"Besides, grandfather, think of the verse I had to-day; Mr. Nelson explained it to us. 'If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.' Oh, grandfather, what an awful thing to think of, that the Lord cannot forgive us, because we do not forgive others. What if something should happen! Suppose the Lord should call you up to heaven to-night, and you had not forgiven Uncle Ned! How dreadful it would be!"

Just then Aunt Sarah came into the library, saying, "Tea is ready." They went out to the table, but neither grandfather nor Patty could eat much. "What is the matter?" asked Aunt Sarah. "Don't you like your strawberries, Patty?"

"Yes, aunty, they're all right," answered Patty, listlessly.

After tea they went to the library for prayers. Grandfather seemed nervous and out of sorts, and his hand trembled as he turned over the leaves of the Bible. The chapter for the evening contained the verse, "Let not the sun go down upon thy wrath."

Patty listened with feverish eagerness. They then knelt to pray, and the old gentleman's voice shook. Aunt Sarah, who knew nothing of the conversation between her father and little niece, listened and wondered as he prayed that they might be enabled to forgive others as they hoped to be forgiven.

And then they joined in repeating that prayer of prayers, "Our Father, who art in heaven." As they reached the petition, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those that trespass against us," grandfather broke down completely, and burying his face on the arm of his chair, gave way to such a storm of tears as men do not often shed. They arose from their knees, and little Patty, gliding to his side, said simply:

"God heard us, grandfather, I know He did. I felt it."

Grim Aunt Sarah, holding her handkerchief to her eyes, left the room, and the child followed her. An hour passed, and the church bells rang for evening service, but there was no sound from the library. Another hour went by, and finally the door opened and grandfather came out. Walking up to Aunt Sarah, he said, in a voice which, low as it was, was tremulous with feeling:

"Sarah, I've come to tell you that my mind is made up. I have been an obstinate, sinful old man all these years, but the Lord helping me, I mean to be different. I have made my peace with God, now I mean to make it with my son."

"The Lord be praised!" exclaimed Aunt Sarah.

"Come, Patty," said her grandfather, "you must go with me." They went out together, hand in hand, into the summer night, the feeble old man and the fair-haired child, and down one street after another they went till they reached a humble little house on the edge of the town.

"The Lord help me!" exclaimed grandfather, leaning on the gatepost. Slowly they went up the garden path.

"I smell southern-wood, something that Ned always used to like," said the old gentleman as he knocked at the door. From an inner room came Fanny, carrying a light. When she saw the visitors she looked her wonder. "Is your father in, child?" asked grandfather, huskily.

"Yes, sir," answered Fanny, leading the way through the shabby little parlor to the room beyond, where two children were sitting at the table looking at pictures, while the mother rocked the baby, humming a sad little tune as she did so.

"Isn't papa here?" asked Fanny. In response to her question her father came in from the kitchen, a delicate looking man, with a dejected air. He looked in amazement at his father, and rubbed his eyes to be sure they did not deceive him.

"Ned, my boy!" exclaimed his father, stepping forward and extending his hand. But the son stood erect, saying proudly, "No, sir, I cannot take your hand!"

"What, Ned, my son! Will you not speak to your obstinate old father, who comes asking you to forgive him for his undue anger?"

The son still stood proudly erect, his eyes flashing, his whole attitude expressing the bitterness of his feelings. Then little Patty stepped forward, and putting her tiny hand on that of her uncle, looked up fearlessly, saying, "Oh, yes, you will, Uncle Ned. Of course, you will. Grandfather is very old, you know, and has lived a very long time, and one of these days God will call him home to heaven. He thinks that he was too hard on you when you were a boy, and wants to show you how sorry he feels. Uncle Ned, if you think you have something against grandfather you must forgive him—you must, indeed. 'If ye forgive not men their trespasses neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.'"

Then closing her eyes and clasping her little hands, the child said: "Dear Lord, help my grandfather, that he may forgive Uncle Ned, and help Uncle Ned to love my dear grandfather. 'Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us.' For Jesus' sake."

Uncle Ned took a quick step forward, and taking hold of his father's hand with a warm grasp, exclaimed: "Father! Let us forget the past and begin anew, and may the Lord forever bless our dear little peace-maker."

And Grandfather added, solemnly, "Amen!"

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I fancy all our Cozy Cornerers are Sunday-school girls and boys as well, and that you all enjoyed as I did, the splendid lesson of last Sabbath about the childhood of Moses. No matter how often during your youth and after you are grown, you may hear this fascinating story it will always be like a beautiful kaleidoscope turning new sides and delighting your thought.

After all, the boyhood of Moses was not so strange when we think of it as God's plan for him,—that God was preparing him for a great service and getting him ready to rule over the people of Israel and lead them out of slavery. Later history has many such incidents. Lives of great men are all prepared and they are made ready for their work.

So it is in every-day life with each one. We must be getting ready for our life work, and no one is too young to have some thought and desire about what he would like to do and to be. In many ways you can be getting ready. By going to Sabbath-school you are preparing your mind and soul for a higher knowledge of God's commands. By signing the temperance pledge you are getting ready to lead others out of the bondage of wrong into that liberty which helps them to be free. By going to school and studying well your daily lessons, you are preparing to become good citizens. By practicing the virtues of obedience, charity, faithfulness, you are getting ready for a Christian life.

Getting ready might well be our Cozy Corner motto. How would you like it? Your

First be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.—Matt. 4:25.

RECONCILIATION WEEK.

One of the unique features planned by the Salvation Army for the celebration of its General's "Jubilee" is called Reconciliation Week.

General Booth himself says of the idea:

"It is an especial favorite with me. I am not sure whether the idea is original or no. That it should be original seems too much to hope for, as it has been said, upon authority, that "there is nothing new under the sun." Still, I would really like to be the author of the plan. Whether original, however, or not, I like it, and predict for it much usefulness with my own people; and, as many of my poor methods have been so largely imitated outside our borders, I do earnestly hope for the very general adoption of this. May it grow into an annual institution! Why not? Men devote particular periods of the year to fasting and feasting, to commerce and pleasure. They have their Lenten seasons and their carnival festivals. Why should not one week in the year be set apart wherein all the world, or a good portion of it, should strive after the healing of the wounds of love, the return home of penitent prodigals, the renewal of broken friendships, the coming together of separated hearts, the gathering of His wandering children to the fold of the Great Father—a world-wide week of reconciliation?"

Why not, indeed? To us the thought comes as an especial inspiration—one of the many which have marked the Salvation Army from its inception and proven its divine origin.

There is nothing this world needs to-day so much as a week of genuine "reconciliation"—reconciliation first between God and man, and then reconciliation between man and man, as children of God.

There is nothing so needed among Christians as this same blessed reconciliation. What is hindering the work of Christ? What is hindering the upbuilding of His kingdom upon earth? Not so much the machinations of His foes as the differings of His friends.

Only God can know how many gracious revivals have been checked because two prominent church members refused to be reconciled, or because of some miserable neighborhood feud, kept alive through months and years to pour out its poisonous tide of bickerings, jealousies and cruel words, to the death of all higher forms of life.

Only God can know how His work on earth has been prevented by the coolnesses, the misunderstandings, the half jealousies, soon to become full grown, which Christians have allowed to creep into their hearts, all imperceptibly at first, but which have speedily become like the deadly Upas tree,—casting a shadow of poison and blight.

There is nothing which can work such devastation in the home as this spirit of unforgivingness;—the spirit which nurses injuries, which tears open wounds, which feeds upon rancor, and takes a half-insane delight in torturing itself with the remembrance of grievances. The home of the drunkard is not more foreign to the true home ideal than is one dominated by this cruel form of selfhood.

It is strange that, when God's word speaks so unmistakably upon this subject there should be such dullness of apprehension on the part of His children. A man who is a drunkard is cut off from church fellowship if he persists in drunkenness, but a man who refuses to forgive an injury may be a consistent (?) church member down to his death. And yet "No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of heaven" does not stand out more clearly from the pages of the Bible than does "If you forgive not men their trespasses neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God" is not more unmistakably a divine command than was the Master's "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another"; while John adds the awful conclusion—awful with the irresistible logic of one who had loved much, and, therefore, saw with clear vision, "If a man say I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?"

That is the question in a nutshell. How can he? It is no arbitrary command on the part of God which makes His own love and the knowledge of His forgiveness depend upon our own forgiveness and love towards others. It is merely the statement of an immutable law. The soul which cherishes hate cannot know love. God himself cannot make that possible. Just as the human voice can make itself heard over the telephone wire only when the connection is open at each end, so God's voice, speaking peace to man's soul, sounds against deaf ears if that soul is nourishing "anger, and wrath and all uncharitableness" against any other human being. Hate closes the communication between God and man more quickly than does any other form of sin.

Do we not all know this from our own experience? The day upon which we have let a bitterness, be it never so small, creep into our hearts, has been a day when we could not "read our titles clear"—that is, if we were honest with our own souls. Some one has said, "The beginning of an aversion is hell." No truer sentence was ever penned. How could it be otherwise? If God is love—then hell, which is separation from God, must be the opposite of love—or hate.

In Olive Schreiner's wonderful dream of heaven and hell she has brought out this fact more clearly than anything we know in literature except the Gospel and the epistles of St. John. The whole atmosphere of her hell is permeated with hate—it is that which makes it hell, for it is a "fair country," as beautiful to the outward eye as heaven; but when she had entered heaven there came running towards her one of its citizens, and it was straightway as if they had been born of one mother, and had played together through all their childhood. And when she went with this discovery to God, He said, "All people feel like that when one comes towards them in heaven."

And heaven must be a state before it can be a place! and only love towards each human being can make a heaven! God help us, but how are we convicted of sin before this indisputable fact!

Then welcome "Reconciliation Week"! Let the W. C. T. U. adopt it, beginning first in the heart of each individual member of each local union; reaching out through families, through neighborhoods, through states, through the nation and the world, until every slight, real or imaginary, shall be forgotten, every feud buried, every wound healed, and until in the might of that love which "is not provoked," which "beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things," a love which "never faileth," we shall move forward gloriously in our work of reconciling the world to God—to God-methods and God-purposes in society.

ANNUAL ADDRESS OF OUR BRITISH LEADER.

The British Women's Temperance Association has great cause for rejoicing in the marvelous growth of membership during the past year. Yet, indeed, it is marvelous only in the light of the gloomy prognostications made by the dissenting members a year ago, for with such a gifted and consecrated leader as Lady Henry Somerset, untrammeled in her broadening plans for the association, how could anything but growth and power result!

Her annual address before the recent convention, or council, as our British sisters prefer, is so replete with gems of thought and plans for the future, as well as a record of work and general survey of the field that we are convinced that our readers could not find more profitable matter for reflection and adoption, hence, we here produce as many passages as our space will admit. And, first of all, since our editor-in-chief is not here to object, we will quote entire the passage headed

THE PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD'S W. C. T. U.

Last year, at our annual council meeting, we had the joy of welcoming one who has now summered and wintered with us, till we had well-nigh forgotten she is a guest, and have claimed her as one of our own household, as indeed she is in the true sense of the word. I mean the President of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Miss Frances E. Willard. Forever let it be remembered in all nations that the modern temperance movement found in her its most fearless advocate; the wider outlook its foremost champion; and the "do-every-policy" its author and chief exponent. Her great achievements, her prowess in the cause, won our respect and admiration as we greeted her when first she came to us; her unfailing devotion to our association, her unselfish work, her loyalty to our aims and objects, her gentleness, and her sweet, winning ways, have forged a closer chain, and we now love her not for her work alone, but for all she is and has been to us as friend and comrade through these past months. The white ribbon women of England are as loyal to the president of the international society as are their sisters across the water, and we can never forget the services she rendered us when, in spite of ill-health and suffering last year, she spoke at many great gatherings until medical advice obliged her to leave the platform. Since that time she has worked with brain and pen with ready interest and ceaseless activity. Our deepest love and gratitude go with her, and we feel that we are bound to those whom the great ocean separates with a tie that neither time nor space can dim, for their leader has done more to unify the women of England and America than the Atlantic cables that coil their lengths beneath the tossing billows or the ocean greyhounds that bear us swiftly from shore to shore; and we would assure her that many eyes will look westward to watch for her return, and that many hands will clasp hers in tender welcome when once more she lands on English soil. For no ambassador from the great New World has ever brought so true a message of peace and of good-will, and none has done more to break down the barriers that have existed between nations, classes and creeds. We bid Miss Willard tell her comrades on the other side, that if her work among them has been suspended for a little while, her work for the world has deepened and broadened, and that in the last two years she has built up in the mother country an edifice worthy the great world's cause which she so nobly represents. For my part, I think that women's hearts are tenderer, and the cause seems nobler, the difficulties easier to bear, the hardships more worth enduring, since she has been one with us.

The prominent position immediately following the introductory paragraphs is assigned to

OUR YOUNG WOMEN.

Under this head Lady Henry Somerset says: "Nothing is more encouraging to us than the progress made this year by the Y Branches. Miss Alys Pearsall Smith, who has undertaken the general secretaryship of Y work, has done splendid service. In May last we numbered twenty Y Branches; this year we can record a total of forty-six. The leadership of the young women is a most important office, and the devotion and whole-hearted enthusiasm brought to it by our young comrade augurs well for the future of our association. One by one we must drop out from the ranks; indeed, even now as we march we know that the sun of eternity shines in our faces; the burden feels heavier than it did of yore, the willing limbs are wearier and the spring of youth is no longer what it was; but our hearts beat with gladness as we catch the sound of the quick step of the recruiting ranks that are gathering to fill our places, and each bright young face and winsome voice and springing step seem to give new hope to our hearts and new impulse to our energy and zeal. . . . It is time for the mothers to reconsider their daughters' responsibilities and to give them a glad and willing co-operation in all work and aim that shall broaden and deepen the best influences of their lives."

"MY YEAR'S REPORT"

is a modest statement of meetings addressed and conferences held—one hundred and forty-two in all—and a simple description of how she "earned" four hundred and seventy pounds for the association, which was by means of public addresses in support of the Direct Veto Bill, under the auspices of the United Kingdom Alliance. She is happy to state that "every engagement that was canceled by my being obliged to leave for America has now been fulfilled" and adds "best of all we are entirely out of debt."

It is a trial to be obliged to skip the valuable divisions entitled "A Retrospect," where the temperance movement in the United States is charmingly condensed to nutshell compass, and the "Rationale of the Temperance Reform" in which "the voice of science, public spirit and the Golden Rule" are made to testify to the reasonableness of total abstinence.

As we hasten on through the important legislative, political and social methods that have been and are to be employed, we come to the educational division, and are not surprised to find our scientific temperance instruction department and its National and World's superintendent, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, warmly indorsed, and this declaration made: "I have every confidence that Great Britain will yet require specific teaching on these subjects throughout its school system."

The indispensable adjunct, "juvenile work," is treated exhaustively and with great wisdom. While supporting the present system of Bands of Hope, which are not directly in charge of the British temperance women, Lady Henry says:

So long as the white ribbon women (it warms our hearts mightily to know that our favorite appellation is now adopted by our British sisters.—Eds.) in England have no juvenile work under their care, they are out of line with the great world movement, and have failed to carry into effect its spirit and method in one of its most important and characteristic departments. It is my earnest hope that the children who signed their names to well-nigh fifty thousand pledge cards that we sent to the World's Fair, and who are now contributing to place the cup of cold water fountain on some thirsty London street as a memorial of their mothers' loyalty to total abstinence, may form the nucleus for such a "cold water army" as England has never seen, and in which the best methods of work, gleaned by a world-wide observation, may be introduced. It is a dear hope of mine that in this association of children, auxiliary to our own, there shall be no distinction of creed or class, but that we may contribute our share to break down those well-nigh adamantine walls of caste that, separating good people into clans so that the good do not present a united front against the evil, have become the greatest curse of England. . . I should like to have the new society called the Loyal Temperance Legion, a name which is now loved in every Christian land where the white ribbon has made for itself a home in the hearts of the people. All things are now ready for such a movement; the plan of organization and instruction, the literature, the songs, the badges, are the most attractive that devotion and experience have been able to contrive. Let us enter in and possess the land! We are able to do it—we are willing—and this annual meeting sending out its clear keynote shall hear the swift response of "the little feet, the little feet a-coming" throughout the United Kingdom, and some day throughout the great Empire itself.

As a result of this earnest plea, the department of Loyal Temperance Legions was created, the resolution being carried unanimously. Thus Miss Gordon's province as World's superintendent of juvenile work is greatly extended and strengthened.

Among the general recommendations, we insert this one as most interesting to our readers:

I wish that every local branch would subscribe for a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL, published at the Woman's Temple, Chicago, the organ of the World's W. C. T. U. This paper is now in its twentieth volume and is a mirror of the widening work of our comrades in all countries.

The closing paragraph of this splendid address is such a fitting finale to the whole that we give it in its entirety:

A MESSAGE FROM THE WHITE CITY.

One summer evening not long since, tens of thousands were gathered in the White City by the great lake and greater prairies, and from the wide heavens of the West, the shining stars spoke to all hearts of immortality. Bands of music played the national airs of different lands and were applauded according to the nationality of those who listened, but at last, another and a more tender strain melted upon the air; it was that song worthy to be called the national hymn of the immortals, and native to the intuitions of every human heart, "Nearer, my God, to Thee." Until now, the people had but listened, but as by a heavenly impulse, that mighty throng broke forth into this anthem of man's holiest hope and aspiration; till now they had been patriots of their respective earthly countries, but they became citizens who sought a country "which is an heavenly." "Nearer, my God, to Thee," is the universal hymn—the chorus that rings out at this hour in every nation, while

"We hear with groans and travail cries,
The world confess its sin."

The incense fires that belt the earth are but the waving torches of the singers; man's deep tones, woman's aspiring note, and childhood's fresh young voice unite in every zone to sing "Nearer, my God, to Thee." Oh, may we each and all learn to breathe out these holy strains, not with our lips alone, but in our lives!

STRONG WORDS FOR PROHIBITION PAPERS.

Chairman Dickie, of the Prohibition National Committee, has issued a strong manifesto for Prohibition papers. His own words are as follows, and cannot be well abbreviated:

"You ought to take and read a Prohibition paper:

"1. For your own good and the good of your family. You probably subscribe for an anti-prohibition daily because you must have the news. You need an antidote. You ought to have at least one paper to advocate your own views, give you information from the field of action, and keep you in touch with your fellow-workers. He must be a rare man who can stand against the sophistries of the average daily without the bracing influence of a paper sound on the great progressive movements of the day.

"2. For the sake of the publishers. No men are doing so much work and rendering so important a service for such meager compensation as are the publishers and editors of our Prohibition papers. Many of them are compelled to practice the severest economy, and to labor at a great disadvantage because of limited support. Advertisers frequently boycott them. As a matter of conscience, they refuse to admit a class of objectionable advertisements commonly seen in other papers. They toil early and late amid discouragements that would dismay less heroic souls. They expect the opposition of their political enemies; they ought not to be required to suffer the indifference and neglect of their friends. To pass them by and subscribe for the opposition papers is to paralyze our most efficient allies and give aid and comfort to the enemy. The devoted labors of the men and women who furnish this branch of service merit a better recognition than they receive.

"3. For the sake of the party, most of all. Weak papers do us but little good. We can make them all strong. Every paper that succumbs works us injury. We can save them all if we will. Without depreciating any other line of work, it is not too much to say that no other service rendered the Prohibition party is comparable in value with the service rendered by our press. It ought to receive our loyal and liberal support.

"But, after all, this exhortation will be of little avail unless you pass it along. You who read it are already subscribers to one or more papers. May I not ask every one of you for a half-hour's service? Will you not select some friend—a Prohibition friend who does not take a Prohibition paper? They are unfortunately not difficult to find. Having selected your man will you not call upon him? If necessary, spend an evening with him. Lay siege to him. Take this exhortation along. Show him his duty. Press your case. Take his subscription, collect his dollar and forward his name to the paper of his choice. You can do this with ease in one case at least. It is a small service for the individual, but will yield important and enduring results. Will you not try it?"

THE UNION SIGNAL extends a vote of thanks to Mr. Dickie for presenting such admirable points with such clearness and brevity. If this exhortation is observed the coffers of the Prohibition press of the country will know no more emptiness.

THE "COMMONWEAL."

It would be difficult to invent any shade of opinion concerning the army of the commonweal not already expressed by some paper of the country. We have never seen such an amusing diversity of view nor such flatly contradictory opinions concerning any other subject save one, and that is the President's annual message, which is always pronounced everything from good, better, best to bad, worse, worst by the press. Yet in the most of these opinions concerning the commonweal, contradictory as they appear, there is something of truth, just as all four of the travelers were right when they severally asserted that the pot was black, white, red and green. The color depended upon the side from which you viewed it. Without doubt there are tramps and idle vagabonds in this army who do not want work. This portion of the army is unworthy of sympathy or respect and should be sternly dealt with if it attempts violence. It is also probably true that no definite ends will be gained by this movement and that serious results may follow. On the other hand it is also true that very many of the leaders and the participants in the movement are thoroughly honest in their purposes. They are men who through no fault of their own have been out of employment for months. They believe that the nation as a whole must be roused to a realization of the condition of the laborers, and that Congress by the adoption of certain measures can do very much to ameliorate the present hard conditions. They know of no better method to reach these ends than by marching in large numbers and presenting their grievances in person to the national Legislature. It is also beyond question that the army has the sympathy of a large part of the most substantial citizens of the nation, and what is of still greater importance, however mistaken these men may be in their methods, however many worthless vagabonds may join their numbers, they have real grievances; they have suffered intensely and are certain to suffer for some time to come. The movement has a cause so great that we dare not overlook the meanest force that it puts in motion. It is not the part of wisdom for the nation to treat the army of the commonweal with unnecessary harshness. Like all other citizens, its members must of course be held to respect the laws of the land, but any attempt to put them down with an iron heel, to force them, under the specious plea of the good of society in general, to suffer on in silence, to refuse to listen to what they have to say, is a kind of folly which has overthrown despotisms before now and is not safe policy for a free government.

The little innocent letter "u" spoiled such a good story in this column recently that I shall let a kindly critic tell it all over again:

"DEAR ON DUTY:—I cannot allow Ben Tillett's story to go for naught. He said in a temperance meeting in London that 'A jockey had three horses to sell. The middle horse was good but the other two were Gothic steeds in architecture, that is,—bundles of bones. A buyer wanted the middle one but the jockey said, 'You must take the lot, for if the best horse were taken out the other two would tumble over.' The application is that the three great reforms now before the public, the temperance, labor and woman questions, are dependent on the central figure which some would call temperance, others labor, others the woman question, according to their point of view. But this harmless little joke was introduced into THE UNION SIGNAL—very likely through some type-writer's mistake—as 'three houses, two of them Gothic.' How to make such a figure work was evidently beyond the ingenuity of your 'joke reviser' and certainly baffles that of

"THE ORDINARY READER."

A poor old beggar woman in the street was accused by a policeman of having picked up something and concealed it in her basket. She was very much hurt to think that he insisted on her going to the police station, and when called upon to produce what she had taken, she showed a broken bottle and said: "I took it awa' that it might never hurt the bairnies' feet!" But alas, it is not the broken bottle that most endangers the children all about us, and it should be the ministry of the thoughtful and kind to remove from their pathway the legalized temptation of the alcoholic bottle-shop, and this is, in a word, the purpose of the Loyal Temperance Legion.

A mother wished her little boy to go to bed and presented various motives to him for that purpose, but he was reluctant and ingeniously found reasons for sitting up. Whereupon she said: "But you know the little chickens have all gone long ago and you are my little one." "Yes, mother, but when the chickens go to bed the old hen goes along with them," piped up the little fellow. In like manner might the children answer when we insist on total abstinence in them and do not furnish the example.

"If thou canst do anything" were the pathetic words of the father who brought his son to Christ when He came down from the Mount of Transfiguration; and the temperance cause comes to each one of us, saying, "If thou canst do anything."

"Repentance is truth absolutely reigning in the soul"—not an ecclesiastical definition exactly, but one worthy the thoughtful analysis of the truth seeker.

In one of the classic halls which front the broad quadrangle of the Chicago University, the important department of physical science is inculcated in all its branches, nothing being omitted. The visitor entering the handsome marble vestibule is amused to find on the nearest door the surprising label, "Broomology." The hours of recitation are not indicated, though the object lessons of this practical study are suspended in plain view. The attention of our friends of higher education, who advocate the introduction of *home*ology, domesticism and like additions to the college curriculum, is called to this practical departure of Chicago's broad-based educational institution.

The latest news from Pundita Ramabai and her loyal friend and co-worker, Soonderbai Powar, is that they have fifty pupils, which is a larger number than at any previous time. The new building was dedicated on the 12th of March. Mrs. Judith Andrew, of Boston, (a leading member of the Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale's church) is spending some time with the Pundita, helping to develop the interest of the school of which Mrs. Andrew has been the most influential friend in America, where money has been raised by the Ramabai groups of women who agreed to subscribe a certain amount yearly. There is not a purer fountain of influence for every good and holy thing in all India than the Sharada Sadan, the school for high-caste Hindu widows founded by the greatest leader among women that India has produced—Pundita Ramabai.

ON DUTY.

World's W. C. T. U.

AUSTRALASIAN W. C. T. U.

SECOND TRIENNIAL CONVENTION.

The Colonial union of New South Wales was the hostess, so delegates from Victoria, South Australia, Tasmania, Queensland and Western Australia journeyed to Sydney in March.

Wednesday, March 28, was devoted to an all day prayer-meeting to ask God's richest blessing on this momentous gathering of Australasian white ribboners.

Seldom, if ever, has Sydney seen a more glorious spectacle than was witnessed on the following night, when a torchlight procession and temperance demonstration publicly announced our presence in the city. Hundreds of Good Templars, members of kindred organizations and the Salvation Army joined the procession, and the large town hall would hardly accommodate the vast throng. Some amongst us feared for the success of this big venture, but back of it was the wondrous faith which has taken the second W. C. T. U. missionary round the world. Miss Ackermann, Australasian president, received a splendid welcome when she was conducted to the platform by her white-haired friend, Mr. Lucas, the oldest temperance worker in New South Wales. Resolutions relating to the liquor traffic were passed by the meeting.

On Friday morning, March 29th, sixty-nine voting delegates were reported, but many visiting delegates from the different colonies were present, making a total of one hundred and fifty. After the business opening of the convention, the secretary's report and treasurer's balance sheet for the past three years were read and adopted, the treasurer cheering our hearts by announcing a substantial bank balance.

All the departments of work were ably presented during the week by their respective superintendents, and inspiring and instructive papers given on "Police Matrons," "The Press," "What shall we do with our boys?" "School Savings Banks," "Barmaids," "Signs of the Times," "The Ideal Woman," "God's Plan of Finance," "The moral, intellectual and spiritual training of children," "Female Inebriates," "How the union can raise the standard of health and morality," "Women as Wage Earners," and an ably written yet delicately worded one on "The necessity of instructing children in physiology."

During the devotional hour on Thursday morning we drew very near to God and special prayers were asked for guidance and conscientious action. Immediately following came the all important election of officers resulting in majority votes for Mrs. Nicholls, of South Australia, as president; Mrs. E. B. Harris, of Queensland, as honorable secretary; Mrs. Webb, of New South Wales, as honorable treasurer (reëlected). It was agreed to appoint four Australasian organizers, Mrs. Phillips and the Misses Vincent, Cummins and A. Murcutt. On the last afternoon the convention decided to elect Miss Ackermann to the position of honorary president of the Australasian W. C. T. U. as being a slight tribute of our appreciation of her manifold services as our first president.

A number of strong resolutions, dealing with gambling, the liquor traffic, scientific instruction, besides tributes to our World's president, the World's missionaries and others, were adopted, and a comprehensive plan of work, including suggestions for a week of special effort, for an intercolonial white-ribbon paper in the near future, and for more aggressive work in all departments, was presented and met with approval.

Invitations from Adelaide and Brisbane were extended for the next triennial, but by vote of the convention (the by-law dealing with this having been altered), it was decided to meet in Brisbane, Queensland, in 1897.

The women's object lesson on the opening night was almost, if not quite, eclipsed by a splendid procession of children, eight or nine thousand strong, marching through the principal streets of the city on Saturday afternoon to the town hall, where a program of sweet music, interspersed by two addresses, was presented. Most enthusiastic was the reception given to Miss Ackermann. The immense concourse of people rose, and the children waved their flags and cheered. The scene was very picturesque and inspiring, and conspicuous amongst the banners, etc., were three or four tiny American flags. Miss Ackermann presented two girls with Demorest gold medals, and a telegram was sent from the children to Miss Lucas, whose health had given away and to whose efforts the success of the gathering was mainly due.

A crowded house greeted the Y's on Monday night and the audience was rewarded by bright and telling addresses, good music and the "Congress of Nations." Short printed appeals for membership were scattered about and several of these were signed and handed in at the close of the meeting. The Y's had a helpful conference for two hours on Tuesday afternoon when papers were read and considerable impetus given to the work.

To help the convention expenses, Miss Ackermann gave a most interesting lecture on the World's Fair. So delightful was the recital that we felt the time passed all too quickly.

One evening was devoted to "Womanhood Suffrage" and another to an anti-opium demonstration, when Miss Ackermann gave a stirring and heart-thrilling address, and a resolution pertaining to the traffic in opium was moved by Mr. Quong Tart, a Chinese philanthropist of this city, and carried unanimously. Two Chinese choirs sang sacred selections and our hearts glowed at the sight of these "brothers in Christ Jesus." The last meeting of the convention was a farewell to the retiring president. Mrs. Nicholls presided, and in spite of the loving tributes paid to Miss Ackermann's work and influence by the various colonial presidents, a feeling of sadness stole over our hearts when we remembered that we were bidding "good-bye" to her, probably never to see her again on earth. Mrs. Nicholls presented her with a small "purse" from some white ribbon friends as a very slight memento of the love and esteem in which she is held.

Lady Winderger, wife of Judge Winderger, and the Rev. F. B. Boyce, a Church of England clergyman, gave most enjoyable garden parties to the delegates, and the Postmaster General, with John Bowes, Esq., M. P., invited the members of the convention to a trip round the world-famed Sydney harbor.

The beautiful decorations at the various meetings were the work of the Y's, who also served tea very daintily on the last evening. Lunch and tea were provided each day by the city and suburban unions.

While singing the closing hymn, "God be with you," hand clasped in hand, our hearts were filled with gratitude to those who had shown us so much kindness and hospitality, but, above all, to the One above who has guided us so unmistakably, whose wondrous peace has filled our hearts, and whose blessing and benediction rested on our convention in a truly marvelous manner.

QUEENSLAND NOTES.

Several of our unions held interesting public meetings, or socials, to raise money for helping the traveling fund of the Queensland delegation to the Australasian convention. Ipswich had a franchise social at which the local president, Mrs. Payne, presided and made an effective speech. The decorations were attractive, the refreshments dainty, and the audience large, and the women were encouraged by the presence of so many of the opposite sex. After an excellent paper and a question-box, which was conducted by the chairman, a vote was taken on the wisdom of extending the franchise to women. The audience was unanimous in thinking that the time had arrived for granting that which we demanded as a right, not a privilege.

Franchise is in the air in our colony, and several leagues have been formed outside the W. C. T. U. No aggressive work in this department has yet been done under union auspices, but our members are reading and educating themselves so that they may be ready when the time comes for action.

A gigantic picnic, under the management of four Brisbane unions, was held on Sunday at the exhibition grounds. The idea first came to Mrs. Howling, of the Central W. C. T. U. She has thought for some time that we do not reach the poorer classes of people, and it seemed to her possible to do so by means of a picnic and temperance meeting in the afternoon. She, alone, collected sufficient provisions for five hundred people. There was a large attendance of mothers, unemployed people and poor children. A very bountiful dinner was provided for all, and toys for the children. Mrs. Brentnall, Colonial president, presided at the meeting, when addresses were given by our organizer and several ministers. The No. 1 L. T. L. supplied some very attractive items on the program. The financial result was most encouraging; fifteen pounds being left with which to buy clothing. Our first district conventions will be in May.

JAPAN'S SECOND W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

I take great pleasure in writing you about the second annual meeting of our National W. C. T. U. The meeting was held on the third of April at Bancho Girls' School. The chair was taken by Mrs. Kaji Yajima. She read the one hundred and twentieth Psalm and sang hymns, and prayer was offered by Mrs. Ushioda. The reports were read and accepted.

Mrs. Kaji Yajima was reëlected president, and other officers were also reëlected and accepted. Mrs. Toyoji Sasaki, of Hokkaido, sent to the meeting a telegram of congratulation for the second annual meeting.

In the afternoon Mr. Tokutomi, the editor of Kokumin Shinbun, gave an interesting address at the chapel of Bancho Girls' School. He spoke upon the subject, women's reform, and emphasized that the workers should have great patience for the movement, though they have so many difficulties, as the world is full of vanity.

Mrs. Yajima wishes you to give some encouragement to Mrs. Sakurai, who was sent by the National W. C. T. U. to Chicago Convention, and we hope that her mission will be very successful. We received a letter from Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell, who are in Shanghai, China. We expect to see them in the first part of May. They will work first in the south at Kobe, Osaka and Kioto; then will come to the north to Tokio by overland train. We have some rain now, but flowers also. The air is pure, and the weather delightful.

THE students of the Methodist Polytechnic college, Fort Worth, Texas, by a unanimous vote indorsed the World's Petition which was presented to them in April. The signatures of the faculty were also added to our great protest. The wonderful growth and prosperity of this school only in its third year, evidences the fact that it is upon an enduring foundation.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

A FRESH consignment of 160 signatures to the Great Petition comes from Mrs. Hauser, who is now in England en route to America for a rest.

MRS. MARY R. PHILLIPS, wife of Rev. Dr. J. L. Phillips, of the India Sunday-School Union, takes the office of the India W. C. T. U. on the return of Mrs. Hauser to America. Mrs. Phillips is already holding drawing-room meetings in the Punjab, and will bring to the work rare qualities and opportunities.

"REFRESHING Drinks for Hot Weather" is the title of a pamphlet containing seventy recipes collected from many sources—English, American, French, Italian and particularly India—published by Mrs. Hauser and to be obtained for three annas each from her successor, Mrs. Phillips, 136 Dharmtolla St., Calcutta.

EMMA E. PAGE, of Olympia, Wash., although deprived of sight, reports "a very successful year's work in Demorest contests and other W. C. T. U. lines." She incloses some signatures for World's Petition which were misplaced, remarking, "I am glad, indeed, not to lose anything that may add to the strength of that Petition."

THE Temperance Tidings, of Japan, is an excellently conducted sheet and prints in addition to its Japanese matter, its contents and "internal reports" in English, which is a help not to be regretted by the reviewer this side the water. Number three of volume second contains articles upon Neal Dow, the Japanese Silver Wedding, Canadian Temperance News, with editorial and other notes.

MRS. JEANNETTE HAUSER, during her year's incumbency as president of India's W. C. T. U., had the joy of seeing eight new unions added to the National society and the formation of "the India union," now numbering one hundred and ten members, largely through her individual efforts. The lines of work, principally literature distribution and correspondence, have greatly increased, and the India W. C. T. U. will long feel the effect of her devoted services.

HARBOR GRACE, Newfoundland, is a year old union in a no-license district, stanchly standing for prohibition that prohibits. At the fall election they presented pertinent questions to the candidates concerning woman suffrage and prohibition, asking that the support of each would be promised, to which a discouraging silence was given. By literature distribution and public meetings they inculcate temperance sentiment. Their free night school has proved a benefit to people of all classes, creeds and ages, ranging from six to forty.

GOOD news comes from Miss Ackermann. She is to have a testimonial from the generous-hearted people among whom she has worked so faithfully. One man who has reformed has started the subscription with $5,000. That the Australasian triennial convention was a great success is manifested by the report in another column. Miss Ackermann alone wrote six hundred letters in working up the meeting. She was offered a carriage with white horses in which to lead this procession, but she preferred to "keep to de middle o' de road" along with the soldiers of the rank and file.

THE following interesting paragraph is from a letter received from Sin Lan Chang, aged eighteen, treasurer of the Chinkiang, China, L. T. L.: "Last week the Chinkiang L. T. L.'s put their names to a petition to be sent to England to persuade the Queen to abolish the legalized traffic in Indian opium. We hear that this opium war is at its height, and that it is hard telling which side is going to win; we even hear bishops testifying to the harmlessness of opium. We wish they could have been in the room where that petition was being signed. While the L. T. L's were filing in to put down their names there was a tap at the door, and a woman servant came in and begged to be allowed to sign that paper, at the same time recounting the troubles opium had brought to her home; her husband, unable to do anything for himself or family, and wholly dependent on her earnings, $1.50 per month, to keep them fed and clothed. While she was pleading her cause, another white-haired servant came and asked if she might add her name to the list, for she said, 'There are three in my family ruined by opium smoking!' The Queen herself would have been moved by this pathetic scene. The papers in Shanghai favor in the main this traffic, publishing everything that makes for their cause. To this very petition the husband of our temperance society's president does not dare sign his name lest he lose his position, which is under a foreigner. An anomalous position of affairs when a native man pleads his country's cause! Fourteen years ago the father was instrumental in sending a like petition to the Queen to stop the legalization of the opium imports. What wonder there is bitterness felt toward the 'arrogant foreigner'!"

PRESSING FORWARD.

It is an inspiring thing to be state reporter and receive the glowing letters that tell of the "doings" by the unions in city and country, in towns "wet" and towns "dry," and to watch the progress made, and note the zeal and faithfulness that win success under so many varying circumstances. Earnestness and consecration, pluck and energy, characterize the living, growing union, whether great or small. I often wish it were possible to give the letters entire instead of the condensed report.

A "Business Men's Carnival," conducted by the W. C. T. U. and Epworth League of Osceola brought a return of twenty-three dollars for the union. This union had an excellent Crusade anniversary, and besides their regular meetings their plan of work includes a social and reading circle combined held the last Friday of each month. The visit of Miss Bender, state superintendent of physical culture, was very helpful, eighteen charter members joining the club formed.

The South Side Y's of St. Louis invited the Hoffman and La Fayette unions of the same city to unite with them in their interesting Crusade meeting. This union has taken charge of a newly organized L. T. L. Their prayer-meetings at the Bethesda home are now held each week, and a pound party recently had at the home not only furnished needed supplies, but interested new friends in this part of the union's work. This Y meets every Monday, rain or shine, and no wonder they report "interest is growing."

Two reports come of splendid mass-meetings of children on the afternoon of temperance lesson Sunday, March 18, one at Appleton City, the other at Lee's Summit. These meetings, with the program by all the Sunday-schools combined, were very impressive and greatly enjoyed. The collection of three dollars and seventy-five cents was given at Lee's Summit to help this department of work. The Delsarte club of Appleton City is doing good work with about twenty-five members. The union lately gave a social tea, specially inviting the pastors and editors of the town, with their wives.

Palmyra union, having worked steadily along several lines, finds the bitter prejudice it at first met now giving way, and the cause gaining friends and favor. They edit a column in their paper, supply literature to the jail, place it in farm wagons, do some flower mission work, and once in six weeks have a parlor reception, besides their regular meetings which are well attended.

Local elections have given some unions an opportunity to help the right side. Adrian is rejoicing over the largest temperance vote ever polled there, and is ready and waiting to "try again." Very interesting mothers' meetings are held by this union.

By way of public meetings the Neosho union has lately had an address by Col. Geo. W. Bain, a Neal Dow celebration and a silver medal contest. They are now preparing for the district convention. Three public meetings have been held by the Ashburn union since its organization six months ago, the ministers helping right royally, and the one saloon of the place has been closed by the circulating of a remonstrance against renewing the license, for which they thank God. Temperance literature is diligently used and freely distributed, and the union membership has greatly increased.

At Stanberry, the lecture by Mrs. Cranmer was followed by a week's course of meetings by Messrs. Stone and Folsom, who used views to illustrate the truths presented, and later Brother Frank Griffin, of Maryville, gave a very earnest, fearless lecture, which was attended by men for many miles around, even the saloon-keeper being seen to enter the church. At every meeting the union gained new members, and three hundred signed the pledge. The L. T. L. here is earnest and growing, and meets every Saturday. The tobacco subject has special meetings devoted to it. This town also had a "dry" election.

A temperance school board has been elected at Ritchey, where a vigorous union has doubled its membership in the past year. A grand rally by this union and the prohibition club celebrated Neal Dow's birthday. A basket social also in March was a pleasant affair, and helped fill the treasury.

Mr. H. P. Faris, of Clinton, the well-known leader of the Anti-Saloon Army, gave a stirring address at the Neal Dow celebration, held by the union at Holden. His subject was "The Duty of the Christian Citizen in the Temperance Cause." Members of the union took other parts on the program.

A number of places are holding contests, intending to continue until they shall have a gold medal as the fruit of their own efforts. Montrose union, newly organized, has had their first one. One at Galloway, with seven boys from fifteen to twenty-one years of age, was a grand success. Three Springfield white-ribboners were the judges. Eight girls at Golden City formed the class for a contest held April 5. Dixon is holding a series of contests, and hoping to send a contestant to the next state convention. This union gained seven members on Crusade day. They each month have a gospel temperance meeting and a social lunch, at both of which new members are constantly gained.

The Total Abstinence society joined with the Cole Camp Y to celebrate Neal Dow Day. The High Creek union distributed fifty Neal Dow UNION SIGNALS, and is doing other effective work with literature. This growing union has had a series of lectures by Mr. Barney. Golden City was cursed with a whisky drugstore, but through the efforts of the union a case was opened against it, temperance gaining the victory, and the "store" is packing up to move.

The Clinton union has doubled its membership since January 1, and now occupies rented headquarters centrally located.

Sedalia Central union made a fine success of her "Living Library Social," twenty-eight impersonated volumes forming the library, and the occasion was both an amusing and remunerative one. A good "librarian," and some appropriate "library rules" helped much to make it interesting. A similar social has also been recently given by the Humansville union.

INDIANA.

A GLIMPSE OVER THE FIELD.

Neal Dow's birthday was celebrated by many unions in our state; among them may be mentioned LaPorte and Moorefield which held silver Demorest medal contests, in honor of the occasion. New Albany celebrated the day on Sunday. Kendallville had an elaborate program in which the ministers took part. New members were added to the union, the result of this meeting.

Kokomo had a large mass-meeting in the M. E. church, under the auspices of the Prohibition club and the W. C. T. U. Five ministers took part in the meeting. The principal address was delivered by Mrs. Esther Pritchard, in which she portrayed the character of Neal Dow, his plan of work, and enumerated many incidents in his eventful life. The L. T. L. sang the song of "The New Revolution." One of the ministers read a letter from Neal Dow which was received thirty-nine years ago. Delaware celebrated the occasion by holding its semi-annual convention.

The time for our semi-annual conventions and schools of methods has arrived. Blackford county's convention was held at Millgrove. The heavy rainfall did not prevent the attendance of our earnest women.

The Hancock county convention reports "thousands of pages of literature distributed, the sick and needy visited and assisted; money raised for the Hadley Home; a saloon driven from Charlottesville; an industrial school established in Greenfield, public meetings held and much personal work done by the earnest women who compose the various unions."

Mrs. Helen M. Gougar was the principal speaker at the convention in Steuben county.

The convention of Howard county was fortunate in securing the assistance of our state vice-president, Mrs. E. L. Calkins.

The unions in New Albany and Goshen have regular gospel temperance services every Sunday.

Logansport union has undertaken to establish a Home for the Friendless, for which the members have accumulated quite a sum in their treasury, and a gentleman has donated a house and lot for the home.

New Castle Y has celebrated the second anniversary of the opening of their reading room.

Our Y superintendent has recently organized Y unions at Lyons and Bloomfield.

The school of methods at Liberty was well attended. Three state officers and six state superintendents took part in the exercises, all of whom were able and experienced workers, which insured success.

Schools of methods have been held in Anderson, Liberty, Franklin, Greensburg, Vevay, Huntingburg, Mt. Vernon, Vincennes and Orleans. Our state officers and superintendents have assisted in these schools which have been very beneficial and were most thoroughly enjoyed. Mrs. Calkins, who assisted in all of the schools, is a fine lecturer, argumentative, eloquent and earnest.

Encouraging reports come from Vevay. They report four medal contests and the superintendent expresses a determination to hold a contest every month while she holds the office.

Moorefield reports two contests.

Our ministers responded to the W. C. T. U. call for sermons on Sabbath observance. It gladdened the hearts of our women to hear them bravely place the censure of desecration upon the church-members, where it belongs.

We will continue
"Sowing in hope till the reapers come Gladly to gather the harvest home."

NORTH CAROLINA.

STATE PRESIDENT RECUPERATING IN CALIFORNIA.

You have not heard from us in a long time, but we are not dead, neither are we sleeping. For three months a state organizer was kept busily at work visiting old unions and organizing new ones. Two miscellaneous organizations were formed, which bid fair to do much good. Neal Dow meetings have been successfully held by several unions.

Charlotte union has been revived with the organization of a Y and Band of Hope, which are doing good work. We hope to hold our state convention there this year. Our loved state president, Mrs. Woody, is now in California recovering from an attack of la grippe. All who know her can understand how great is our loss, even by a temporary absence. She is the steam-tug that has brought us safely through year after year, until we feel helpless without her zeal and enthusiasm. May the dear Father soon restore her to us is the earnest prayer of every white-ribboner.

Our dear Mrs. Gorrell has also been ill with pneumonia. All of us know her as the financial head of our W. C. T. U., making things go when no one else could find any "go" to start with. If we had six such women, the state would be won for prohibition before another year. She is now advisory member of our state executive committee, her niece, Mrs. Weatherby, taking her place as state treasurer.

Our hearts are cheered by the encouraging intelligence that we are soon to have dear Miss Willard with us again. May the dear Father bless work and workers, overshadowing them with His protecting care.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE West End Y. W. C. T. U. of Richmond, Va., has furnished one of the wards in a local hospital in a first-class manner with the latest improved furniture and appliances. The ward was dedicated with impressive ceremonies, May 12.

ONE of the oldest and most esteemed members of the Troy, Ill., W. C. T. U., Mrs. L. B. Stewart, has been called from labor to reward. Such an ardent and faithful worker was she, though eighty years of age, her zeal was undiminished in the cause to which she was devoted. The union passed resolutions in memoriam testifying to her work and worth.

MRS. E. T. SALISBURY, president of the eleventh ward W. C. T. U., of Rochester, N. Y., died recently at her home. Mrs. Salisbury was an indefatigable worker in the church and union, and will be greatly missed, especially in the western part of the city. Mrs. J. A. Copeland, first vice-president, has been elected president for the balance of the year.

COLORADO W. C. T. U., in lieu of a state paper, issues a unique News Letter, of which the necessary numbers of copies is made for distribution, showing what may be accomplished under adverse circumstances and in dearth of means. The news is crisp and fresh, the items concise and helpful, and the news letter will certainly serve the excellent purpose of keeping the local unions in touch with each other.

MISSISSIPPI'S eleventh state convention was held at Canton, May 5 to 8, and was of unusual interest. Mrs. Snell lent her inspiring presence and Mrs. Hoffman's name was a magnet for the Saturday evening meeting. Y evening was varied and entertaining, an address by Miss Kearney being the crowning feature. The beautiful new banner of the state Y. W. C. T. U. was formally presented and won unstinted admiration.

IN these times when unions find it difficult to secure speakers, because of a lack of funds, the plan of a prominent lecturer, Mrs. Marion B. Baxter, is most feasible. Mrs. Baxter accepts engagements at the low charge of five dollars a meeting, when twenty consecutive appointments can be made and the collections be added to the nominal fee. This plan has proved satisfactory both to the speaker and unions engaging her, and really places the burden of supporting temperance teaching where it belongs—on the community, rather than a struggling W. C. T. U. Will other speakers who have adopted this method please report its operation to THE UNION SIGNAL?

An L. T. L. has recently been formed in the mission Sunday-school conducted by the Toledo Y's in one of the roughest parts of the city. One of the classes is composed of girls about fourteen years of age whose mothers are habituês of disreputable houses, and their instruction in this school is their only means of getting ideas of purity and Christianity. Miss Louise Bond, the superintendent of the Sunday-school, is also flower mission superintendent for the Y's and brings to her work a rare consecration and practical ability.

In answer to the question, "How shall the church be reached on the temperance question?" Rev. L. B. Carpenter, Diagonal, Ia., writes: "Let the preachers preach the doctrine of the church, regardless of their bread and butter; absolute prohibition, which is the doctrine of the Bible. Get the church converted to God. Get fathers to see that their boys are worth more than the Republican or Democratic party. Let hot shot go from every pulpit in the United States against the legalizing of the traffic. 'It cannot be legalized without sin.'"

Kennebec county, Me., held a successful convention May 2, at North Vassalboro. Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens gave the earnest preparatory address on the preceding evening, awakening interest in the proceedings of the following day. Mrs. E. U. Burgess was the special guest of the occasion and her lectures on "God and Government" and "War and Intemperance" were worthily commended. Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, World's and National superintendent of peace and arbitration, whose home is in this county, is a mainstay in all its endeavors. Each year she is instrumental in bringing some noted lecturer to the field and sustains the union in all financial difficulties.

The editor of a Kansas City paper which would have its readers believe that the drink traffic is regaining its quondam power in that prohibition state, writes as follows: "The rousing temperance meetings of twelve and fifteen years ago in Kansas, which formed the sentiment that gave Kansas prohibition, are no longer possible, and to a certain extent the temperance enthusiasm of the state has died down. The law has made the people too secure and the need of the blue ribbon and the pledge seems to be thought preposterous. So the rum fiend is slyly insinuating himself into a community from which he was driven with spectacular indignation only a few years ago." Such a writer is willfully blind to the active temperance work being done in the state continually, prominent among which is that of Major and Mrs. Scott, who have recently been holding "rousing meetings" in Sterling, Hutchinson, Walton, Newton, McPherson, Wichita and other places.

Official Communications.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

Beloved Co-workers:—Where timely and diligent effort was made the observance of our Quarterly Temperance Sunday, March 18, was a pronounced success. From various states come tidings of good, even grand results. Says one worker, "I had no idea so much enthusiasm and interest could be created."

That every county and every town in every state shall engage in the observance of our next Quarterly Temperance Sunday, occurring June 17, is, at this moment, our supreme desire for the work. We feel sure the L. T. L. workers will coöperate in this effort, since by concerted action on this line the cause gains a strong forward impulse. To succeed, superintendents will need to begin efforts at once. Our former plan is recommended. Temperance sermons in the morning from the clergymen in their respective pulpits; the temperance lesson in the Sunday-school; young people's societies convening on that day asked to consider a temperance topic or their own topic, temperance-wise; a mass temperance Sunday-school meeting held in the afternoon or evening.

Let each state superintendent correspond with her county or district superintendents and through them with local superintendents or Sunday-schools in reference to this plan. The remarkable results attending the efforts of some of our state superintendents assure us that a whole-hearted consecration of time, means and patience to the development of this plan will win coöperation and success.

Under the guidance of the Holy Spirit let us labor to make this the largest temperance Sunday in our history. A new program is prepared, which will be sent on application. An illustrated diagram, 24x36, entitled "The License Monument," is printed in connection with the program, price ten cents. This diagram may be used for or instead of a blackboard illustration. The meeting should not close without some form of pledge signing.

The Temperance Lesson Leaflet, prepared by Mrs. Rice and published by the W. T. P. A., is of special value to all Sunday-school workers and for general circulation. We owe it a large patronage, and we trust all department workers will do their best for its wide circulation.

Fulfilled prophecy teaches God's use of His own people to work out divine purposes. Firmly believing that the largest loyal use of our department opportunities is the chief means of bringing the church into united activity for Bible temperance,

I am, affectionately yours for toil and triumph,

Julia A. Bidwell, Supt.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

WEST VIRGINIA CONVENTION.

The twelfth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of West Virginia will convene in Wheeling, June 5, 6 and 7. The executive committee will hold its first meeting in W. C. T. U. hall, 1207 Main St., on Monday evening at 7 : 30.

The representation will consist of the general officers, presidents of districts, state superintendents, one delegate-at-large from each organized senatorial district, three delegates from each union, to represent the union, and one for every twenty paying members. Unions will appoint their delegates at once and send their names to Mrs. W. B. Hicks, 69 Sixteenth St., Wheeling, W. Va.

All white-ribboners and friends of our cause are earnestly requested to observe Sunday, June 3, as a day of prayer for God's blessing upon our convention and work for the coming year.

Mrs. Mary Cartwright, Cor. Sec.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

The Salvation Army has been assembled in convention in the city of New York during the past week. Greeting was extended them by telegram from headquarters through Commander Ballington Booth.

Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, Montreal, Can., treasurer World's W. C. T. U., reports the receipt of one hundred dollars from Mr. J. Hale Ramsey, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, who thus becomes the first life patron of the World's union. Are there not friends in our own country who will increase the number of patrons and give to us the "sinews of war" in this our hour of need.

A cheery letter has been received from Mrs. Sakurai, of Japan, who has remained in this country since the World's W. C. T. U. Convention last November. She is now in Pennsylvania speaking both for the W. C. T. U. and in the interest of her school in Japan. A bit of her experience will, I am sure, interest. Desiring to see Miss Bruckhart, a former teacher of her daughter, who returned to America last February because of ill health, she visited Litiby, but was startled to learn that her friend had entered her heavenly home the previous day, and she might look only upon the form from which the spirit had fled.

Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, National organizer, is busily at work. She added two unions in April, and seventy-three members to other unions and held one excellent county convention. She will attend the temperance congress that opened at the Midwinter Fair, May 20, then off to help in other states, having given half the year to her own. She will be glad to have doors of opportunity opened to her in eastern states.

The following startling figures published in the Omaha Bee, of December 20, 1893, are taken from the Internal Revenue Report of that year, thus bearing the seal of the United States government:

Commissioner Miller of the Internal Revenue Bureau, Washington, D. C., says we consumed, in 1893, in the United States 6,000,000,000 glasses of whisky, for which we paid over the bar $600,000,000, or $50,000,000 more than all the annual appropriations of Congress. We consumed over 80,000,000 gallons of whisky, brandy and distilled spirits. This represents a consumption of 100 glasses of whisky each year for every man, woman and child in the United States, or 500 gallons for each male adult. Of beer the figures are equally astounding; the consumption last year was 31,562,345 barrels, costing our inhabitants $617,258,460. The tobacco used was 279,726,092 pounds, and cost us $139,663,036. The annual drink and tobacco bill of the United States is the incomprehensible sum of $1,641,903,460. Every dollar of the circulating medium in the United States goes each year over the bar of the saloon or the counter of the tobacconist.

A recent letter from Mrs. Isabel C. Spurlock, of York, Neb., states that she and her husband have adopted a household of forty children just as their very own. These children attend the public school and are taking high rank both in deportment and scholarship. Mrs. Spurlock writes that, as Miss Willard suggests, the united head of man and woman will do the work better together than one alone, and that they are hoping to help solve the "slum child" problem by taking these children into a fatherly and motherly kinship.

Mrs. Charlton Edholm, author of "The Traffic in Girls," has been in attendance upon the conference of the M. E. church South, at Nashville, Tenn., and has forwarded us the following resolutions adopted there:

1. Resolved, That we urge upon all our members a perpetual memory of the solemn vow that rests upon them to wholly abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors except in cases of necessity.

2. Resolved, That we lay upon the consciences of our preachers the duty of instructing our people concerning the moral turpitude of the liquor traffic and concerning the evils of, and the most moderate use of, intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

Resolution 2d is decidedly equivocal. Does it mean that preachers are to instruct the people how to make "the most moderate use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage?" or there is "moral turpitude in such use?" Alas! "The children of this world are, in their generation, wiser than the children of light," but will Christ's kingdom come until His will is done? The world has a right to demand of the church complete and entire freedom from iniquity and the Lord said: "Up, sanctify the people, and say, sanctify yourselves against tomorrow; for thus saith the Lord God of Israel, There is an accursed thing in the midst of thee, O Israel; thou canst not stand before thine enemies, until ye take away the accursed thing from among you."

Mary A. Woodbridge.

Treasurer's Corner.

Here comes an encouraging letter from a courageous spirit from Nevada, sending one dollar on the ten cent fund: "I think the old adage, 'Better late than never,' holds true, but 'tis better never to be late. As I look over The Union Signal each week and always notice the Treasurer's Corner, I see that the mites are still pouring in, and we, the union at Reno, Nev., wish to add ours to help a little in this your time of need; wish it were twenty times as much. I just long to help in this grand work for God and Home and Native Land. We have but few active members, and we need to be stirred up."

Here is a letter from a good friend in Maine, that surely ought to "belong": "Please find two dimes, one for myself and one for my five-year-old grandson, Howard Frederic Hill, who is an L. T. L. I do not belong to any organized W. C. T. U., but am a white-ribboner at heart and greet with pleasure the weekly visits of The Union Signal to my home, and rejoice in every forward movement for woman and home."

A Pennsylvania Y, Miss N. E. Gooding, sends us a cheery greeting, as follows: "Please find enclosed sixty cents for the National debt. It should have been sent long ere this, but hope the offering, though late in going and small, will be acceptable."

Mrs. Davis, of San Pedro, Cal., sends $2.45 for the use of the National as per Miss Willard's call to be credited to the union.

Another Maine woman sends one dollar for the National in response to Miss Willard's appeal; twenty cents comes from a Pennsylvania woman for self and little daughter; Farmington Y's, N. Y., send another ten cent contribution; Coin, Iowa, $1.30 on same fund; Sumner, Washington, W. C. T. U. sends by its treasurer, $1.10 in answer to Chieftain's call. Brown's Valley, Minn., has not forgotten the call though made some time ago and sends $2 to "help make the wheels go round."

From Indiana we learn that an assessment is levied upon the unions to carry on the work each year, being as given below:

Unions of five members and under	$3.00
" " five to ten	6.00
" " ten to twenty	9.00
" " twenty and upwards	15.00

One-third of said amounts are retained in the county treasury, and two-thirds sent to the state treasury.

We should be very glad to hear from other states as to the methods adopted to secure funds to carry on the work.

PURITY LITERATURE.

A request has come from one of our freedmen's missions, asking where literature on the subject of purity could be gotten, and thinking that, perhaps, many others would be glad to know, I ask for a few lines in your paper through which to give needed information.

The W. C. T. U. found impurity so inevitably connected with the use of intoxicants that the department of purity was among the first divisions of its organized work. They have found that this deadly contagion, incessantly fed by the ever-open saloon, is polluting the life of our country. In their unwearied efforts to rescue the loathsome victims and protect our children and youth, they have learned much of the extent and destructive power of this evil. The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, corner of Monroe and La Salle Streets, The Temple, Chicago, Ills., has a large and varied supply of leaflets, pamphlets and books on this subject. Prompt attention will be given to any who may ask advice, or who send for literature.—E. O. Orr in United Presbyterian.

contains an illustrated description of the

Jennie Casseday Free Infirmary,

By Miss Gertrude Ferguson, National Flower Mission superintendent.

A new picture of the white-ribbon saint is published in this number, which closes the seventh volume of our young woman's paper.

"A Flower Mission Convert" is a charming story by the favorite Y story-writer, Miss Maude Rittenhouse.

Mrs. Barnes' Etching, No. 6, sustains the interest in these life character sketches.

The Parliamentary Drill Exercise, by the editor, is a helpful and practical discussion of a topic showing how to illustrate the varied methods of disposing of a question.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

Conditions of membership in the Hospital Association: Signing of the temperance pledge, payment of $5 membership fee, and $1 annually thereafter.

Needs of the Hospital: Members in its Association; Endowment of beds, contributions of money, blankets, towels, etc. (As quilts cannot be used to good advantage on hospital beds, it is better to sell them at home and to send the money thus received.) Acquaintance with its principles and purposes. Urgent invitation is extended to all interested, and especially to all physicians, to visit the institution and make full inquiries in regard to its workings.

The following official document explains itself:

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL,
1619 Diversey Ave., Chicago, Ill.

To all interested:—Under the unusual circumstances prevailing all over the country at the present time, the National Temperance Hospital, in common with other institutions, needs the unwavering support of its friends. At a meeting of the board of trustees held recently it was decided to make public this need. A brief statement of the condition of affairs is doubtless all that is necessary to bring responses that will enable the hospital to continue to do the temperance work for which it was established, and such a statement is here submitted. Inasmuch as it may meet the eye of some who have no knowledge of our work, we give some items familiar to many of our friends.

The National Temperance Hospital was established to demonstrate the fact that intoxicating liquors are not needed in medicine and that recovery is more rapid and certain when they are not used. The disastrous results of their general use in cases of illness emphasize the importance of this line of temperance work. The success of the hospital up to date has been phenomenal, but its work must be sustained and enlarged in order fully to demonstrate its principles, and it has peculiar claims upon temperance people.

About one-third of its work has been charity work, and the demands in this direction are increasing. It is a serious thing to refuse admittance to the Temperance Hospital to any who may apply for care, and thus make it necessary for them to go where liquors may be given to them. To avoid this, we urgently appeal for generous contributions. The poor and the sick we have with us always, and no more deserving charity can receive our attention. Give. Give generously. Give as the Lord hath prospered you.

Send all contributions to Mrs. Calista E. Bigelow, Treasurer, 539 West Adams street, Chicago.

By order of the board of trustees,
MRS. M. E. KLINE, Pres.
MRS. WATSON THATCHER, Sec.

News reaches the trustees that two good temperance men and one good temperance woman have executed their wills, making generous bequests to the National Temperance Hospital. We are quite confident a large number have done this who have not made the fact known. It would be very gratifying, indeed, if large contributions should be reported as being sent now.

At the last meeting of the Board of Trustees it was determined to make every effort to secure a superintendent of hospital work in every local union. A national superintendent was also chosen—Mrs. M. E. Kline, president, being given that position. She will hold herself in readiness to give any information regarding the help local unions can extend to the hospital and that it can in return render to them, and will also respond to calls to speak in the interests of the hospital. It was decided to work now to secure a building fund of fifty thousand dollars, so as to be able to erect a building exactly suited to hospital needs before the present lease expires; also an endowment fund of fifty thousand dollars, so that the destitute sick can have the care which is provided at this institution. The quarterly meeting of the Board of Trustees will be held on Monday, June 4, and it would be very gratifying if generous pledges to either of these funds could be reported at that time.

The second inmate of the children's room is a little boy from Harvey. Excellent reports are given of him, as also of the first inmate—a little girl. Both of these children have had care and attention as a result of the efforts made by the children of the Loyal Temperance Legion. They are doing much to help and promise more. The benediction, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my little ones, ye did it unto me," "Come, ye blessed," will surely be theirs.

PRESS COMMITTEE.

Our Library Table.

THE MENTOR is as it announces itself "a little book for the guidance of such men and boys as would appear to advantage in the society of persons of the better sort." Its author is Alfred Ayres, another of whose books, "The Orthoepist," was recently reviewed in these columns. It is possible there is a class of people to whom such a book as THE MENTOR would be of some assistance when it is their desire to plunge into that dreaded maelstrom, society, composed of "persons of the better sort," but in this time of broad education, when the son of the millionaire aristocrat sits and walks beside the son of the meanly salaried stone-mason, when "manners" are in the air one breathes and the American principle of equality gives every man a chance,—nay, forces him to know how to carry himself,—the real need for printed rules of decorum is somewhat questioned. However, he who runs may read, if he so desires!

D. Appleton & Co., New York City. $1.

A work that will doubtless receive a wide and eager reading is entitled STEPS INTO JOURNALISM. It is written by Edwin Llewellyn Shuman and is the outgrowth of a course of instruction in journalism, conducted by the author at the Bay View Chautauqua Assembly, Michigan. The two hundred pages of the book are packed solidly with the very cream of things which are so sought to be known by would-be journalists. The general heads of the chapters give the outline of the author's plan: Evolution of the Press; Plan of a Newspaper Article; A Day with a Reporter; Interviewing and News Gathering; Getting a Start as Correspondent; Methods of the Editorial Room; Writing a Special; Women in Newspaper Work; Errors of all Sorts; Magazine and Novel Writing; Mission of the Press. The author says in his preface, "though these pages were written entirely in moments stolen from sleep or recreation, the writer has tried to keep as far from ununjust pessimism as from the still more vicious extreme of sentimental optimism." He has surely touched the golden mean and adorned with delicate sarcasm and bright touches of humor has given to all pen aspirants such light on a much misunderstood vocation, as has long been looked for.

A GREAT MOTHER. Sketches of Madam Willard, by her daughter, Frances E. Willard, and her kinswoman, Minerva Brace Norton. Introduction by Lady Henry Somerset.

Such is the simple, titie-page announcement of a book, which, while it was yet but a beautiful thought in the minds of its writers, had assured for itself a reverently-joyous reception at the hands of thousands the world around. There is ever a native desire in the human mind, a high and worthy curiosity to learn of the environments, the moral, mental and physical home-surroundings of its heroes and heroines. Thus it is that through the heroine of the white ribbon army, the world has come to know and honor the mother, likewise a heroine; for one who was great enough to rear a daughter fitted to fill a great place among the daughters of the land,—fitted to train and teach that one who has so rarely presided over the ranks of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, is a heroine herself. A GREAT MOTHER takes its place to-day among the world's biographical literature, not alone because a loving heart would thus pay tribute to a sacred memory, but because in Madam Willard's life were elements of nobility, Christian faith and love and hope, sterling principle and unswerving purpose that by reason of their very preciousness ought to be known and read of all. The book lies beyond a mere "review." It contains the faithful testimonies of those who knew this great mother best and are the best qualified to tell the story. To say that it will be instrumental in moulding other mother's lives, and through them the destinies of sons and daughters is not to speak too strongly, and it is easy to prophesy that the record of woman's growth in strength, purity and truest womanliness will be, to no slight degree, a lovelier record because of the wide reading of this tenderly beautiful and highly inspiring record.

Read What Our Exchanges Say About

A GREAT MOTHER

From THE CHICAGO EVENING POST

Biography of Mme. Willard.

A STUDY OF SUCCESSFUL MOTHERHOOD WORTHY TO BE WIDELY READ.

"'Come, let us live for our children,' was her watchword, and to study and educe their powers her occupation," is the backbone sentence of Lady Henry Somerset's introduction to "A Great Mother," the latest book publication of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association of this city.

"A Great Mother" is a loving biography of the late Mary T. Hill Willard, by her daughter, Miss Frances Willard, and her kinswoman, Mrs. Minerva Brace Norton. It is a handsomely bound volume, containing a score or more of portraits and illustrations, among them fine engravings of Mme. Willard, Miss Frances Willard, Mrs. Norton, Miss Katharene Willard, Oliver A. Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, and of "Forest Home," the Wisconsin residence of Mme. Willard, with several views of "Rest Cottage," at Evanston.

The biography is one of exceptional charm, and makes a special claim upon the large and increasing section of the community referred to in the dedication, which is: "To the white-ribbon women of the world, their husbands and their children."

Mme. Willard was an extraordinary woman—a type of that womanhood which is the product of New England birth and training, and of development in the broader arena of Western life. She was a woman of remarkable adaptability to environment, yet never yielding to but always overcoming circumstances. Her whole history bears the impress of resolute individuality. Strong common sense, ardent love of nature, quick discernment of the aptitudes and motives of her associates and of the tendency of the times; patience, perseverance and unfailing courage; practicalness and inventive genius; a terse, epigrammatic style of speech — these were the leading mental characteristics of Mme. Willard, a noble nature, whose influence was inspirational upon all who came within her circle.

There are many mothers in the land who are as great in every moral trait, in every attribute of the highest motherhood, as was Mme. Willard, and in their interest, and as a just tribute to a class but rarely eulogized, it is eminently fitting that this "study of successful motherhood" should be widely read.

FROM THE INTER OCEAN.

A GREAT MOTHER.—Sketches of Mme. Willard. By her daughter, Frances E. Willard, and her kinswoman, Minerva B. Norton. Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, Chicago.

The introduction is by Lady Henry Somerset, and is dedicated "to the white-ribbon women of the world, their husbands, and their children." The publishers have spared nothing in making the book beautiful in its print, illustration and binding, and it may be added truthfully it is in keeping with the text. A beautiful Christian home never stood out with finer object lessons than in the chapters in which the every-day life is modestly and clearly recorded. A child can receive no richer inheritance than that from such a mother as is pictured in the pages. Such a book can scarcely do less than inspire its readers with life's possibilities. The mothers in the multitude of Christian homes in the land are to-day filling a more exalted place than many of them dream of.

FROM THE WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

A GREAT MOTHER.—Sketches of Madam Willard. By her daughter, Frances E. Willard, and her kinswoman, Minerva Brace Norton. With an introduction by Lady Henry Somerset. Chicago: Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.

This exceedingly neat and eloquent volume is Miss Frances E. Willard's appreciative and appropriate tribute of esteem to her now sainted mother. Few such mothers or daughters have lived. The volume is dedicated to the white-ribbon women of the world, their husbands and their children.

SUMMER MEETINGS.

Among the many gatherings which have become a feature of the summer months are the conferences for college students at Northfield, Mass., and Lake Geneva, Wis. Last year there were six hundred and fifty delegates, besides many visitors, at these popular gatherings, whose primary purpose is the training of Christian men to take the leading part in the Christian work of the colleges.

For the ninth successive year the World's Student Conference accepts Mr. D. L. Moody's invitation to meet at Northfield, June 30 to July 10, 1894. Many eminent divines will be in attendance, among them Bishop Thoburn, of India, now on a visit in this country. Mr. Moody will preside.

At Lake Geneva, an offshoot from the Northfield conference, an exceptionally fine program is promised from June 22 to July 2.

Recreation is not forgotten to furnish relief from mental activity.

The arrangements are the care of the college department of the international committee of the Y. M. C. A.

The summer Bible schools, under the direction of the American Institute of Sacred Literature, are assuming large proportions. Not all places where institute instructors are sent can justly claim the title of "Bible schools," but there is a tendency toward centering the Biblical instruction in a "school" in all summer gatherings, a part of whose work is religious instruction.

The schools announced for this summer are as follows:

Chautauqua, N. Y. (July 5 to August 16), where instruction will be offered in two terms of three weeks each. The work in the English Bible will be conducted by President George S. Burroughs, of Wabash College, Prof. Chas. Horswell, of Garrett Biblical Institute, and President William R. Harper, of Chicago, during the first term, and by Prof. W. W. Moore, of Richmond, Va., Prof. Chas. Horswell and Rev. O. C. S. Wallace, of Toronto, in the second term. The work will all be Christo-centric, covering in some classes the life of Christ and His teachings, and in others Messianic Prophecy. Courses in Hebrew will be conducted by Professors Harper and Moore and Prof. D. W. McClenahan, of Alleghany, and in New Testament Greek by Professor Horswell.

In the University of Chicago (July 1 to September 22) a complete list of courses is offered in Semitics and Biblical Greek. Courses are also to be given in the English Bible. The work will be conducted by the regular instructors in the respective departments, and will be genuine university work.

The other schools are:

Chautauqua Assembly at Bay View, Mich., July 12 to August 15; Crete, Neb., July 3–14; Spirit Lake, Ia., July 10–27; Lakeside, O., July 12 to August 14; Waseca, Minn., July 11–27; Waterloo, Ia., July 1–15.

At all of these schools the work is so combined with pleasant recreation and outdoor life that study becomes itself a pleasure, and an opportunity is thus given for many an overworked body to recuperate while an equally overworked brain finds refreshment in a new line of study and a temporary respite from customary responsibilities.

Signal Notes.

THE Duke of Cambridge has issued a circular to warn all military and civil authorities in English garrison towns that they need not hope for a restoration of the notorious Contagious Diseases Acts.

NEBRASKA half yearly meeting of the Society of Friends, at Lincoln, recently forwarded a memorial to the House of Representatives, expressing its condemnation of Congressman Breckinridge, and urging action by Congress.

A BILL which is intended to reduce the number of liquor stores in New York city, was sent by the Church Temperance Society of New York to Assemblyman Lawson, and introduced by him. It would make the proportion of saloons to population as one to five hundred.

THAT religious enthusiasm is not on a decline in England is attested by the fact that for nearly two months every year the great metropolis is crowded with religious meetings, nearly four hundred separate ones being held this year alone. The greatest interest is manifested by the large audiences in attendance at these world-renowned "May meetings."

MOMOLU MASSAQUOI, the Christian African prince, whose manly bearing and well chosen language made so favorable an impression at the Parliament of Religions, is about to publish a little book setting forth the sad history of the tribe to which he belongs in Africa; its customs, religion and superstition; the work of missionaries and the causes of their successes and failures, and the effect of the liquor traffic on these ill-treated people. He will close with a strong appeal to the Christian governments of the world for the cessation of the rum trade which has brought such tragic results to the native African and largely counteracted the evangelistic work of the missionaries, of which he is himself a fruit. Christian temperance people cannot be too strongly aroused to Africa's wrong and to righteous indignation and practical efforts to annihilate the rum traffic. Such a direct appeal as this consecrated noble African makes in speech and writing cannot fail to result in such effective action.

A RECENT copy of the Japan Mail, of Yokohama contains the following interesting account of how the employment of women in business is regarded in some quarters of conservative Japan: "The decision recently arrived at in a debate held at the Post and Telegraph School on the advisability of employing women for communication business, is far from giving satisfaction to the fair sex, or to those who are earnest for the elevation of women's status in society. Three opinions were stated: (1) Women should be employed, not only for the telephone service but also for postal and telegraphic business; (2) women should be employed for telephone service alone; (3) Women should not be employed at all. After an interesting discussion, it was found that the last of these three opinions was the one which commanded the largest majority of votes. The reasons given against the employment of women in communication business are said to have been as follows:

"1. It is a virtuous custom of Japanese women from olden times to remain at home and to apply themselves to their domestic duties. Should they be employed in the government service, the consequence would be the neglect of domestic affairs and a possible disturbance of family relationship.

"2. Women are by nature passionate and difficult of control.

"3. Women being devoid of the power of judgment are unsuited for postal affairs which require knowledge of an abstract and inductive character.

"4. While it is of primary importance in postal affairs to strictly observe secrecy, the want of caution in women entirely incapacitates them from undertaking this responsibility.

"5. A woman's voice is very useful in telephone exchange business, but in view of the foregoing defects they had better be superseded by boys."

A SENSE OF DECENCY

Constrains many people to hide the dirt of their kitchens. SAPOLIO

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

CHILDHOOD: Its CARE and CULTURE

By Mary Allen West.

A sad interest is given to this noteworthy book by the calling to a higher life of its gifted author. It was written with a purpose—the purpose to make better men and women. Through it her voice is still heard in many Christian homes, and from a rare experience she still speaks as only one can who has devoted a large part of life to the care and culture of childhood.

Young mothers are hungering for the information contained in this book, for in it the grave question is answered, For what has God designed my child?

Though sold largely through our subscription book department, single copies can be obtained in cloth for $3; full morocco, gilt edges, $4.25.

Evidence has been received in the New York police investigation showing that certain disorderly houses have been protected from police raids by the payment of stipulated sums to the ward police captains. One man testifies to having paid $4,300 in five years.

London was taken possession of by the fiftieth anniversary of the Y. M. C. A. last week, many noted divines and laymen participating. Sir George Williams, the founder of the Y. M. C. A., was present. Three hundred sermons referring to the jubilee were preached in and about London on Sunday. The occasion was a memorable one.

THE Voice states that Dr. Rainsford, of New York city, who a short time ago advocated "church saloons," has recently been converted to total abstinence through his study of the social temperance problem. We hope that this is the case and that with this important change of front, Dr. Rainsford will continue his active crusade against municipal corruption.

MRS. CHARLTON EDHOLM, who was in attendance upon the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian church at Nashville, Nenn., writes that Dr. D. C. Kelley, the well-known Prohibition preacher, presented our World's Petition, which was unanimously approved. This means a great deal for the Petition, as the three hundred and forty-three ministers and laymen present represent one million three hundred and forty-three thousand members.

THE Chicago council has carried its beloved license system into the tobacco business, and while it sings the praises of pipes and cigars, claims to dislike cigarettes to the extent of taxing their dealers five hundred dollars a year. On the surface this is a virtuous deed, as of all vile forms of the obnoxious weed the cigarette is admittedly the vilest, but those who know the makeup of the city council are not unmindful of the fact that the license fee is the desideratum.

A CABLEGRAM received Saturday morning from Miss Willard announces her intention to sail June 13 on the steamship Teutonic, as previously planned. Some of the prohibition papers have stated that she would arrive in New York in time to attend the International Temperance Congress at Staten Island. Doubtless it would delight her to do this, if her strength were sufficient for such a large meeting at the end of an ocean voyage. Her steamer is not due in New York until June 20.

MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, National corresponding secretary, is confined to her home in Ravenna, O., with an acute attack of sciatic rheumatism. As this prevents her attendance upon and participation in the International Temperance Congress, June 3–5, it is to be doubly regretted. Not only her friends at Headquarters but the many throughout the entire country unite in wishing speedy and complete recovery from a disease so distressing. Her mail should be sent to Chicago, as usual.

THE women suffragists of New York are daily handing in new petitions to the constitutional amendment convention. Up to June 4 the number of signatures had reached nearly three hundred thousand, while the petition against granting suffrage bore comparatively few names. Some of the strong men of the convention are known to be personally opposed to the petition, but it is thought they will be judicial enough to consider the overwhelming number of signatures as significant of the sentiment of the state.

THE temperance committee reported briefly but effectively to the Presbyterian General Assembly as follows: "We reaffirm the deliverance of the assembly that no political party has the right to expect the support of Christian men so long as that party stands committed to the license policy or refuses to put itself on record against the saloon." Objection was taken by several commissioners who presented a formal protest, saying: "We deem this action an unwise interference with a political question and believe that it cannot fail to be regarded by many of our people as burdening the free and conscientious discharge of their duties as voters." If these commissioners vote with a party "committed to the license policy or that refuses to put itself on record against the saloon," they are acting consistently in opposing this temperance resolution, which clearly refers to the Prohibition party, for what other party has ever, nationally, "put itself on record against the saloon"?

"HERO of Prohibition" is the head-line in one of Chicago's leading Republican papers, referring to General Neal Dow's ovation at Staten Island on Sunday. Of the fourteen memorable speeches made at the opening meeting of the great temperance congress, General Dow's was declared to be the most interesting. Two thousand white handkerchiefs composed the Chautauqua salute which welcomed the "grand old man" of prohibition. His lips quivered as he arose, erect and strong, in his ninetieth year, to respond, but he soon recovered perfect composure and delivered a powerful address, whose closing sentence was resonant with truth—"Christians have the whole solution of the liquor business in their own hands; when church members say Go, and vote, Go, the grog-shop will go."

THE associated press sent out a message last week stating that Miss Willard had returned to the National W. C. T. U. securities for the two years' salary received during her absence from this country. In reply to this, Mrs. Helen M. Barker, the National treasurer, has sent out the following statement: "The National W. C. T. U. will not accept the return of Miss Willard's salary. While no executive action has been taken, the officers at Headquarters, including Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, chairman of appropriations committee, are unanimous in their resolve that Miss Willard shall retain her salary. While in poor health and absent from the country she has still maintained her magnetic touch upon the work and kept her hand constantly upon the helm, and has richly earned all the salary she has received."

IT having been reported in the press that the Prohibitionists and W. C. T. U. of Haverhill, Mass., were about to start a prohibition saloon in that town, in order to close up the others, we wrote to the corresponding secretary of the union and received this reply: "I took your letter to our meeting to-day. Our ladies all felt indignant at the report. We have never heard of any such project except that W. T. Stead and Mr. Alexander have written letters here addressed to 'The Temperance Saloon.' There being no such place, these letters were left at our coffee rooms, 24 Washington Square, by the puzzled letter carrier. You can emphatically deny the existence of a 'prohibition saloon' in Haverhill." We know not whose malicious pen framed such a dispatch, which went the length of the electric wire, but we are glad to be able to show its falsehood to our readers, at least. It is fortunate for us that Mr. Stead cannot establish his ideal "temperance saloons" by merely addressing letters to them, especially if they all fall into the hands of the loyal white-ribboners, as did this one.

HERE is an invigorating breeze direct from a medical missionary in far-away Tien-Tsin, China, dated April 10, 1894: "Who but Dr. Kate Bushnell and Mrs. Andrew are here! They have thoroughly reorganized the W. C. T. U., with forty-two members. Their presence is so refreshing. It renews one's faith to look into their faces; they are so strong, earnest, beautiful and fearless. I didn't realize how dusty and shriveled up I had become out here in this old tomb of the centuries, till they came with their 'round-the-world' enthusiasm. How can I describe the magnetism of Dr. Bushnell's womanly strength, and her intense exhortation to purity of heart and life! Her audience was composed chiefly of educated men who have come to this lawless country and given rein to the worst that is in them. They came knowing that Dr. Bushnell was to speak on social purity and expected to hear some coarse, low fun. She looked them calmly in the face and with that deep, spiritual power, before which all base things cower, talked directly to them of God's punishment until they must have felt that the judgment day had come."

IT MAKES NO DIFFERENCE TO ME.

BY S. L. OBERHOLTZER.

And why should the world go wrong
And the movement not onward be,
While people swagger and say—
"It makes no difference to me."

As the wheels go round and round
There are many mistakes to see,— Traceable mostly back to
"It makes no difference to me."

There lies at the root of the wrong
An idea false and free,
That wrong can live and thrive,
And make no difference to me.

The blindness of human thought!
He loses his soul's best key
Who says of the ill and wrong,
"It makes no difference to me."

HIS SHARE OF THE PROFITS.

BY MARY HUMPHREY.

"I tell you, Sarah, it would mean ruin,—absolute, hopeless ruin. That man doesn't know what he is talking about. The people of this province are not ripe for total abstinence. The traffic is a necessity, and I might as well have my share of the profits. If I refuse to sell liquor—the wines that these gentlemen want on their tables—they will simply deal elsewhere, and we may sell out and close our doors."

The speaker threw off his heavy overcoat, and thrusting his hands into his pockets commenced rapidly and nervously to pace the large and handsome apartment. He and his wife had just returned to their home, and she sat, still with her sealskin sacque and pretty bonnet on like one ill at ease with her surroundings.

"But it is so dreadful," she said, "the harm this traffic is doing."

"Oh, those temperance lecturers are a ranting lot. Their greatest pleasure in life is telling the most harrowing stories—"

"Alec, dear, you know as well as I that every word he said was true, only too true."

Ay, he knew it better than she did. He stood before her like an animal driven to bay, a hunted, miserable expression in his earnest brown eyes. "What would you have me do?" he said. "Say the word and I'll go down this moment and roll my hogsheads into the gutter—they're worth thousands of dollars—and we shall be beggars. Shall I,—shall I do it?"

A little shriek, as a pretty baby escaped from his nurse and toddled forward eagerly into his mother's outstretched arms. She folded him to her heart and laid her gentle cheek upon his fluffy curls and thought about the happy life which she had planned for him.

"Remember, if I do this deed we are beggars," said the husband and father, sternly.

"Don't be hasty, Alec; let us take a night to think of it," she murmured.

Next day his mood had changed. "It is absurd," he said. "If I don't sell liquor somebody else will, and I simply take the food out of my children's mouths to enrich other people."

His wife shed many tears over their cruel predicament, but forebore to urge him, and in future each, by tacit consent, carefully avoided the temperance lecturers and the total abstinence agitators.

Business prospered. The children, two daughters and a son, grew up amid "all the refinements of a Christian home." But over in his "general grocery," day by day, week by week and year after year there went on that deadly distribution whose return was misery, degradation and death.

"One of our best citizens" the town called Alec Guthrie, for he was a steady supporter of the church, an earnest worker in all philanthropic and charitable projects, a faithful, true-hearted friend. None deplored more deeply than he the spread of drunkenness among the young, "the abuse of alcohol," as he expressed it.

"Total abstinence is not necessary," he would declare. "Not at all. Use a little wine for thy stomach's sake," etc. He did not pretend to be more strict than St. Paul. He had liquor in his sideboard constantly, used it himself with unfailing regularity, and "no one ever saw me the worse," he would declare with pride.

"Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink," says the Word. Possibly he never saw the warning, Bible student though he was. Nevertheless woe was on his track.

More dearly than aught on earth, except his wife, Alec Guthrie loved his only son. And the time came when, for his sake, wine was banished from the sideboard and from the house, when the wine vaults were kept both locked and guarded; and young Harold simply "dealt elsewhere," buying from his father's rival that which had become a necessity to him, and reeling to his shadowed home.

Alec Guthrie stormed and threatened: "You have no right to sell drinks upon your premises; liquors among your stock of goods conveys no privilege of retailing drinks," he said.

"I have every right to invite a customer into my parlor and treat him, if I wish," retorted the other.

"He is no customer of yours."

"Excuse me, he seems to find my biscuit better than your own, and makes a purchase daily. My fancy groceries are choice."

Then the father pleaded: "He is my only son, and he is drinking himself to death. Pity me,—give him no more!"

"Pshaw! I am used to that sort of talk. You get your share of it, too, I fancy. What is your son more than any other man's? Half the young men in the town are in the same condition,—through the abuse of alcohol."

Harold tired of study, left his college, gained a situation through his father's friends in a distant city, but soon lost it, and came home to loaf about and torment his people. He was a dissolute looking fellow now; his manly beauty was a thing of the past; his sisters were ashamed of him; his parents looked upon him with ever increasing pain.

Of course he "got in" with the worst set of young men in the town. Then his progress downward, though gradual, was steady. He worked his way to the inside of a prison cell, and from thence, through implication in a burglary, was handed on, with three or four of his chosen set, to the penitentiary.

"My son! my son!" wailed his mother. "Would God we had been beggars a thousand times, and more—"

"Sarah, do you remember—"

"Remember? Ay, as well as I do my child's happy laughter, the feel of his soft baby arms about my neck, his silky curls against my cheek. Why, oh, why?—Alec, do it now,—knock the end out of every hogshead—pour the vile stuff through the street!"

"Too late—too late," groaned the unhappy man.

"For us, alas, yes, but not for others. There are other precious boys growing up in this town. We will not be their ruin. We will do what we can to warn their parents to save them and God may bless us yet."

He did her bidding. Men and horses went to work and before night every drop of the costly fluids—deadly poison—flowed like a river of blood past the great doors of his general grocery. Drunkards flung themselves into the gutters, lapping up the fluid like dogs, and fell in a heavy stupor about the streets. All the town congregated around the grocery door, and not a few compassionate women wended their way up the richly carpeted staircase in the handsome home to mingle their tears with those of the desolate mother.

"Mothers," she said, "oh, mothers, be warned—" and choked and sobbed and could say no more.

But in the street below, Alec Guthrie's voice was raised tremulously at first, but growing stronger with intense purpose, as he preached to the thronging street such a total abstinence sermon as they had never before heard. Not a man or woman present stood unmoved.

"Thank you, Alec, thank you," said his pastor, as the two men clasped hands. "I have been as the blind leading the blind. God forgive me. Henceforth we will work together to build up the homes which we, by our example and encouragement, have helped to destroy. No more wine on my table from this night,—no more 'trifles,' or wine jellies, or sauces, or puddings. It is—I see it now—it is an accursed thing."

Then began such a work of grace as the little town had never known. The news of it penetrated even to young Harold Guthrie in his lonely prison. "Had they done it sooner," he said, "I would not have been here. They taught me to drink, and when I had learned my lesson to perfection, all other evil was easy."

But God was merciful. He came out of the penitentiary five years older but immeasurably a wiser and a better man, and, though the consequences of his early training were to himself a lifelong shame, the aged couple whose stay and comfort he became, pointed with pride to the son who, though once worse than dead, had been so mercifully restored to them.

Harold assumed control of his father's business, and though their rival persisted in his pernicious traffic, the Guthrie trade afforded a comfortable living, and when urged to take out a license, since the thing was a necessity, and he might as well share the profits, his reply was ever the same, "It is impossible but that offences will come, but woe unto him through whom they come."

Ottawa, Can.

THE COMEDIA HUMANIA.

As Actually Enacted in the By-ways of Chicago.

BY RAMAH.

Over west, "dis side de tracks," is where the field lies as a general thing, but "the needy" are to be found almost anywhere at the present time. Some of the very gauntest woe stalks up and down the best streets.

"It is so remarkable my husband should be out of work, for we have been in no such straits ever in our lives before," were the words proceeding from a delicate and beseeching face, with eyes that would say, "Please do not class us with people who are needy. We are strangers in Chicago, and that is how it happens, I suppose."

"Delicate, ladylike women and little daughters who look like princesses with such an air of refinement and inability to cope with the hard problems evidently confronting them," is my mental comment as I try to answer back: "You need not fear that I cannot estimate you correctly, for I would not know my business if I could not see the one thousand and one agonies felt at every pore of your refined soul." Well do I know that a nature chilled and undeveloped and hardened by want from childhood is mercifully saved from a sense of all its loss and pain.

But this is a delicate "case." I must not let her know I am a "visitor." "I was sent by a friend." True, the "friend" had heard in a roundabout way, and had sent to headquarters such information as "only a currant loaf for Thanksgiving." This was the word heard there. "Go and see them" was the next word, so here I found myself.

Bric-a-brac and one or two fine paintings all crowded into a small flat, in a decent part of the city, it is true, but the incongruity of things, surroundings and people, the dissolution, as it were, of the fitness of things in general had already begun to take place, that was to be plainly seen, and "visitor's" brain quickly understood that here was an English brain that must "hustle" along with the American alertness or the dissolution would continue.

Then this family would exactly resemble one I had seen the day before "dis side de tracks," where "to the rear," up shaky stairs (what is it that can so send the feeling of insecurity in earthly substances all over one's body as does the ascending of rickety stairs?) I had found just such a family farther along in the "straits."

"My husband is in," said the lady, "I would like to have you see him;" and a general feeling of relief came over me as the ruddy, cheerful man made his appearance, struggling like a giant beneath that good cheer, determined to make things go and keep wife from fear and worry. Upon her departure from the room closer confidence is gained with him as to what can be done while the sweat stands out, not on his brow as stories go—but along the sides of his nose and under his eyes, indicating exhausting anxiety.

One would say he was a man at the head of things, and sure enough he had been at the head during the Fair, but now collections cannot be made. Everything is down and "nothing doing!" "I cannot get a thing to do yet, but I will surely, and I must learn of you Americans how to make something to do. We came to America so that we might be independent and free from under-class distinctions. We lost much property in England two years ago which meant to us loss of everything, even our friends, for I have had to work awfully to keep us going, and even my wife has had to do her own work; so we were young and believed we could work and earn our own living in this country without being disgraced—and here we are with a rush."

He had walked down town, seven miles, rising at four so as to meet (dis)appointments, when he might collect salary due him. But "no money yet," was his only reward. This had been repeated several times, also trips of the same kind hunting—hunting—hunting for work.

A basket of provisions and a few dollars was the extent of material aid extended for the time, but intelligent sympathy was the substantial aid. "My poor wife hasn't been out in two months, nor has a single person called. She needs a friend; do come and see her. That is the most I care for. She simply cannot live here all alone, it will kill her. If you can comfort her, I surely can do the rest."

So spake this noble, self-forgetful man, and I replied: "You must be a great lover, but you must take a little thought for yourself and not work all night like this. Don't fail to do thus and so, and see this reliable lawyer as to collecting your dues, and this man who may give you some money on that beautiful painting," were a few of the suggestions offered ere I bade them good-bye, and all felt better somehow.

Accident, however, brought me to know ten days after (though there had been a social evening spent together in the meantime at my home) that nothing had succeeded, and that only a quarter of a loaf of bread had sufficed for the four at breakfast, when all had gone supperless to bed the night before. "Mamma was sick from worry,—the rent man had frightened her so, and papa had been in a dead faint in the morning from which he had jumped up and gone to see a man on the North Side, to find a buyer for another something." Yet who would imagine this sort of thing from the appearance of the man that same day at headquarters when he came dressed in kid gloves, silk hat and cheerful smile?

Only a detective could see the agony beneath it all. (The following aside.) "Is this your suffering man? What does he wear kid gloves for?" Detective answers: "He probably can't sell his gloves nor hat for anything, and he is not enough of a fraud to leave them off, for he is accustomed to wearing them."

He has very good prospects for a position in an office, which makes the sky not so black.

I finally got "dis side de tracks." Back of saloon, over the saloon, side of the saloon, is the usual location, though in the nature of things it is never in the saloon, for which I am personally very thankful. Back, rear, past first, second family to third, from where word had come, "Family starving; man drinks all he earns,—is no good"; hence much wise caution on part of "visitor" as she knocks for entrance. I hear the racket from the outside and the general scrabble inside to get ready to open the door. Sure enough hardly room is cleared for its opening but it finally creaks on its hinges. There sits a stupid, sweet-faced woman, holding a child, unable to speak much English. Bright little Fred does the interpreting as conversation strives to begin amidst the din of the squirming little ones who always are wriggling the minute a new face looms up into their sky over "the valley where they live."

Such childlike peerings into one's very soul to see if the gods have not somewhere in the universe something with which to fulfill childhood's dreams, are enough to stagger one who understands their gaze—and is it not written all over the face of humanity in its babyhood everywhere?

No, we must only talk of bread, not dreams, poor children, and the mother, through Fred, pours out her tale of woe, which dulls all eager eyes and makes the children peevish again, and sure enough there is one sick. I had forgotten this.

Here comes the father from the mere closet of an inner room. He has been in there on the watch. Hearing a new voice he steals out, and most humbly takes a seat near the door, as he pulls another little one into his lap. He doesn't look very drunk,—nothing like a drinking man. He speaks good English; has been out in the world, and has learned the ways of America, while the wife — poor, stupid, ancient type of German, her hair in tight braids, her dress as Dutch as ever it was—looks ten years his senior. Now I pity him, for what can he ever do to make her young and interesting again(he is of a nature appreciative of only such a woman), and what can she do?

Fritz is not so sick to-day. No sleep, no food, no rent paid, no work, seemed, indeed, blank desperateness. But, thank fortune, all are so stupefied, except Fred and the father, life is only an existence anyway. So an invitation to come to headquarters for medicine and for food and clothes seemed to be equal to offering them a fortune. A little side-talk with the father, as he politely saw "visitor" out of the door, revealed to her some new thoughts which were passing through his brain.

"I used to drink, but this winter is the worst I ever saw. I sent to the old country for my wife and children two years ago, and I had a good deal ahead then. I did teaming. Now I haven't a team, nor anything, and I don't know how the children can eat. Indeed, I take no more drink. I am so afraid my children will die. Good-by!" And as I went for the car the noon whistles sounded, and pell-mell, from every door of the factory near by, came men in droves with tin pails, scrambling to the nearest saloon for beer.

I thought to myself: It takes a mighty hero to withstand such a stream of tendency as this string of men is. What courage it would take for one of them to stand out alone, and say, "No; I never drink," as he would try to munch dry bread for lunch without beer, for he would feel, and look to the others "like a fool." Yes, he would have to be a hero, for the best of women know what forethought and skill and money it requires to keep material on hand in a house for good lunches—and how it is impossible for such a woman as I have just left to get up a lunch that would help to save her "man" from beer.

So hungry are these men for bread, they seem to fairly gasp as they run for beer, spending their money for that which is not bread at all. But they warm up a little socially as they drink it together, and some witty one in the crowd cracks a few jokes and they all feel a little better—as though they had eaten something. At home the wife has not even the social minute at noon or any time. She eats her three meals a day in the spot where all her labor lies, while the clerk down town is always wisely admonished: "Never eat at your desk or bench." What about the women? What about other women?

Just one thing saves these women, and the men, too, for that matter, naturally speaking—and that is the children. There comes a mother off the car. She has been down town somewhere. Four, five children are on the corner waiting for her. She stoutly picks one up, another she takes by the hand, two more hold on by the skirts, and the fifth one actually holds on behind. Mighty refreshment all have had because she has been gone a minute. It may not be half an hour, however, before each little imp feels her sharp tongue or fingers in warning to keep out of her way as she sails into fifteen different kinds of trades, such as laundry, sewing, cooking, cleaning, etc., etc.

One mother of nine children, square-hipped and cheerful, benign and proud, said to me the other day that she had baked up nine barrels of flour in one year for her own family alone. And "My gosh, it was quather of twelve las' night when I take de las' pie out tat oven, an' I vas up at four in te mornin'."

But this good woman was not poor. She had a "guarl." "She works in te telephone," and two boys "who keeps a job," and a husband who did no harm as well as no work.

THE SCANDAL OF SKIMMED MILK.

BY G. MILTON HAMMELL.

On an April day of this year of divine grace and human disgraces, there occurred an event in the mephitic history of the Cincinnati police court which was either symptomatic of a moral collapse in the body politic or a resuscitation of the corporate conscience. That there can be such an alternative I was not aware until I described the scene to a fellow-citizen of liberal opinions, and was informed with some effervescence of feeling that there are at least two points of view from which the occurrence may be contemplated; that he occupied the true standpoint, and that I, being an extremist and a Prohibitionist, stood on a dangerous quagmire of mere prejudice! That which I had ignorantly, and, therefore, audaciously pronounced a wrong emphasis of justice, he characterized as a necessary stress, without which the administration of law would inevitably degenerate into a harmless monotony.

The case was this: "The City of Cincinnati vs. Johann Veiss—Selling skimmed milk from unmarked cans!" Johann came up "from below" in company with debased procuresses, brazen-faced girls who had rebelled against home, riotous men who had broken the peace and tried to break each others' heads, the vagrants who had been found drunk on the pavements, the thieves who loiter, and the loiterers who steal. He was evidently in very bad society, but he plead "not guilty"; he was only one of the unfortunates against whom the police have irremovable prejudices! But the faithful "milk inspector" was there under a police court "oath" to bear testimony to the fact that the accused had sold milk from "unmarked cans," and the analytical chemist was there to bear witness that, having subjected the "milk" to analysis, he had found it entirely destitute of those elements which a normal cow always furnishes in the true lacteal fluid.

Evidently the milk had been skimmed, and was only a mere shadow and ghost of milk, a nondescript liquid in which there is nothing to stimulate the brain or enrich the blood. As the judge hearkened to the accumulating evidence his sense of the enormity of poor Johann's crime increased; bursting forth, like a new Sinai, he thundered and flamed in mighty and vociferous speech, threatening to exterminate the whole pestiferous and destructive business of peddling skimmed milk, even if it should become necessary to employ all the police powers latent in that exalted office of which, by grace of "the Boss" and a contribution to the campaign fund, he was then the "honorable" incumbent.

The scene was majestic—or mean! The "juncta juvant"—the scales of justice—and the wand of Mercury, skillfully carved on the judicial bench, seemed (to an imaginative eye) to be sympathetically appreciative of the occasion. The foul atmosphere seemed to quiver in accord with the sovereign, ethical sentiments of the judge, and Johann—where was he? Like the man without the wedding robe, he was without a tongue! He made no defense. There was no defense to make! He had sold skimmed milk!! The inspector said so. The analytical chemist said so! There being no recourse, he must pay the penalty! And the Bench again thundered and flamed—so that he could not fail to realize the measureless enormity of his offense—FIFTY DOLLARS AND COSTS!

Well, Johann should not have peddled skimmed milk in Cincinnati. Perhaps he will not sell it again. But, if he had only sold whisky or beer out of kegs and barrels marked with the seal of the United States government, he would not have been convicted of crime. He would have demanded a jury—and a Cincinnati jury can always be depended upon to acquit him—or the prosecutor would dismiss his case. Of course, the children who become "beastly drunk" on his poisonous drinks may be arrested and fined; men and women who commit crime under the baneful influence of his malignant merchandise may be punished, and no meddling inspector nor keen-eyed analytical chemist would dare appear against him and testify that the fluid which he retails is a "poison"—a foul liquor of degradation and death—so vicious in all its effects that all the powers of the state should be employed to suppress its manufacture and sale. Oh, no! The saloonist pays a "special tax," and he demands and receives special protection. Selling "strong drink" is not a crime! It is a privilege.

But it is a serious offense to distribute skimmed milk through the streets of a city! Who may measure the danger, the disease, the disorder and misery which lie in a can of skimmed milk? The people must be protected against these evils,—therefore the inspector, the analytical chemist, the police court. True, there are no children "beastly drunk" on the pavements because they drank skimmed milk; no men who have become mad because they have formed the habit of drinking skimmed milk; no women who have lost the grace of their womanhood because they had been poisoned and stupefied by drinking skimmed milk; no bright youths who have become victims of the skimmed milk habit; no homes that have been desolated by the abuse of skimmed milk; but—then—there shall not be! Before this traffic becomes big enough to pay a special tax, or a high protective license, the judge of the police court will throttle it and kill it. If all judges in all the courts are as determined as is the judge of the famous Cincinnati police court, this Republic shall be spared the perils and scandals of an unscrupulous traffic in skimmed milk sold from unmarked cans. Our children shall be safe, our young men shall no longer be in peril, our homes shall not be disrupted, our graves shall not be shadowed by the shame of the drink!

ANSWER TO DR. LYMAN ABBOTT.

BY KATE C. BUSHNELL, M. D.

In THE UNION SIGNAL of December 21, 1893, are quoted words from Dr. Lyman Abbott, and the readers are asked for an exegesis more in harmony with the spirit of the gospel. The reader will excuse my long-delayed answer on account of the distance I am from home. The words are evidently comments on Ephesians 5:21-24, and are as follows:

The wife will submit herself to her husband. Not because she is his inferior, nor because she is his servant, but because in every organization there must be some final authority, some real head, and in the household, according to the divine law of the household, the husband is the head. Therefore, no woman should marry unless she can reverence as well as love her husband, look up to him in a true sense and rejoice in accepting his will as the law of the household. This submission is the submission of love, not subservience to power, legal or social.

I would like to beg my white-ribbon sisters, in order to get the full force of this reply, to read it, Testament in hand. For their convenience I will quote from the old (King James) version. As it has been requested by THE UNION SIGNAL that replies shall be especially a setting forth of the "spirit of the gospel," I will confine our references almost wholly to those that can be found in the New Testament.

In these remarks Dr. Abbott seems to take three things for granted: 1. That Paul is addressing Christian married pairs. 2. That the text would warrant the teaching, "husbands, command your wives." 3. That a man can both love and command an equal, and that a woman can both love and be commanded by an equal. He further declares that according to divine law the husband is the "final authority" in a household.

On all four of these points I do not agree with Dr. Abbott. As to the first point, I believe the thought of wife obeying a Christian husband is to be excluded, because it is not anticipated that the Christian husband will command. The following passages of Scripture forbid the exercise of "authority" among the disciples of Christ: Matt. 20:25, 26; Mark 10:42, 43; Luke 22:26; I. Peter, 5:2, 3; Gal. 3:27, 28. Further, a distinct penalty is prescribed for men as well as women who exalt themselves as chief. See Matt. 23:12; Mark 9:35; Luke 14:11; Luke 18:14, etc. While meekness and humility are commanded in all without regard to sex. Matt. 5:5; Matt. 18:4; Matt. 23:12; Mark 10:43; I. Peter 5:5, 6; Rom. 12:10; Gal. 5:23; Eph. 5:21; Phil. 2:3. The sinner desires to exalt himself and have dominion over others in exact proportion to the degree of selfishness in his heart, and it is probable that Paul had reference wholly to this sort of husband.

No one will deny that, further, just in proportion to the degree of sin in a man's heart will be his desire to make woman his subject. Almost, without exception, every heathen country makes woman a slave. These Ephesian women were recently converted out of heathenism. To these women with heathen husbands Paul says, "Wives, submit yourselves." In this same sense, Paul and the other apostles bade slaves to submit to masters: Eph. 6:5; I. Cor. 7:21-23; I. Tim. 6:1. The question arises why Paul did not likewise turn to the Ephesian men and say (in accordance with the spirit of Eph. 5:21): "Husbands, submit yourselves to your own wives." This, as will be pointed out, he really did in verse 25th, when commanding husbands to give themselves for the wife as Christ did for the church. But in the present instance Paul is not speaking of the "submission of love" between Christian married pairs, but of the submission of necessity of that relation called marriage, which is literally that of master and slave, as is the case of marriage in all heathen countries. Of this relation Paul might as well have uttered the meaningless command, "Masters, obey your slaves," as "husbands, obey your wives." But of this heathen bondage Paul could well say to the enslaved wife, in the spirit of Matt. 5:41, "submit,"—but with the added precautionary limitation, "as unto the Lord."

What this clause implies is made clearer by I. Cor. 7:21–23, and Col. 3:23, 24,—directions to servants or slaves. In I. Cor. 7:23, Paul asserts that the service is to be rendered unto the Lord with the distinct mental reservation that it is done, not because the master commands, but because the Lord does, for he charges the slave in outward life not to be a servant of man in spirit, but to be the Lord's freeman (22). Thus the Ephesian woman is exhorted to submit "as unto the Lord,"—not because of her husband's commands, but in the spirit of the teaching of such scripture as the following: Matt. 5:39–41; I. Cor. 6:7; II. Cor. 6:4; I. Cor. 4:12; II. Cor. 4:8, 9; II. Cor. 12:10; Heb. 10:34; Heb. 10:30; II. Tim. 2:24, 25; II. Tim. 4:5. And, of course, it is always implied in these texts that the obedience rendered and the cheerful submission yielded, shall be within the keeping of God's moral law. Not even a child should obey when commanded to sin against God.

Now as to Dr. Abbott's second assumption. He speaks of it as a "divine law" that the husband be the "final authority" in the household, from which I infer he means that the teaching implies the right of the husband to govern. Exactly such a converse interpretation as this was formerly applied to such texts as "Servants (slaves), obey your masters," and this rule of interpretation was made to do duty as a diploma of privileges and immunities to slave holders. But it was finally discovered that to follow the example of Him who "took upon himself the form of a servant" did not at all imply the right to others to take upon themselves the form of masters. And as Paul said, "Slaves, obey your masters," because the slaves were within the fold,—the masters generally beyond his reach, so Paul has said, "Wives, obey your husbands," because subjected wives were within the fold,—masterful husbands outside, so that to speak to them was beyond his scope, further than the general principles already laid down in references we have given, such as Eph. 5:21.

I have searched in vain for passages of Scripture in the New Testament other than passages such as we have now under consideration which establish by "divine law" the husband as "final authority" for the wife in the household. In I. Tim. 3:4–12, the father is exhorted, according to the English version, to "rule" the children and the house, but no mention is made of the wife as being under this rule, and in other passages, such as Titus 1:6, it is inferred that the father should control the children. But if it is argued that the expression "house" includes all who dwell in the house, then it is in place to consider carefully an expression used by Paul in I. Tim. 5:14. The English version reads: "I will, therefore, that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the house," etc. Now, if this expression "house" includes all who dwell therein, then the wife is directed to "guide" the husband. But the word treated by the English translators as meaning merely "guide" has the force, "do the despot," its root being the very one from which despot is derived. Had Paul wished to indicate in Greek the "final authority" in the house he could not possibly have found a stronger word than this one which he applies to the woman-head. From the same word we get "master," in I. Tim. 6:1, 2; I. Tim. 2:21; Titus 2:9; Matt. 10:25. My lexicon calls this noun a word "denoting the possession of supreme authority." It is translated "Lord" in Luke 2:29; Acts 4:24; Rev. 6:10; Jude 4 (in the phrase "only Lord God").

As to the word applied to the husband in I. Tim. 3:5 and I. Tim. 5:17, etc., it means literally "to stand before," or to maintain or to profess. It is coupled in five of the seven instances in which it occurs with a Greek word which in its adjective form is translated "good" and in its adverbial form is translated "well." These five instances are I. Tim. 3:5, 12; I. Tim. 5:17; Titus 3:8, 14. In the last two places in Titus the significance given it by the marginal reading of the revised version is simply "profess honest occupations," from which it is but fair to presume that the same forms appearing in the three references in I. Timothy would bear the interpretation "supporting (or maintaining) well (or honestly) the household." However, I am not interested in showing that the Bible does or not give woman the place of supreme rule over the husband or any one else, for I believe Christ sternly forbids such rule in either husband or wife. I only wish to point out the extreme unfairness of the English translators of the Greek.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

A Women's Political Meeting.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Last evening (in company with Mrs. Dr. Seimer, our vice-president for Denmark, Mrs. Gordon Gulick, who holds the same position in Spain, and Miss Anna Gordon, superintendent of juvenile work,) I was seated on the platform in St. James' Hall, London, to watch the proceedings of the great public meeting with which the National Women's Liberal Federation (the political ally of the Liberal party now in power) is wont to close its annual convention. Lady Henry could not go because, as a member of the executive committee, she had toiled all day through the difficulties and contingencies of management, and one of her blinding headaches came on toward evening.

The new president of the Federation, Rosamond, Countess of Carlisle, was in the chair. Her husband, Earl Carlisle, is a member of the Union party and opposes Home Rule, of which she is a devoted advocate, but the Earl is an estimable man, and they go their separate ways politically in peace. The Countess is a lady of medium height, plump figure, clear, fine, intellectual face, a pleasant, earnest voice, and dignified bearing. She is considered the best parliamentary speaker among English women, by which I mean that she has much of the argumentative, orotund style characteristic of the House of Commons; she has not Lady Henry's humor, pathos, or charm; but she is a woman of remarkably statesmanlike intellect, the highest character and has the courage of her convictions, for she is a most pronounced Radical, and in her speech last night denounced the House of Lords with vehemence. The Countess was attired in a sheeny, light silk walking dress, with bonnet to match adorned with a delicate wreath of roses, and did not remove her ashes-of-roses gloves during the meeting, not even when she was speaking. On entering she was received with tumultuous applause, the English audiences being, as everybody knows, the most responsive in the world to their leaders and to the principles they advocate. In speaking of the House of Lords the Countess said: "The rills of pure influence from the homes of England that roll on into rivers of power to the House of Commons are lost in the stagnant marshes of the House of Lords. Of one thing the country may be assured, we will never help to put Tories in power." She also said: "Although we regret that Mr. Gladstone does not stand upon our suffrage platform, we must remember that it was he who most strongly favored the organization of the Women's Liberal Federation, and encouraged his wife to stand at its head; it was he who said that when the womanly mind has shown what it can do for the country in such an association, then it will be time to discuss our relations to politics." Lady Carlisle declared that "the 80,000 Liberal women now organized into local societies in England, were committed to the temperance cause, the cause of labor, of home rule, and of the women's ballot." At each of these avowals there was a rousing cheer, and none called out a more hearty one than her allusions to the temperance reform of which she is a devoted advocate, having turned every drop of wine out of her castle, and being a vice-president of the British Women's Temperance Association.

When she had spoken Sir Edward Grey, M. P., addressed the meeting in advocacy of Home Rule, and other Liberal measures that have been "mutilated" in the House of Lords. He believed that "a broad, generous life in the homes of the country was needed more than any other one thing to preserve and extend the greatness of Great Britain. The Parish Council Bill, which puts the affairs of every locality into the hands of the men and women of that locality, will do more to bring the working classes to a comprehension of the value of representative government than any measure ever adopted by Parliament."

Miss Katie Jenkins, the woman farmer and girl orator of Wales, was unable to speak, and her place was taken by one who, with true Celtic enthusiasm, denounced the Church of England. She said that "many a farmer is refused to be continued as a tenant on his land unless the latter promises that he will attend the Church of England, although he is practically sure to be a dissenter in faith and practice. Twenty-nine out of thirty-one Welsh members of Parliament desire to have the galling yoke of the state church lifted from their necks, and if this is not done they intend to know the reason why. The House of Lords will vainly attempt to override the wishes, convictions and determination of the Welsh people."

When Michael Davitt, the greatest of home rulers, rose to speak the entire audience rose, and he was cheered to the echo. He said that "the Irish members of Parliament had forced the land question on the consideration of the English people not for Ireland alone but for Great Britain. The people were beginning to perceive the relation that a monopoly in land bears to their subjection, and they propose to do away with it; they intend to dethrone the sacred rights of land owners and enthrone the more pressing rights of those who till the soil. This key to the labor question now confronts Parliament and the public; we have waited and we have won before; the House of Lords has triumphed, but 'they laugh best who laugh last'; the lords derive their property from the soil, but the burning question of this hour is the supreme right of the people to own the land they till,—not for the pride or profit of a territorial class, but for the peace and prosperity of the people themselves. Devolution is vitally important to the British Parliament, and is being achieved more rapidly than we are ourselves aware; by and by we will have home rule on all fours—not for Ireland only, but the entire country; it will permeate the imperial federation. Ninety-eight per cent of those who urge these reforms are working people. The ladies of the Liberal Federation are the right arm of the service; their devotion and loyalty offset the class pride and prejudices of the Primrose dames who seek only to retain the prerogatives of the past, but the doom of whose Tory allies is sealed already, for the people want a larger share of what their sweat has earned. Rent is the blackmail of civilization. Let me picture to you what is now occurring on the Isles of Arran, on the west coast of Ireland. These are limestone rocks upon which the people for centuries have been delving, bringing peat from the mainland and kelp and seaweed from the shore, thus manufacturing with infinite labor a thin soil that supports them at the hardest. I know every rood of the ground, and I will vouch for the truth of statements made by eye-witnesses who say that when the evictor arrives with his officers to collect the rent that these poor people cannot pay, they have seen men over eighty years of age led out of these humble thatched cottages and others laid out on straw on the country roads; they have seen the mother with a babe in her arms vainly pleading to be permitted the protection of the pig-sty; they have seen the iron pot in which nettles were cooking for dinner set out on the highway as a trophy for the landlord; they have seen enacted crimes that cry to heaven for justice and which are the direct outcome of laws that the English have fastened on the Irish race."

Mrs. Eva McLaren, who, with her husband, Walter McLaren, M. P., has for years stood in the forefront of the suffrage battle, made a remarkable speech,—compact, convincing, and cogent with the restrained power of a character that is one of the most trusty among the many noble women whom I have learned to love and prize. In referring to her speech Lady Carlisle paid a deserved compliment to Walter McLaren whose resolution in the House of Commons asking that women be granted the parliamentary franchise is but the most recent of his constant endeavors to help on the good cause.

Mrs. Wynford Philpps, the wife of another member of Parliament, and one of the chief speakers among women, is the most prominent among the women orators in the gallant little principality of Wales noted for the forensic talents of its people. Mrs. Philipps made a fine plea for woman's ballot. She said: "How can we work as well for politics if willing ourselves to be left out? What should we think of Wales if its speakers never mentioned disestablishment—that question as vital to them as the beating of their own hearts? Many women dare not be great because they desire to be popular; they would rather do the debonair than the difficult thing."

Hoping soon to sing "Home, sweet home" with you all, I am loyally ever,

Reigate, Eng. Frances E. Willard

A LETTER FROM DENMARK.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It gives me so much pleasure to hear of the good work performed by my brothers and sisters in the whole wide world that I certainly should have sent you news from the Danish temperance work, if I had thought it worth the while; but unhappily for the last years we have been hindered from working outside our temperance unions, while we have had so many troubles inside.

The Danish Christians are generally opposed to total abstinence work, and only few out of the well instructed, well educated classes are partaking of this work. Satan, knowing the truth of Christ's saying, "Every city or house divided against itself shall not stand," just now is trying wholly to spoil the total abstinence work in Denmark by making us quarrel among ourselves over the unhappy weak beer—containing from one to two per cent of alcohol.

In 1879 the foundation was laid of the Danish Abstinence Union, which is now the greatest temperance society in Denmark, numbering twenty-seven thousand members, and inside this union the beer question never arose; the members are taking the weak beer as a matter of course.

But in the beginning of 1880 the I. O. G. T. came to us, working on a non-alcoholic base. Unhappily, a member found out a year and a half later that the work should proad more rapidly if the weak beer could be used inside he order, and thinking that no harm could arise from his non-intoxicating drink, the chief of the order, my husband, tolerated the use of it. When three or four years had elapsed he saw that he had been mistaken, and since hat time we have been discussing this question very often at ordinary and extraordinary conventions, and we have tried to convince the members of the fact that the non-alcoholic base is the only sure one and that real total abstinence prevails only where all alcohol is left alone.

But in vain! In 1892 six thousand members left the I. O. G. T. and formed a new society (which they called the Northern I. O. G. T.), inside which they gave themselves the permission to take the non-taxed beer (containing still two and one-fourth per cent of alcohol). Two thousand members remained faithful to the I. O. G. T., but instead of going on the right base at once they decided to arrive there by and by, and restrained the use of the weak beer. After this action (which made my poor husband almost desolate) we ought to have gone in the same direction at the annual convention of 1893, but on the contrary we made a great step backwards, giving a clear permission to take the weak beer (out of sixty-five voting representatives and officers only eight votes were given for the non-alcoholic base, while almost all the voting members were on this base themselves). Together with another member of the order (my husband was not present), I appealed the decision of the Grand Lodge, which gave the named permission to the R. W. G. T., urging that it was not conformable with the laws of the I. O. G. T. To our great astonishment the Danish chief of the order interpreted the answer of the R. W. G. T. as a clear permission to take the weak beer, and the majority now rejoices that the minority has been decidedly beaten; but we are waiting to see what decision shall be taken at the next annual session, where the question will come up again. And really it shall be of the utmost importance, for while the I. O. G. T. never has been the greatest temperance society in Denmark, it was regarded as the most rigid fraction of total abstinence workers, and to a certain degree, has been a leader of this work. Indeed, we are so greatly indebted to the I. O. G. T. that it is almost breaking our hearts to see it failing, and if it shall not come round right very soon it will be a failure for all real total abstinence work in Denmark.

Our dear little native country is suffering extremely from alcohol, it is really drowned in strong beer, (and non-abstainers, too, scoff at beer-drinking teetotallers) which has been and is a curse to our nation; we therefore have been full of gratitude that total abstinence came to fight the drink evil by us, and now we are so anxious of what shall become of this work, that I shall ask my dear sisters in total abstinence work over the sea to pray that God will bring it about so that our work may glorify His name, help our fellow-creatures and become a blessing to ourselves.

The Danish W. C. T. U. is only a small one from the reasons before named added to the dependence in which the Danish women are living generally; but the few sisters bound together by the white ribbon are faithful.

Perhaps it would interest the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL to read a sketch of the life of our Danish temperance worker, my beloved husband, Dr. Selmer, the loss of whom we now regret, and who seemed just in our actual fight to be of so great value to total abstinence work. But He, whose ways are not our ways and whose thoughts are not our thoughts, certainly knows always to find out the best thing for us, and we only have to bow before His will also in this case.

Henrik Selmer was born 1847 and died 1893. His father was a renowned Danish physician, who did a great reform work for our insane asylums. Henrik Selmer also made himself a physician and after practicing for three years in a village he returned to Copenhagen, working in the great hospitals for more than four years. Hygiene became his special study, for the sake of which he went to Munich, Germany, in 1883. The previous year he had been elected physician of the quarantine, and this office he held till his death. He made short travels to Germany to study the animal vaccination, which he introduced in Denmark, and for more than fourteen years he made the weekly statistical, medical worksof Copenhagen. As he had an unusual fertile spirit and extraordinary energy, his work shall not die with him, but others shall continue what he began.

Having a great desire to be useful to his fellow-creatures and seeing that it was very important from hygienic reasons to leave alcohol alone, he engaged himself in an uninterrupted war against alcohol. He met with this idea in 1880, when the I. O. G. T. tried to get entrance in Copenhagen. He joined the order and worked so much inside and outside this union that his good health failed. He was the Danish chief of the I. O. G. T. till 1885, and member of the executive committee for the world from 1885 till 1887. He had great gifts for inspiring, leading and presiding, and at the same time he knew perfectly to work together only as a member of the order and always assisted at the weekly meeting, as far as his health and his affairs permitted. He very much admired the splendid organization of the I. O. G. T., and he sincerely meant and hoped that this union should be capable of regulating the Danish temperance work, so that it should really be for total abstinence. He certainly was slain in the battle, as his health was broken down by overworking himself, but he left to us, his fellow-workers, a precious inheritance, and I am hoping and asking God that He will enable us to continue the noble warfare of this man, who forgot his own gain to seek that of his poor fallen fellow-creatures.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It is very significant of the fact that in England as elsewhere, the woman question looms large, both on the social and political horizon, that the close of your chieftain's visit to this country should have been marked as it has been by a remarkably wide-spread interest—even greater than that by which she was welcomed a year and a quarter ago. Then, Frances Willard was but a name to the great bulk of English temperance people—true, it was a name known and honored, but still little else. Yet, then one of our largest halls was filled to overflowing with almost as many again people wishing to enter, on the occasion of a National welcome accorded to Miss Willard by the united temperance forces, on the invitation of Lady Henry Somerset.

Remarkable as was this event, it has just been eclipsed by the "farewell" which took the form of the eighteenth Annual Meeting of the National British Women's Temperance Association. A still larger hall was crowded from floor to ceiling—and had the building been twice the size, it could, without doubt, have been amply filled, so great was the number of people representing temperance and social reform of every name and section, who were anxious to do honor to the departing guest and to unite in wishing "God-speed" to one who through the intervening months has come to be better known and more highly regarded than perhaps any other American visitor to this country.

The meeting held in Queen's Hall on Thursday last, May 10, consisted of over three thousand people, including five or six hundred delegates to and members of the Annual Council of the National British Women's Temperance Association. The speakers were all of National fame—they were Rev. Canon Wilberforce (grandson of the great emancipator, and perhaps the most eloquent of English divines), Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart. M. P., (the witty and genial leader of our Parliamentary temperance forces). Sir Benjamin W. Richardson (the great scientist and hygienist), Alderman Ben Tillett (one of the best known labor leaders), and of course the President of the National B. W. T. A., Lady Henry Somerset, who filled the chair and spoke with marked eloquence and grace. The speakers all paid a high tribute to Miss Willard, and to the vitality which the woman movement has brought to the temperance reform.

Miss Willard's reply was a masterly effort, focusing into brief space all the salient points of modern temperance reform, and suggesting in eloquent terms the tendencies of the present and the possibilities of the future through its multiplied agencies.

Perhaps the most striking feature of this remarkable meeting was the introduction of a new rendering of the white-ribbon song, "There's a Shadow on the Hearth." A choir of over three hundred children, selected from the Bands of Hope in one of the most densely populated sections of London, filled the orchestra, and sang, to the delight of the vast audience, selected white-ribbon hymns. With the assistance of the choir, "There's a Shadow on the Hearth" was rendered by a party of fifty ragged children drawn from London slums—the actual, unadulterated article, rags, dirt, and apparent wretchedness included. Ranged in a long line along the front of the platform no more impressive illustration of the drink shadow over the homes of the people could be devised. By way of contrast the response, "We are Coming to the Rescue," was sung by a party of fifty well-dressed children robed in white, and holding aloft garlands of white ribbon. These marched singing through the gangways the length of the hall, and were finally ranged close behind the line of ragged children. The effect of this combination was electrical, a large number of the audience being deeply affected, while the object lesson conveyed on the one hand of the evils of drink, and on the other the blessings of abstinence, needed no words to accentuate it. Here was typified in visible presence not only the drink-cursed residuum, but also the beneficent activity of white-ribbon workers hastening to the rescue.

A pleasant feature of the meeting was the presentation to Miss Willard of numerous mementos of her visit, supplementing other presents offered at the meeting of the Council earlier in the day, and as the vast audience separated after singing together "God be with you till we meet again," the wish found frequent and hearty expression that it might not be long before Miss Willard is able once more to visit this country.

The anniversary of the National British Women's Temperance Association of which the "Willard farewell" was the climax, has been a most gratifying success to Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard and their many co-workers. A year ago after a small revolution, there were many who feared that failure might follow the widened plans then adopted. The result shows an exactly contrary outcome. Three hundred new branches have been formed within this time and every department of work has throughout the year shown corresponding activity and success. Debts left by the former executive have been cleared off, thanks generally to the untiring energy of the president who, in coöperation with the United Kingdom Alliance has held a series of great meetings in support of the Direct Veto Bill, the monetary proceeds being handed over to the British women's treasury. Perhaps no better proof of the vitality of the society could be found than the fact that after only a few weeks' appeal, between nine and ten thousand dollars have been contributed to a fund for the establishment of an Industrial Farm Home for Inebriate women.

The evangelistic department instituted last year has also made a record of progress and crowned its success by a remarkable all-day religious meeting on the day preceding the council. The Speakers' Bureau, another of last year's new departures, has drawn into coöperation nearly one hundred speakers, has supplied over three hundred and fifty meetings, and has added five hundred dollars profit on its transactions to the treasury. The same record of success might be given in respect of practically all the departments, and the association sets out upon another year's work with every indication that even greater success will mark the future—thanks in very great measure to the self-sacrificing devotion of Lady Henry Somerset, which is beyond all praise.

London, E. C. HENRY J. OSBORN.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world; and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith.—I John 5:4.

These are times, from a financial standpoint, that try men's souls. Their hearts fail them for fear, they know not what the end may be. The children of God should not fear, nor let the present financial conditions disturb them. He that is the same yesterday, to-day and forever will not fail those who put their trust in Him. This is as certain as that two and two make four. Abundant crops bless the land. There never was more money in the country. Lack of faith has caused its withdrawal for a time from circulation. The well-to-do have hidden it away in their strong boxes, and it is stored by the rich in bank vaults. Some of it, thank God, is reaching the Temple treasury, from faithful, true souls who know that what they give is saved, and turned into the true riches which is laid up for them at God's right hand, where no earthly disaster can sweep it away.

Jane E. Weeden, the staunch friend of the Temple, has been heard from again. She sends $10 for a Baby Band and says: "This is merely to show that I have not forgotten the Temple and that my friends in Danville, Ill., who have elected me city missionary, are still kindly disposed toward it. They have encouraged me to get up this Baby Band and wish me to form an L. T. L. band." Mrs. L. M. Stow, Burt, Ia, sends $5. She writes: "This is the fifth time I have sent this amount within five years. It is but a trifle among thousands, but the littles help. This may be the last as I am past seventy-eight years and my health failing." Think of this aged saint sending her yearly mite of five dollars for five years. If other white-ribboners had been equally faithful and helpful, there would be no need to go outside our ranks to ask for money to pay for the Temple; but, alas, it is in the littles we fail. So many think, "If I cannot give a large sum I will give nothing." Such conclusions are erroneous and must be displeasing to God. We are to give according as He has prospered us. Beloved white-ribboners, will you not help a little with the burden that presses so hard these terribly stringent times? If you cannot give a hundred dollars, give five. If a thousand persons during the next month would give each five dollars what an encouragement and aid it would be. Our plan, as those who read the Temple Items of March 22 know, contemplated a gift of five dollars from five thousand persons which will aggregate $25,000.

Mrs. F. A. Myrick, N. Tonawanda, N. Y., sends $5; in return she asks for one of our Temple souvenir spoons and the Columbian souvenir; both have been sent to her. We will be glad to send these lovely gifts to all who send us $5. Another aged friend who has passed her three score years and ten, Mrs. L. H. Hyslop, Nebraska City, Neb., sends $3.65. She speaks of what a joy it is to work for the Temple, and realizing the necessity of working while the day lasts, she has commenced filling another mite-box. Mrs. Charlotte M. Lawson, Montague, Prince Edwards Island, sends from her Methodist parsonage across the border a bright, cheery letter containing $4. She says: "This is the contents of our family mite-box for the Temple, regretting that we cannot this year make it five dollars as last, money being so scarce. We intend, D. V., to keep on gathering our mites and filling our box until the great heart of the Temple founder is satisfied by seeing the beautiful building paid for and secure in the hands of the women. We were delighted with the lovely Columbian souvenir. I presented it to my eldest little daughter for a birthday gift, and now I must have another for her little sister. We all feel we have a share with you, our noble sisters across the line, in this great work." Mrs. P. H. Henderson, Holt, O., writes: "I received the Columbian souvenir. I am much pleased with it, but more pleased to do a little for the Temple; even if it is only a dollar it cost me some sacrifice, but I enjoyed it all the more on that account. I do not believe God accepts our gifts unless they cost us something. I only wish I had thousands to give." Our sister must remember the value placed by our Master upon the widow's mite. A dollar given through sacrifice is greater in His sight than a thousand, when its only cost is the trouble of writing a check.

It will delight the hearts of the noble white-ribboners of Chautauqua county, N. Y., to know that at last their beautiful fountain has arrived from Italy, and men are now at work putting it in place in the corner reserved for it in the Willard corridor. It should have been placed there a year ago, but the marble man to whom the order was given either willfully deceived us or there were so many orders ahead of ours he could not get it out sooner. The bronze part of the fountain has been in readiness for a year. We will give a description of this beautiful work of art in next week's Items.

All persons sending $1 to the Temple will receive the beautiful Columbian souvenir. Any individual who fills a mite-box during 1894 will receive a solid silver Temple souvenir teaspoon. This, however, does not apply to persons filling boxes for unions; they receive the Columbian souvenir. All money orders and checks should be made out in the name of William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, the Temple, Chicago, Ill. All orders for mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

NOT ALL THERE.

The innocents, of whom the Scotch say, "They are not all there."

Something short in the making,
Something lost on the way,
As the little soul was taking
Its path to the break of day.

Only his mood or passion,—
But it twitched an atom back;
And she, for her gods of fashion,
Filched from the pilgrim's pack.

The father did not mean it,
The mother did not know,
No human eye had seen it,
But the little soul needed it so!

. . . . . .

Through the streets there passed a cripple,
Maimed from before its birth;
On the strange face gleamed a ripple,
Like a half-dawn on the earth.

It passed—and it awed the city,
As one not alive nor dead;
Eyes looked and brimmed with pity,—
"He is not all there," they said.

Not all! for part is behind it,
Lying dropped on the way;
That part—could two but find it—
How welcome the end of day!

BY ELIZABETH GRINNELL.

When the Master "took a little child and set him in the midst of them" He knew that He gave, to such as would receive them, the best spiritual teachers. And yet, in how many Christian homes are the little ones set aside and suppressed into silence when their mission is to teach. "Children should be seen and not heard" is a favorite maxim with many parents. Would that it were a forgotten adage.

When a "little child is set in the midst of them" let the family receive him as a "teacher come from God," for "of such is the kingdom of heaven." They, fresher, because more innocent than their elders, have an originality and terseness quite their own. Let them speak, though their parents' mood be averse to words. We miss a hundred helps by the way, when we suppress the children.

There is a little "family prophet" among the children. He is never repressed nor corrected for what he pleases to say. He is simple and apt and helpful; never presuming on the liberties granted him, and all the time so merry that his mission has a double sweetness—that of good cheer as well as helpfulness.

I rise in the morning unrefreshed. Baby has been fretful and I miss my sleep. Things to me seem all awry. At breakfast I am peevish and ungracious, or I am inclined to be so. F. looks up at me with one of his irresistible smiles and exclaims, "Smile, mamma, smile!" I do smile, and the very change of countenance rests me. F. returns to his saucer of mush and cream with the air of one who has discharged a very pleasant duty.

I have been hindered at my work by a thoughtless neighbor who thought she would "drop in and see me" just in the busiest part of the forenoon. When she goes I am "cross." I say "Hush!" to the baby in a way that makes her cry, and I can feel the frown on my face like a veil. F. comes straight up to me, and, with another of his own enchanting smiles, says, "Smile, mamma, smile!" The frown goes away as clouds go down somewhere in the west, and there is a tranquil sunset, with the flush of gladness deepening the blue of the sky.

At supper Robbie spills his cup of milk on the clean table-cloth, and it starts, a colorless rivulet, down towards my plate. Robbie looks scared, and turns crimson in view of the scolding which he knows he deserves. Quick as thought little F. takes up his refrain, and Robbie and I smile together. It is all so perfectly natural on the part of F. that no one accuses him of arrogance. His text needs no comment. If there were more like him to dispel domestic frowns by a winsome command, "Smile, mamma, smile," how many mothers would be the gainers. But then, the child might be told to "hush" in time to suppress the text.

A young lady in an old-fashioned Southern kitchen was beating a great platter of eggs for a fancy cake. A sudden, awkward movement, and platter and eggs were mixed in hopeless fragments on the floor. A sharp exclamation of dismay and anger cleft the air, but "B'ar de cross, Miss Frances, b'ar de cross," rang out in a childish treble from the almost baby lips of a little negro boy on the floor. Mirth and ripples of laughter followed the gay girl into the house as she ran to repeat little Abe's swift philosophy.

Alice, aged fifteen, sits contemplating her hands. They are good, useful hands, but Alice is thinking of their color and shape. She exclaims petulantly, "My hands are so ugly, mamma. They are so rough and brown. The fingers are so blunt, and look, how stubby they are. If I do a bit of work they have little callous places on them like warts on a toad's back. It don't do any good to wear kid gloves all night, either. I never saw such ugly hands. Maude's and Lucy's hands are soft and white, and the fingers taper so prettily. Everybody notices their hands, and mine are so coarse."

Beth, sweet-tempered little Beth, who never grumbles at her own looks, although she has a pug nose and straight hair, comes softly up to sister Alice, and whispers something that makes Alice change color.

"What was it you said, Beth?" I ask.

"Nothing," is the answer; "only I told Alice that we ought not to find fault with our presents."

Alice understands the child and appropriates the text. It needs little comment. Let the children with their small texts be welcome, we remembering that it was the Master who "took a little child and set him in the midst of them."

LIGHTHOUSES IN CHICAGO.

The Jane Club.

BY BERTHA DAMARIS KNOBE.

Coöperation is no new principle, but mutual dependence finds an essentially unique and intensely interesting embodiment in the coöperative home for working women —the Jane Club of Chicago.

There are innumerable coöperative homes in the larger cities of the country. But outside the small club formed by a coterie of friends, the Jane Club is the only coöperative home for working women known to exist independent of a governing board of managers. It is distinctively a self-managing, self-supporting organization.

And what is more, the Jane Club is a thoroughly successful organization. Founded just two years ago the tenth of May the Jane Club, with a large, well-equipped house full of happy girls and an exchequer full of gold dollars, has long ago ceased to be a mere experiment. Claiming the distinction of being the first club thus successfully conducted it offers an example worthy of praise and emulation.

The Jane Club—so named in honor of Miss Jane Addams, widely known for her noble philanthropies—owes to this enterprising woman a heartfelt gratitude for a real home in the heart of a great city, for she is the founder of the organization. Recently Miss Addams was asked if the idea was original with herself, and in her modest, noncommittal way she answered: "It seemed to me that a number of girls whom I knew were paying exorbitant prices for home privileges. It occurred to me to apply the principle of coöperation to such a club for working women to insure refined surroundings and wholesome food at a minimum cost. My ideal club, however, would be limited to twenty-five members. The Jane Club now numbers forty-eight resident members, as you know. But as to the success of the undertaking you have seen for yourself." And indeed the club does speak for itself in an unmistakable language.

Passing down bustling South Halsted street, and turning on Ewing street, one comes to a substantial, commodious red brick structure of five flats. There is no sign to distinguish it from the average home apartments in the city. The doorbell resounds through the hall and one is immediately ushered into an inviting reception room, with comfortable furniture, attractive pictures, cozy draperies, two large cases of books and pretty pieces of bric-a-brac. In the adjoining parlor, similarly furnished with the addition of a piano, the young women are entertaining their friends. The sound of music, happy laughter and animated conversation immediately commends itself. One instinctively thinks of the average boarding-house lacking in home comforts and the contrasting picture but makes Jane Club appear more alluring as a refuge after a day's work in the down-town hustle and bustle.

There is that indescribable something—the homelike influence—in the very air, such as is needed around every girl in a large city to shield her from the lack of protection and the lack of sympathy. And in this home influence Jane Club meets its ideal, the consummation of its purpose.

The history of the club, though brief, is interesting. Two years ago it started with seven members. A sufficient number of rooms in the building now occupied were secured and furnished by Miss Addams. From time to time as the club grew flats have been added. With thirty-five rooms now in use the indications are for a further extension before long.

Ths women who find a home in Jane Club are stenographers, clerks, sewing girls—in fact, they hold all kinds of positions. The proviso to admission is that the applicant has no income except her wages and has no home in Chicago. It is thus, strictly speaking, a home for working women. Another characteristic of the club is that the members, without exception, are in favor of unions.

The club is managed in this manner: Each member pays three dollars a week into the general treasury, which amount covers her expenses for board and room. The treasurer dispenses this money in payment for rent, bills incident to lighting, fuel and food, and reports once a month. If there is a deficit, which is rarely, if ever, the case, the next month's income is sure to cover the amount. If there is a surplus it is reserved for the extra expenses of winter or invested in a much desired piece of furniture.

There is no matron, no anybody who has a governing voice in this institution. There is a corps of officers who only perform such duties at the regular club meetings as are implied by their respective titles. The present officers, chosen for a period of six months are: President, Miss Jennie Triel; vice-president, Miss Nellie Collins; secretary, Miss Mamie Gavin; treasurer, Miss Bertha Levison. So the girls, as they familiarly call themselves, decide all questions after the usual manner at the regular fortnightly meetings, referring such matters as may come under the constitution to the regular committees, while matters outside the constitution are decided by vote. Thus each member, new as well as old, has equal voice with every other.

The club elects a stewardess every six months to superintend the culinary department. It also employs a cook and three assistants who attend to the regular duties of the house. They may or may not become members of the club. Then each member of the club pledges to give at least an hour a week to the general domestic work in addition to the daily work required to keep her own room in order. A fine of twenty-five cents is imposed for each hour thus omitted.

The club has three classes of members—the honorary, the non-resident and the resident. The honorary members may be present at club meetings but pay no dues and have no votes. The non-resident member is one, once a member of the club, who may have left the city and who continues her membership by payment of twenty-five cents a month. She is eligible for re-admission at any time. The resident members are of course the ones now living at the club who share equally the expenses, losses and benefits.

The constitution provides that any self-supporting unmarried woman, or widow without dependent children, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, who is of good moral character, shall be eligible for regular membership. Members of the club, however, who attain the age of forty-five while members of the club shall not, on that account, leave the club. Applicants for membership have their names proposed in writing, and voting by the club is conducted in the usual manner. If the applicant be accepted she pays an initiation fee of one dollar and signs the constitution.

Continuing the tour of inspection through the house, the visitor is ushered through a series of three pleasant dining-rooms, up stairs to the cozy bedrooms with painted floors, rugs, white iron bedsteads and the usual furniture. While in the basement one finds a well-equipped kitchen and a large laundry where each member attends to her individual laundry if she chooses. Added to these conveniences baths, furnaces and hot and cold water all through the house, one easily understands why Jane Club is so popular.

"Let fortune do her worst—as long as she never makes us lose our honesty and our independence," said Pope. And indeed the Jane Club member has the intense satisfaction of maintaining her independence. Subject to no rules except the implied rules of conduct which govern every person, she goes and comes as she pleases, entertains her friends—in fact, leads the same free, happy life she would in her own home.

Many of the girls attend the college extension classes at Hull House, which is in proximity. In addition, all the members have the privilege of frequenting the gymnasium on Polk street twice a week. Besides the individual social diversions, the club gives a social entertainment once a month at the gymnasium hall.

Thus the Jane Club not only admirably illustrates the principle of self-help, but offers to the homeless women of Chicago what Dryden was pleased to call "the sacred refuge of our life"—a home. It was once said of the great-hearted Hans Christian Andersen—"He loved home for he had known what it was to be homeless." And so the happy faces of the Jane Club members testify in language greater than mere words that having known what it was to be without a home in a great city, they have come to have a strong affection for Jane Club. One is instantly impressed with this wholesome air of happiness and contentment, and the interest each one has in "our" home.

APPETITE.

I am going to speak of appetite;
And when my piece is ended,
I hope you will not find a place
You think could have been mended.

Now appetite is right enough;
A great and grand possession;
If natural, entirely safe,
And will the bones put flesh on.

If artificial, then look out,
And pamper not the stranger;
An artificial appetite,
If gratified, means danger.

An appetite for ale and beer,
For brandy, gin and whisky,
Is artificial, and we know
Of all things very risky.

All dangerous things we ought to shun,
And so we think it better
To practice total abstinence,
Unto the very letter.

THE PLEDGE.

Why do we sign the triple pledge?

For own sake.

When Adam's body was formed of clay his Maker breathed upon it and breathed into it not only life, but the consciousness to know and the will to do right. How he abused this power we have read in the story of his temptation by the fair one to whom he was intrusted.

For our own sake, because this body of ours should be kept unspotted from the world—a world that will kick whom it can and respect whom it must. For the sake of bodily purity, and strength, and for the character that is strengthened with every "no," answered to the tempter who clamors for an irresolute "yes."

For our brother's sake.

"If meat maketh my brother to offend I will eat no more meat while the world standeth." Who is my brother? The rich and lordly; the poor and lowly; the friend of my young life; the foe who deals out death by the glass full is my brother in the eyes of Him who prayed, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." And for that brother's sake I will do nothing that will cause the weaker one to fall. Though I may think that I, in my strength, may look upon wine when it is red, my brother, through my influence, may go down, down, beneath the flood of intemperance. Every one has some influence for good or for evil. No man liveth to himself alone. And lest my influence be for evil I will taste, touch, handle nothing whereby my brother may offend. No mother shall weep for a son, no wife for a husband, no maid for a lover, brought low through word or deed of mine.

For Jesus' sake.

For the sake of Him who died for me I will live; and while I live King Alcohol shall fear one deadly foe. And as all over this fair land of ours girls and boys are pledging themselves to this warfare for life the tyrant well may tremble. "We shall grow up." And as Legioners grow up, and "outsiders die off" "saloons must go" out of here into nowhere.

"First we'll make war on cider,
Then wine, then ale, then beer,
And then we'll fight the larger foes
Until our coast is clear."

TRUE GENEROSITY.

They were sitting in the window seat, Magdalene and Mabel, busy with their work, and talking. "The mission band meets this week, you know," said Mabel.

"I know it," Magdalene said, with a scowl on her face; "I've got to go, I suppose, but I don't want to a bit; I haven't any money to spare to give; I'm not going to give but a cent, anyhow, I just can't afford it. Isn't this blue silk sash lovely, Mabel? It just matches my dolly's eyes. It was horridly expensive; I had to give twenty cents just for this little piece."

"Nell is going to mission band," said that small woman from the carpet, where she played with her dolly. "Nell knows all about it; mamma told her. Nell doesn't want to be a selfish girl and not give to the heathens; Nell is going to give her bestest thing."

Magdalene nudged her friend's elbow to call attention to what her darling little sister was saying, and the two listened.

"What are you going to give, Pet?" asked Magdalene at last, as the baby voice ceased its talking.

The little girl looked up with surprised eyes; she had not supposed any one was paying attention to her.

"What are you going to give to the mission band for the heathens?"

"I'm going to give my bestest thing," said the baby, with a sweet gravity, "I shall give my wubber dolly that I love."

Mabel laughed, but Magdalene looked sober. Nobody understood better than she how the "wubber dolly" was loved, and she knew that Baby Nell meant what she said.

"I think I will give my twenty-five cents, after all," she said, after a moment's silence, "and let my doll go without a fur cape; there is a lovely fur cape for sale at the doll store for twenty-five cents, and I meant to have it; but I believe I won't."

"You want to match Nell's 'wubber dolly,'" said Mabel, with a good-natured laugh, "but I don't believe you can."

CHILDREN'S DAY.

Oh, Children's Day in the summer's prime,
How bright is the world and how fair,
When over the bowers the roses climb,
And the lilies are waving in air!

We bring to our altars our gifts of flowers
And the singing birds, and say,
The happiest day of the summer hours
Is the children's Sabbath Day!

The Sabbath of lilies and roses!
Our souls draw near in praises
To the beauty of Christ in Paradise,
On the children's Sabbath Day!

To-day the censers of roses swing,
More sweet than the censers of gold;
The birds at the altar sweetly sing
As they sung in the temple of old.

We joyfully sing 'mid the birds and flowers
To the praise of God, and say,
The beautiful time of the summer hours
Is the Children's Sabbath Day!

The Sabbath of lilies and roses!
Our souls draw near in praises
To the beauty of Christ in Paradise,
On the children's Sabbath Day!

Oh, who is the Rose of Sharon to-day?
And who is the Lily white?
And whose is the love that leads our way
To the gardens of Paradise bright?

At His feet triumphant we cast our flowers,
And our off'rings there we lay,
Rejoicing the gifts of His love are ours
On the children's Sabbath Day!

The Sabbath of lilies and roses!
Our souls draw near in praises
To the beauty of Christ in Paradise,
On the Children's Sabbath Day.

—Hezekiah Butterworth.

I've been reading from the poem
God has written for the world,
There's a thought of mighty meaning
In the rose with dew empearled.

There's a message for His children,

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I was sure there were plenty of temperance dogs in our UNION SIGNAL family when I referred to them in a recent letter; and here is a bark from a notable one. I shouldn't be surprised if many of you could tell who his mistress is, and have read the beautiful story she has written:

A TEMPERANCE TERRIER.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—When my mistress was reading the last number of THE UNION SIGNAL she turned to me and said, "Here is your chance, Billy. Listen to Aunt Jane's words, 'A great deal has been written on our page about temperance cats, but what do we hear about our temperance dogs?'"

I was glad to hear this, and I want to tell the boys and girls of the Cozy Corner that I am a good, temperance dog, and well known to the W. C. T. U. of this city. I am a small, white fox-terrier, Billy, by name, and I go to many of the W. C. T. U. meetings, and often visit our lunch-room where the matron takes me behind a little screen and gives me nice things to eat. We have a coffee-cart, too, and a coffee-room, and lots of teas, especially when any of the members get married. You must forgive me for speaking so much about things to eat. I am only a dog, you know.

I try to be kind to cats, and I think Toots Willard is a beauty. But I have to be firm with them. My mistress keeps a lame crow out in the garden, and whenever he sees a cat he gives a loud caw for me to chase them away, otherwise they would kill him, for he cannot fly. I would not bite them; I only chase them over the fence.

I like to sit on my mistress' lap when she reads THE UNION SIGNAL, and I love the boys and girls that write the notes in the Cozy Corner, for I hear that when they grow up they are going to make men stop getting drunk. I am afraid of drunken men, for they kick dogs.

Though I am only a dog, my mistress says that I can be of some use in the world, and she takes me to a Band of Hope and a Loyal Temperance Legion, and to the Poor Asylum where there is a poor woman who seems to find some comfort in me. She is blind and nearly stone deaf, so she can neither see nor hear, but my mistress takes me by the nape of the neck and lifts me in her lap, and then the poor woman says, "Oh, the dear, little dog!" and she tells me how she feels, and whether her eyes are worse or her back or head, and my mistress stands by and hears it all.

Good-by, dear boys and girls, I seldom write a long letter for my paws get tired of holding the pen.

There are plenty of other temperance dogs in Canada. I used to play with one in Ottawa, that belongs to the Dominion W. C. T. U. treasurer. Snap Tilton is his name.

Yours, with three barks for temperance,
BILLY SAUNDERS.

28 Carleton St., Halifax, N. S.

A Cozy Corner salute to Billy over the border. We wish him long life, and wish every temperance family had such a good dog friend. Your,

Aunt Jane

IOWA'S NEW LIQUOR LAW.

For the benefit of many of our readers who may not have an opportunity to see the text of the law concerning which so much is being said pro and con, we give the leading features of the bill recently passed by the Iowa legislature:

In places where the selling of liquor is permitted, a tax of six hundred dollars per annum is levied upon the person carrying on the business, and also upon the premises where liquor is sold.

In cities of five thousand inhabitants and upwards, the would-be vender of intoxicating drinks must obtain the consent of sixty-five per cent of the legal voters who voted at the last preceding general election, residing within the county and without the corporate limits of the city, also the consent of a majority of the voters within the city, and of all the resident freeholders owning property within fifty feet of where the saloon is to be situated.

No saloon can be located within three hundred feet of a church or school.

In towns of less than five thousand inhabitants, the consent of a majority of the voters of the county, including those of the town, must be obtained.

The saloon-keeper is required to file with the county auditor a bond in the sum of three thousand dollars as pledge of his observance of all the conditions of the act, and also as surety that he will pay the damages resulting from the sale of liquors on his premises.

The place in which liquors are sold must be a single room with but one entrance or exit, and that upon a public street.

The bar must be in plain sight from the street, without screens, blinds, painted windows or other device to obstruct the view.

No amusements of any kind, as cards, dice, billiards, music, etc., can be furnished in the same room or in one adjoining.

No woman can be employed about the saloon.

The place cannot open before five a. m., and must close by ten p. m.

It cannot be opened, nor can any sales be made on Sunday, legal holidays or election days.

No minor, drunkard, or intoxicated person can be allowed in the rooms, nor can sales be made to such persons, or to those who have taken a cure for drunkenness.

Sales may not be made to any person whose "wife, husband, child, brother, sister, guardian, ward over fourteen years of age, or employer shall, by written notice, forbid such sales."

It will be seen at once that this is a very good local option law. The restrictions are as comprehensive and satisfactory as can be found in connection with such laws. The advocates of the law, and many of them are people who would vote for prohibition rather than for license in its ordinary form, claim that under its provisions Iowa, practically, is as near to prohibition as she was under the previous prohibitory statute for, they say, the places which will now have liquor selling with the consent of the inhabitants, under prohibition had free whisky in open defiance of the law, and without the restrictions which the new law will impose. There will, therefore, be no more liquor selling, perhaps rather less, than before, and what there is will be under better control.

We know personally one of the best, most highly respected citizens of Iowa who takes this view. He is a man who always gave the prohibitory law his full support. He lives in a town which had prohibition long before the state had it as a whole. On the several occasions on which the advocates of "personal liberty" attempted to force upon this prohibition town a saloon, the inhabitants held mass-meetings, arrested the offender, seized his goods and gave themselves up to the business of driving out the violator of their rights, not resting until the offender was glad to promise to leave, never to return. This man was always one of the most earnest on the side of right, and he now declares that he has no patience with a Prohibitionist who finds fault with the new law, because practically it reaches the same ends that the prohibitory law did, viz., it gives prohibition to the districts where public sentiment will enforce prohibition, while the districts where the law always went by default will have liquor selling just as they always have had it.

And this without doubt is the sentiment of a large portion, perhaps the majority, of the best citizens of Iowa. The reasoning sounds plausible. Why, then, do Prohibitionists regard it as a backward movement?

With due respect for the good people who conscientiously champion the law in question, with full acknowledgment of the good points of the law itself, we must still hold that Iowa has taken a step backwards. If the liquor traffic is an illegitimate business, if it is a species of robbery just as much as highway robbery itself, prohibition is the only attitude which the state can rightfully take towards it.

The business of the state is to make men just in their relations to one another. Whenever it fails to do this, whenever it acknowledges itself unable to do it, it abdicates its authority. Anything but prohibition of evil is compromise with evil, and compromise with evil will result in evil, absolute and unmitigated, so long as "right is right and God is God." It is very easy, of course, to pooh at this sentimental theory, but the end proves that what looked like impracticable sentiment, if based upon God's laws, proves to be the only thing practical. So it will be in the present case, and we venture now the prediction that the people of Iowa will find to their sorrow that it was easier to enforce prohibition than it will be to enforce the present law, and that the prohibitory law, unenforced as it undoubtedly was in some localities, was yet far more successful than the new law will be.

It is generally admitted that, except in a few localities, prohibition was as well enforced as most laws; we predict that under the new law the territory of prohibition will be very much less than it was. Under the old law license was not possible; any one who sold liquor did it in violation of the law, and was liable to be punished. Hence it would rarely be attempted, except in the regions where the weakness of prohibitory sentiment was notorious. If it was attempted elsewhere it was comparatively easy to bring the offender to justice. Now there is always the possibility of securing license.

The aggressive liquor traffic will be sure to bring the question up and in many formerly prohibition districts, by bribery, fraud and the methods in which they are so well versed, the liquor men will be almost sure to carry the day. Nor will it be found an easy thing to enforce the restrictions, unless Iowa has a species of liquor sellers unknown to the world elsewhere. Without exception, they are the most lawless members of society. They never keep a law that they dare to break. Hence, we prophesy that, except possibly when the law first goes into effect, the restrictions will be very little observed.

We fully expect to hear that the saloons of Iowa, like those of Chicago, run Sundays and the one-entrance clause will soon be forgotten. Screens, etc., will be the invariable accompaniment of the bar, and friends of the rum-seller's victim will find great difficulty in collecting damages. The fact is, experience proves that, hard as it is to enforce prohibition, it is easier to prohibit than to regulate the liquor traffic.

But even though we could see no reason for distrusting the law, the fact that saloon-keepers favor it would be sufficient to condemn it in our eyes. So long ago as 1888 when high license bills were pending in the legislatures of New York and New Jersey, a prominent distiller of Omaha wrote thus concerning Iowa: "We have had a great deal of business in the state of Iowa both before it was prohibition and since, and we can say positively that there is very little satisfaction in doing business in that state now. Ever so often the goods are seized and it causes a great deal of delay and trouble to get them released; and then there is a fear of not getting money for the goods and all the forms we have to go through make it very annoying business. It is like running a railroad under ground. You don't know where you are going or what is ahead."

Since the passage of the recent Iowa law, the Voice has published many letters concerning it from liquor dealers. Without exception, they regard the law as a great improvement over prohibition, notwithstanding the fact (?) which they are always harping upon that "prohibition doesn't prohibit." Our policy has always been that when we find out what liquor dealers do not want done, we immediately go and do it. In this case the legislators of Iowa with the "statesmanship" which seems to characterize the men of this generation have found what the liquor dealers wanted done, at least what they greatly preferred to prohibition, and have gone and done it.

INCONSISTENCY OF LAW.

The short-sighted and contradictory policy of our rulers in befriending a recognized evil to the extent of giving it legal protection, and at the same time endeavoring to suppress by legislative enactment the natural and inevitable outcome of such action, sometimes places them in an undignified, not to say ridiculous, predicament.

This free and democratic government aims—so we are told on Fourth of Julys and other patriotic occasions—to secure to all men their "inalienable rights," among which are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. And yet we find it taking measures to secure greater permanence and stability to an institution which in its very nature is destructive of these rights.

Furthermore, when loss of life, liberty or happiness is directly traceable to this destroying influence, we find it providing for the punishment of the man who conducts this institution by the favor and sanction of this same government. The law in dealing with the drink problem certainly manifests a "contrariness" which is, to say the least, illogical and confusing.

To cite a case in point. In a drunken quarrel recently, one man killed another. This fact of itself is too sadly frequent in our rum-cursed land to call forth newspaper comment except perhaps in the immediate locality where it occurred. But it sometimes happens the event possesses more than usual interest, and is of sufficient importance to be reported by the associated press. In the case referred to the murderer having been found guilty of manslaughter and sentenced to fourteen years imprisonment, his wife promptly commenced suit for ten thousand dollars damages against a saloon-keeper of that place. The plaintiff alleges that the trouble which led up to the killing occurred in his saloon, that her husband was intoxicated at the time with liquor supplied him by the defendant, and that under the dram-shop act of that state, the liquor seller is responsible for the crime and for the consequent loss to her of "the services of her husband."

We are always glad of any move which tends to rivet public attention upon the practical workings of the great crime-producer of modern civilization. It would be well for the cause of prohibition if damage suits were more common, and that more often the drink-seller could be made to feel the consequences of his degrading occupation in his most sensitive point—his pocket.

But deserving of censure as the saloon-keeper undoubtedly is, is it altogether fair to hold him solely responsible? Who gives the saloon a right to exist? Whose voice declares that the rum traffic shall be a "protected industry"? By whose authority does this national institution for the manufacture of murderers and all other kinds of criminals carry on its work?

The liquor traffic in our country to-day is in the nature of a contract between the government and the liquor-seller. From first to last—from the great whisky and beer trusts, which control legislative bodies, to the smallest retail dealer whose vile concoctions are called by courtesy "drinks"—it is a business partnership, and according to all commercial precedent both parties should be held responsible for results. If a city or state undertake to protect the saloon for a "consideration" does it not savor somewhat of inconsistency and unfairness when, realizing the dangerous tendencies of the business, it passes a law making the rumseller liable for damages?

It seems to us a poor "protection" which seizes upon a share of the plunder and then makes a scapegoat of the "protected."

Suppose, for instance, the wife of every saloon-made criminal—to say nothing of saloon-made paupers and saloon-made mental and physical incapables—were to bring suit under legislative acts against the saloon-keeper. The latter would then begin to discover the peculiar kind of protection afforded him by law. His business would soon be "run into the ground." Government authorities, federal, state and municipal, all admit the saloon to be a breeding place for crime and pauperism and anarchy. Why then not give wider scope to the dram-shop act (if we have one at all), and make the drink-seller responsible to city or state for financial loss involved in the care and maintenance of its saloon-made pauper and criminal population?

Our legislators must see, if they are not willfully blind, that when they enact laws with a view to checking the evil consequences of a legalized liquor traffic they are vainly striving to beat back an onrushing torrent, the floodgates of which their own hands have opened. Having deceived themselves and the people with the idea that this evil is "necessary," they endeavor to regulate it by weaving a tangled web of legal enactments which only serves to make the labyrinth in which they find themselves more bewildering.

If the voters—the governing power of these United States—decide to countenance and support the liquor traffic the only logical thing for them to do is to accept the consequences. Drunkards and murderers are the natural and legitimate outgrowths of the dram-shop. The saloon-keeper's business, under our present system, is as legal as the tailor's business.

When we hear a man denouncing the work of the saloon, commending the action of the wife who brings a damage suit, and declaring that it is right and just for the drink-seller to "pay over a part of his ill-gotten gains" to the family of the pauper or criminal, and know that he votes regularly with a party which befriends and protects the saloon, we marvel at his obtuseness, and are moved to ask, Who are our drunkard-makers, who our criminal-makers? It is time that the denunciations of all foes of the dram-shop were directed less against the saloon-keeper, culpable though he be, and more against the power which makes the saloon possible—to the really responsible person, the sovereign voter.

Eye-openers are what anti-liquor men who are still in political thralldom need, and damage suits may aid in convincing some of them of the error of their ways; may show the American citizen that talk as he may about the "majesty of the law," one jewel is lacking in its crown—and that is consistency.

THE RIGHT USE OF DECORATION DAY.

The New York Christian Advocate, with whose editorial utterances THE UNION SIGNAL is not always able to agree, especially upon matters involving any phase of "the woman question," has spoken such wise words in its issue of May 24 that we cannot refrain from expressing our heartiest indorsement.

In an editorial entitled "Union Soldiers to the Rear," is quoted the following letter from the New York Sun:

To the Editor of the Sun:

SIR:—As Decoration Day approaches, some fitting tribute should be paid to those who for many years have championed the cause of woman's emancipation in Congress and the various state legislatures.

The advocates of woman suffrage should see that the graves of those who have passed away are decorated each year with immortelle wreaths and flowers. Soldiers in a great moral warfare, who must face ridicule and the sneers of the multitude for generations, must have more courage and endurance than those who face the cannon's mouth for a few hours on the field of battle.

Women in all the states should take pains to get the names and photographs of their champions, and have them framed in groups and hung up in public buildings, as well as in their own homes, for the admiration and gratitude of coming generations.

If the members of the present constitutional convention in New York had the assurance that they would be thus honored by their countrywomen, the word "male" would no doubt be speedily expunged from Article II, Section 1, of the Constitution.

ELIZABETH CADY STANTON.

While by no means prepared to indorse the Advocate's indictment of "cold-blooded" as applied to the above, we still feel that Mrs. Stanton has made a great mistake in sending out this letter.

Decoration Day, both North and South, is set apart for a specific purpose—to honor the graves of those who gave their lives for their country in the late civil war. Because each section believed the other to be mistaken in that warfare does not alter the fact that both were actuated by intensest patriotism, a patriotism which stood the supreme test—the laying down of life.

None other than soldiers have a rightful claim upon this especial day. Not, of necessity, because they were braver than all others, but because, when the exigency arose, they spared not their own lives, and the day is set apart to their memory. There is, certainly, both truth and justice in the following quotation from the editorial in question:

While "soldiers in a great moral warfare" are, indeed, entitled to credit for courage, to describe the condition of a soldier who for many years knows not whether at morning, noon or night he will be called to dare and do at risk of liberty or life, as facing "the cannon's mouth for a few hours on the field of battle," is so to misrepresent the stress of soul in such a conflict as to excite wonder.

"Soldiers in a great moral warfare" may go, after ridicule and sneers, each night to their own homes, where wife and children may comfort them and give them courage for the next battle; but these men, many a night, lay like cattle upon the ground, snatching a few hours' sleep, or failing "to lose themselves" at all before the turning of the lottery wheel whose prizes might be life, honor and the gratitude of those who would never disparage their deeds, or death and honor, or, as in thousands upon thousands of cases, death and an unnamed grave.

Thank God, the war is ended! It is so fully ended that not even the pyrotechnic breath of some isolated Decoration Day or Fourth of July orator can revive its dead embers. The graves of the Blue and the Gray are decorated North and South alike by hands which once carried the musket, or which still feel the farewell clasp of those nearer to them than life itself. We stand one country today, and white ribbon women, more fully perhaps, than others, know how truly we are one. We know how the bond of "a great moral purpose" has drawn us together, linking each to the other "with hooks of steel."

But, just because we know this, because we see sectional differences receding into the dim past, because we rejoice in one country, we would honor the graves of those who laid down their lives for that country; we would see that one day out of the three hundred and sixty-five is kept sacred to them alone.

Decoration Day is neither a feast day nor a fast day; it is a day of memorial. Its most sacred use is not to dwell upon the past in a spirit of pride or of rancor; not to refight long fought battles; not even to call to remembrance the time when the two halves of our great country could be counted foemen, but, with tender memories of those who have fallen, to turn from their flower-strewn graves, to preach the blessedness of peace; to show the needlessness of war; to point to the higher victories, the more glorious consummations which are before us as a nation.

Doubtless the day is coming, when to "soldiers in a great moral warfare" shall be accorded a day of like import; when the world shall come to realize what it owes to its reformers. But that day will not be hastened, rather retarded by attempting to force the claims of reformers upon an anniversary which is sacredly set apart to another purpose.

We are sure Mrs. Stanton did not realize how very much like "a bribe" her last sentence sounds; and we are equally sure, to the honor of the state of New York, that if the members of her constitutional convention "vote to expunge the word male from Article II, Section 1, of the constitution," as we are earnestly hoping and believing they may, it will be because of the tardy awakening of their innate sense of justice and not in the hope of "post mortem decoration."

PLEDGE.—"I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquor, as a beverage, including Wine, Beer and Cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same."

QUERY.—Will you please explain the meaning of "Postal Union"?

ANSWER.—The Universal Postal Union was established in 1874, at a conference of the United States and all the European countries. The object was to simplify all postal arrangements. At a subsequent conference in Paris in 1878, the additional countries of Egypt, British India, Persia, Japan, Liberia, Brazil, Peru, Mexico and the colonies of Great Britain and Europe joined the union. Great reduction has been realized in foreign postage.

Q.—What is the age of consent?

A.—It is an age which legislatures name as the limit of childhood innocence in girls, after which they are supposed to know the full gravity and life-long consequences of an act by which they may consent to their own ruin. In some states this age is only nine years, in many, only thirteen! The W. C. T. U. has labored to raise the age to at least fifteen years, and has been successful in a few states. The law is enacted for the protection of evil men to whom no adequate punishment can be meted out, provided the child is above the age specified by the law.

Of all the sophistries which the deluded human mind ever invented, the greatest was seen by On Duty recently at the Midwinter Fair in San Francisco. In a beautifully gilded and decorated wine-room, which purported to represent California's "chief industry," were these words in artistic mural lettering:

"Good wine makes good blood;
Good blood causes good thoughts;
Good thoughts bring forth good works;
Good works carry a man to heaven—
Ergo, good wine carries a man to heaven."

The inexorable rules of logic, whereby a false conclusion must follow a false premise were never more forcibly illustrated.

Other inspiring (?) mottoes which adorned this wine-room were as follows:

"Good company, good wine, good welcome, can make good people."

"To be, or not to be,
That is the question,—
Sit down, my friend, and drink,
It helps digestion."

"Let us have wine and mirth and laughter, Sermons and soda-water the day after."

At a late notable meeting of women, one of the speakers was detained at home and sent her husband to read her paper. In introducing him, the quick-witted chairwoman said, "We will 'suffer' him to speak, provided he will speak so he can be heard." The speaker as well as the audience did not fail to see the point.

"Which is the 'foreign nation' in the thought of God?" pertinently asked a foreign missionary in a great audience recently. The arrested thought of the audience was apparent on every face during the effective pause that followed.

A white-ribboner was accosted by a clergyman "of the contrary part," with the words: "Why do you go against the Holy Scriptures by your advocacy of total abstinence?" "Pray cite an example of Holy Scripture," was her prompt reply. "Wine that maketh glad the heart of man," was the ready quotation; whereupon the temperance advocate made answer: "Please give us the rest of that passage." "And oil that makes his face to shine." "If you, my honored friend, are loyal to the letter of Holy Writ, I shall expect when next I meet you to see your face aglow, and I am surprised that one so zealous for the 'lively oracles' does not illustrate his appreciation of olive oil in a more practical manner than you have yet done." Whereupon the excellent dominie proceeded on his way silenced but not convinced, and our temperance friend went on her way rejoicing.

On the principle that every member of the social compact must be protected from possible injury by any member, is based the rationale of every law on any statute book.—Lady Henry Somerset.

In addition to the six churches which On Duty has previously reported, as having memorial temperance windows, three others are announced. The first seems to be the oldest in this country. Here is what the former pastor, Rev. A. K. Felton, says about it: "Possibly ours was first. The First Lutheran church of Philipsburg, Pa., of which the writer was pastor at the time, was dedicated November 18, 1888. It contains a window bearing this inscription, 'Presented by the W. C. T. U. of Philipsburg, in honor of their president, Mrs. A. C. Felton.'" The next window is also located in Ohio, and is described by Mrs. Mary E. Hart as follows: "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Hicksville, O., placed, at its own expense, a beautiful stained glass window in the United Brethren Church of that city, dedicated April 3, 1892. It is a front window to the right of the pulpit, the upper part bearing the initials, W. C. T. U. It was made to order, at a cost of fifty dollars. We think it a good way to keep our work before the people and is money well invested." One who helped to place it there thus describes the third window: "In the front of the Methodist church of Evansville, Wis., there is a beautiful circular window dedicated to the W. C. T. U., and paid for by members of the union personally contributing. It was placed there in October, 1890, and bears the initials, W. C. T. U., also the words, 'For God and Home and Every Land,' and the beautiful emblem, the Madonna and child." ON DUTY.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

NEBRASKA.

EXECUTIVE MEETING.

The semi-annual meeting of the state executive was held in South Omaha, April 19 and 20, and was well attended when we consider the unfavorable circumstances of this hard year.

You know it is said we learn something new every day. I certainly felt the truth of this saying when I learned by the actual experience of a mile of track walking that there is no B. and M. depot at South Omaha, but one must go on the Union Pacific road or else go on to Omaha and return on the motor. I am glad to know this in case I go there again, but the knowledge does not erase the memory of the long, lonely twilight walk over the prairie and through the freight yards of South Omaha. The hearty welcome of Mrs. Lottie Towl at her home, as she made me most comfortable for the night, went far, however, to mitigate the unpleasant experience.

South Omaha union has recently been revived and has taken hold of work anew. So they were ready with a most hearty welcome, and a two days' meeting was very successful and greatly enjoyed, notwithstanding the cold and rainy weather, and the close proximity of the Kelly army of commonwealers. As to the weather, the citizens told us their supply of pleasant weather had been used up for the brewers' convention a week or so previous, and knowing us to be very partial to cold water, they ventured to offer us an unlimited supply!

The Kelly army was no nearer than Council Bluffs where they were awaiting transportation through Iowa, but rumor filled the streets of South Omaha with them, seized freight trains and engines and kept every one under intense excitement. The brave ones, however, came out to the meetings, and we had good audiences each evening.

The first evening an address of welcome was given by Mrs. Rev. Ross on behalf of the W. C. T. U. while her husband followed with an impromptu welcome from the churches. These were responded to in a very bright, pleasing address by Mrs. Nellie Richardson, of Lincoln.

Mrs. Jones, editor of the Union Worker, read a very interesting history of "How a Union Flourished without the Union Worker." This was so good and so applicable to some unions in the state that the paper was ordered printed in the Union Worker. I hope it may be read outside our own state. The fine singing was furnished by a talented quartette.

Friday evening was made most interesting by a paper from Mrs. Pugh, of Omaha, on parlor meetings, of which department she is state superintendent; a model ten-minute address by Mrs. T. W. Pease, of Albion, president of the eighth district; an address by Mrs. C. M. Woodward, and a paper on "Suffrage," by Mrs. S. M. Walker, both of whom gave great satisfaction. A feature of this evening was singing by a large number of high school pupils led by their teacher.

The business sessions of the committee were very interesting, finance being the great subject of discussion. The assessment plan was agreed upon for present emergencies, and a plan for making the Union Worker self-supporting was discussed and will be presented to the convention next fall. Thrilling reports of work in the social purity department were presented by Mrs. Clark of Omaha, Mrs. Leader, of Chadron, and Mrs. Brakefield, of Red Cloud. It was incidentally mentioned that Rev. Dr. Lasby, of St. Paul M. E. church, Lincoln, had preached four "fearless and powerful" sermons against the social evil and its management during the campaign against it in that city this spring.

Miss Fairbrother, of Omaha, was present the second day and distributed copies of the paper she edits, the Woman's Weekly. This is "a journal for the up-to-date woman," as its heading reads, and is the organ of the "Omaha Woman's Club," a new organization of several hundred members, which has started out most auspiciously. The paper is a handsome, well edited sheet, soon to be enlarged. With a liberality of spirit we are glad to see, it freely divides its space with various organizations, the W. C. T. U. being given a whole page which is edited by Mrs. Mary Moody Pugh, one of our state workers.

ITEMS.

Mother Putnam was present looking as young as ever.

It was suggested that the unions furnish each minister and editor with a copy of the state minutes.

Program committee for state convention consists of Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Dailey, Mrs. Pugh, with one member to be selected from Lincoln, the place of meeting.

Mrs. O. H. Jones, editor of Union Worker, was present, accompanied by little Miss Helen, who seemed quite at home in her first public meeting. She fell readily into the ways of the committee and made herself heard occasionally, just like the others.

Two bills were decided upon—equal suffrage and raising the age of protection to eighteen years—to be brought before the legislature next fall.

The wearing of the white ribbon was emphasized, as it so much needs to be.

The B. & M. was made the official route to the National Convention.

Mrs. Bryant, superintendent of Chinese work, read an interesting letter from a Chinese student of Bellevue College, who had gone back to China to be married. She also reported fifty dollars, sent by the Chinese Sunday-school of Omaha to support a colporteur in China.

A new departure in the work of the W. C. T. U. has been made in Omaha, from which much is expected by the women there. In April a union of the unions was held.

From the reminiscences of the early days of the work given by Mrs. Jardine, it was learned that the W. C. T. U. was organized in Omaha in 1878, with twelve members. In 1885 the old Buckingham playhouse was converted into a gospel temperance headquarters, with lunch-room. When new unions were formed in other parts of the city, the mother society chose the name of the Buckingham union, which it has since retained.

To the women of the various unions, it seemed that a time had come when better work could be done by consolidation of the forces. After considerable discussion of the subject, this was decided upon, and now there is but one union in Omaha—a consolidation of the five or six that existed before, and it is hoped and expected that the work will go on with greater zeal, less machinery and consequently less friction. We trust the step taken will result in good to the cause. The officers of the new organization are, Mrs. E. L. Wood, president; Mrs. E. M. Covell, vice-president; Mrs. Mary M. Pugh, recording secretary; Mrs. Margaret Park, corresponding secretary; Mrs. F. Ada Tucker, treasurer. Fifteen superintendents have since been appointed. A public reception to the teachers of the public schools will be given this month, for which elaborate preparations are being made.

The cause of scientific temperance instruction will surely receive new strength and interest from both the teachers and the public.

MISSISSIPPI.

ELEVENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

On Friday evening, May 4, a goodly number of the Mississippi W. C. T. U. assembled in the court-house at Canton, Madison county. An audience large enough to be inspiring was present, and with addresses of welcome and responses we opened the eleventh annual meeting. The pastor of the M. E. church, Rev. L. S. Jones, gave us a cordial and rousing temperance welcome, which sent us home with a thrill in our hearts presaging a fine convention.

Miss Virginia Bransford, in behalf of local W. C. T. U., made a winning welcome speech, which was responded to by Mrs. N. N. Somerville, of Greenville, for the state, with her usual strength and clearness. The opening address was made by Mrs. M. M. Snell, who is a great favorite in Canton, having just closed a most successful evangelistic meeting there in conjunction with Rev. W. M. McIntosh, of Alabama.

On Saturday the convention was called to order by the president, Mrs. L. S. Mount, of Greenville, with the usual devotional exercises, the appointment of committees, etc. Mrs. Mount's address is always a treat to the convention, so clear in its recommendations and so brave in voicing her own advanced thought on public questions, where she takes her stand as a leader should. This she did unequivocally on the suffrage question, and though the Mississippi W. C. T. U. has never adopted suffrage as a line of work, during a heated discussion of a suffrage resolution there were few delegates who did not declare themselves as suffragists.

Many of our old officers were present, among them the ever welcome face of our beloved Mrs. M. E. Ervin, the pioneer of W. C. T. U. work in our state.

The Crusade prayer meeting conducted with great power and sweetness by Mrs. Snell, set the keynote to a deep spirituality during the convention.

On Saturday night Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman (we Mississippi women love her) gave one of her splendid addresses on "The Perfect Woman," showing conclusively that the 19th century woman of to-day, in her highest development, filled the Bible standard with much completeness. This in such strong Anglo-Saxon that Canton had food for thought for many days. Again on Sunday night she offered "strong meat" (no milk for babes) on the position of woman in the Bible. Nothing else was talked of on the street for several days. Such sowing will yield fruit.

Our sermon on Sunday morning was delivered to a crowded house in Brother Jones' church, by our Mrs. Snell; nothing more magnetic and persuasive could have been given. Her power lies in her tenderness. Long may she live to work for the Master.

On Monday night a Demorest medal contest for a gold medal gave its fine object lesson effectively to a large house. Then the convention adjourned to a reception given by Mrs. Anna Davis Smith in her beautiful home, which will linger delightfully in our memories.

Y night, as usual, closed the convention with songs, recitations and presentation of banner to the best working union of the year. Natchez, under its faithful, earnest president, Mrs. T. Otis Baker, captured the prize. Miss Belle Kearney delivered her address to a densely packed house, many standing until a late hour, held by her passionate, burning appeal for a clean, pure life. We predict that she will capture Canton yet. Many signed the pledge when she was done. The society young men were unanimous in wishing "the beautiful Y girl" would come back to Canton.

The constitution and by-laws were revised, district presidents were appointed and an earnest effort made to start a paper of our own, the size of the Woman's Column, also a Mercy Home for women on the order of Florence Crittenton homes, was planned to be started with funds remaining from sale of lot in Jackson.

Greenville was the banner union for work. Only five counties remain under liquor dominion in the state. As our men give us the credit for this great result we resolved to concentrate work upon the wet counties and begin campaigns to keep dry the territory already gained. There were present sixty-seven voting delegates, fifteen visiting delegates and five L. T. L's.

The animus of the convention was inspiring and full of promise that Mississippi should not go backward in the temperance fight.

The next convention meets in Natchez and we intend that Natchez shall never forget it.

In addition to the customary resolutions, one of gratitude for Miss Willard's restoration to health and promise of speedy return to us was adopted, also one affirming our faith in Mrs. Carse which we hope to show in a substantial manner before the close of the year.

The following extracts from Miss Kearney's report will interest Mississippi readers:

"Grenada, Canton and Jackson are the only places in which there is an open saloon on the I. C. Railroad between Memphis and Osyka. I have lately made a pilgrimage from Pickens almost to the Louisiana line, afterward going to Natchez, Fayette, Port Gibson and Vicksburg, organizing new unions and reorganizing old ones, holding eight business meetings and delivering sixteen addresses. At Goodman, a W. C. T. U. was formed of forty-two members; at Terry, of fifty-six; at Wesson, of thirty-two, and one hundred and forty-six pledges secured. At McComb City a series of meetings were held, cordially assisted by Rev. M. L. Burton, which resulted in the formation of a Loyal Temperance Legion of fifty-six members, and a strong W. C. T. U., with adult pledge-signers amounting to seventy-three. Everywhere the ministers were loyal and helpful, hesitating at no sacrifice, faltering at no demand. They are great towers of strength to the temperance cause, active, untiring, progressive and aggressive. The faithful few among the W. C. T. U. of Vicksburg are holding their own against overwhelming odds. In Natchez, the temperance forces are gaining ground rapidly, and are doing telling work. The Y's there now number over one hundred, and are accomplishing a wonderful amount of good under the able leadership of their president, Mrs. T. Otis Baker. Mrs. Snell has lately caused an arousement in Jackson, and through the local option election soon to be held in Hinds county we can easily foretell the ejectment of grog-shops from the capital city. Canton has been the scene of a desperate struggle within the last few months between the powers of light and of darkness, with the happy result of the powers of light being far in the ascendency. The saloon-keepers are thoroughly intimidated. They have arranged their property so as to be able, at a moment's notice, to put it on the market and 'take unto themselves wings and fly away' to more congenial climes."

Our president and Mrs. Snell went before the legislature, and plead for constitutional prohibition, and though they did not get it, they left the impression that the women are awake, and know what they want, and they know they will get it some day.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

Such excellent reports of the county conventions have reached me, I wish space permitted them to be given entire.

First to summon the comrades was San Diego county union, and the gathering was at Escondido, April 9 to 11, with our state president in attendance. Some of the work accomplished was reviewed in reports from sixteen departments. Mrs. Ella Whitmore, county president, gave an address so replete in suggestions and pointed in advice that by request it was published in full. The number of unions in the county remain the same with an increase in membership. By their effort a local option ordinance was secured, and they now wish for the ballot to enforce it. The San Diego Bay union of unions has prospered beyond anticipation, and at each all day meeting new members are enrolled. A Fourth of July grove celebration is suggested to "round up" the remaining five unions into a second union of unions. After expressing gratitude because the one hundred dollar pledge to our state temple had been paid, Mrs. Whitmore suggested the filling of mite-boxes for the Chicago Temple, or, better, raising another one hundred dollars to engrave the name of the county union upon a Willard Hall tablet. Last year the county received the state prize banner for the best work reported in scientific temperance instruction department.

The second evening of the convention was given to addresses, first by Mrs. Roberts, of Bonsell, on "The Women of the Bible," followed by a very able one from Rev. Amanda Deyo, of San Diego (a recent valuable addition to the union), and another of deep interest from our state president, Mrs. Mary E. Garbutt.

On the last evening the Y's and Legioners possessed the platform and discoursed upon such themes as "Narcotics," "A Girl's Duties to her Associates," and "Am I My Brother's Keeper?"

Los Angeles county union came next and held its annual convention in the pretty village of Compton, April 18-20. The sisters of Compton received the convention in their large, unfinished hall ("which represented more heroism and self-sacrifice than any wealthy community can understand") and literally spread their nets—one upon the wall festooned with vines and baited with crimson blooms.

A fellowship meeting full of a tender spirit of consecration opened the session and gave the keynote to all that followed. Reports from county officers showed that thirty-two unions were active, with sixteen L. T. L's, and that $172.20 had passed through the treasury. Sometime we will learn to pay all money into the local treasury first.

A local presidents' parliament—like Dorcas' garments—evidenced abundant labors for good. A delightful song service opened the evening program, followed by an impressive devotional by Mrs. Fenton, of Glendora, and graceful words of greeting from Mrs. Leech for the Compton union. Words witty, wise and practical were termed "Snap Shots," the first being truly aimed by our state president.

Thursday morning "Benefits of Organization"—for mothers, young people and children, was ably treated by Mrs. Josephine Marlatt, president of Los Angeles union of unions; Mrs. A. C. Broadbeck, state Y superintendent, and Mrs. Ellen D. Blair, National chalk-talker. Mrs. S. A. McClees, National superintendent soldiers and sailors, enthusiastically presented her department work.

Our chief of Ransom Home work, Mrs. C. A. Lorbeer, gave the cheering news that the home was out of debt, matron's salary all paid and money in the treasury; a leaflet giving history, work and needs of the home having aided the cause much.

A memorial service led by Mrs. A. B. Southwick, was solemnly sweet and the closing prayer tenderly sympathetic.

The election of officers resulted in the reëlection of Mrs. Emma Cash, president; Mrs. L. H. Meserve, vice-president; Mrs. Laura T. Carter, recording secretary, and Miss Eva Reese, treasurer. Mrs. J. E. Terpenning, of Pasadena, was chosen corresponding secretary.

By resolution the convention "indorsed the action of the Woman's Purity League, of Washington, D. C., in praising Judge Wilson's recent plea for purity, and join them in demanding the same standard of purity for men and women."

Thursday evening was given to the subject of franchise, Dr. Ella Whipple-Marsh, of Pasadena, answering the question, "Why give the ballot to women?" and Mrs. Alice M. McComas, of Los Angeles, following with a fine address. Pomona received the first, and Los Angeles Central the second prize for best work done in franchise department offered by Dr. Whipple-Marsh, county superintendent.

Eighteen departments of work were chosen for the coming year and well womaned. Papers by Mrs. Lucy M. Hutton on scientific temperance instruction and Mrs. Tilla H. Lodge on temperance literature gave evidence of what had been and more that ought to be done.

The president made an earnest plea for money to purchase a quilt made by a feeble union, and when she finished was quite abashed by being made the recipient of the same. Compton's silent fishing was equally successful, for they were surprised by a gift of twenty-five dollars toward the payment of their hall, with grateful thanks for their kind entertainment of "the best convention ever held by the county union."

At Riverside, April 25 and 26, there was a family gathering, when the "old folks" came to visit the new household. In other words, the second annual convention of Riverside county union was enthusiastically celebrated, with San Bernardino county sisters as guests. The exercises were held in the Baptist church, with Mrs. E. J. Davis, county president, presiding.

Mrs. Mary Potter presented the subject "The Legal Progress of the Enforcement of Prohibition Ordinance," and Mrs. N. P. J. Button, state vice-president, opened the discussion thereupon, after which Mr. Anderson, district attorney, explained the enforcement of the ordinance.

Reports showed a growth from the original three to thirteen active unions, with thirty-four delegates in convention. A resolution condemning the immorality of men in high authority was passed by a rising vote. Mrs. Emma L. Cameron, of Colton, and Mrs. Rice, of Rialto, by request led devotional exercises. Discussions followed the reading of excellent papers on "Parliamentary Drill," "Social Purity," "How Best to Interest Unions," and "Narcotics." Of the last, a delegate writes, "This paper was not consumed with its smoke, but still burns into the hearts of its hearers." "The Press in Relation to Our Children," was considered, and Mrs. D. F. Barrett, state superintendent of Sabbath Observance, impressed the audience with a better way of keeping the day of rest.

After a short, informal reception, the evening audience was delightfully entertained by the L. T. Legions and their friends, members from East Riverside participating. Mrs. Ida Russell, state superintendent of juvenile department, gave an interesting report of the county Legion work.

Thursday was given to business, the reports of officers and superintendents. As the county president and others declined to serve longer, the election resulted as follows: President, Mrs. S. A. Webber; vice-president, Mrs. M. E. Hewitt; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Lizzie M. Reynolds, East Riverside; recording secretary, Mrs. Mattie Black; and treasurer, Mrs. Plimpton, reëlected. An invitation from San Jacinto for the semi-annual convention in October was accepted.

Kern county, with its three unions, held its convention at Bakersfield M. E. church, April 26. At the opening devotionals, Mrs. Brown, superintendent of Chinese work, voiced the important truth that "much of our success is due to the devotional exercises of our meetings."

Mrs. Emma Cash, state organizer, was present and gave a brief talk on parliamentary usage in the afternoon, and in the evening delivered one of her interesting and instructive addresses.

Scientific temperance instruction, purity in literature and art and franchise were taught through able papers, by Mesdames Stockton, Candee and Fish, while Mrs. McLeod furnished one on "Our Emblems." Mrs. S. S. Hunter was reëlected county president; Mrs. Wright, of Rosedale, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Lee, treasurer.

Resolutions were passed condemning gambling as seen in "purchasing of prize baking powders and chances given on goods"; recommending "the circulation of petitions for closing saloons from Saturday evening until Monday morning"; to "lend a hand to educate public sentiment for temperance during the coming campaign," and heartily indorsing Judge Wilson's sentiments of "the same standard of purity for men as women," while demanding "purity of character in the candidates for officers of public trust, irrespective of party."

Orange county held its convention at Santa Ana, April 24, 25, but no report has reached me, probably because they have been so busy driving out the enemy. Prohibition sentiment from Riverside county wafted across the boundary line and Orange county has been "all stirred up," our comrades active in the stirring. A county ordinance was passed compelling open saloons—no screens, tables, private gambling boxes or rooms and then so amended at the next meeting as to undo all the good done. Mrs. C. E. Way, county president, and Rev. Mary Woody, former president of North Carolina W. C. T. U., addressed the county supervisors on behalf of women and the home, but one vote gave the enemy the victory, and soon the saloons had drawn their curtains, preferring darkness to light. So numerous were the petitions presented that practically a large portion of the county has gained prohibition. Westminster, Garden Grove, West Orange, Olive, Newport, Laguna, El Modena and El Toro, are to have no licenses granted, while in three of the larger cities licenses are given. The Standard printed in full the names (1,455) on the temperance petition.

NOTES.

A glimpse at a little white ribbon aided a presiding officer to decide the question of having claret punch at a public reception of Eastern guests thus: "We have a representative of the W. C. T. U.—of course not."

Santa Monica union presented a petition to the city trustees of four hundred and forty names, asking that to the three hundred dollar liquor permit be added the Pomona law provisions—a saloon without attractions. Not granted. The union on April 12 entered upon their possession—property willed to them for a temperance free reading room—with music, and—not dancing, but earnest, fervent addresses, followed by refreshments, which netted a neat little sum. They now ask for donations of temperance and religious books.

Mrs. M. B. Carse has come and gone. She addressed the union at Redlands, the Los Angeles union of unions and possibly others, winning friends for her cause.

EASTERN WASHINGTON.

THE WORK MOVES STEADILY ON.

The Neal Dow anniversary was observed with pleasure and profit by many of our unions. Demorest medal contests are being multiplied with gratifying success. We are rejoicing in the fact that our efficient National organizer, Mrs. Delle H. Cox, has consented to lend a hand for a time to the work in Eastern Washington. She began May 14 in the southern portion of the state and we hope will visit most of our unions.

It is a time of depression and general unrest. The "commonwealers" are disturbing many communities. Because of these things, we realize the need for greater effort in behalf of Christ and the temperance cause.

I bespeak for Mrs. Cox a special interest in the sympathy and prayers of the white ribbon host everywhere.

The sad tidings have just come from Spokane of the "going home" of Mrs. A. P. Crystal on May 7th. Her daughter, Mrs. Chas. S. B. Chant, writes: "Mother was born in Columbus, Ohio, March 22, 1835. She was a noble, pure Christian, beloved by every man, woman and child who knew her. She was ever a staunch Prohibitionist, and all the years of its existence has been a subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL. She held the office of president of both county and local unions, and was also for a time the state treasurer. She was a very earnest student of the Bible. Although she had been ailing for some months her death was an unexpected blow. On that last early morning she talked hopefully of the future, then, turning, said she would take a nap. A half hour later it was found she had so quietly 'fallen asleep in Jesus,' that her loved ones who were in the room knew not just the moment."

Thus have the family, the large circle of friends, and the temperance cause been sorely bereaved. We bow to Him, who willed her promotion, earnestly praying that her beautiful life and death may be used by Him to greatly increase the laborers in this field "white already to harvest."

VIRGINIA.

GREAT VICTORY IN NORFOLK.

In Norfolk the recent election for municipal officers resulted in a splendid victory for the Prohibition Reform party. The success of this party was the result of an uprising of the better class of people against the despotism of "a ring" which for political purposes had permitted gross wrong-doing in all departments of city government. The W. C. T. U. were active and their influence was felt and seen everywhere. The city officers were elected by about fifteen hundred majority and the Reform party elected (which is most important to Norfolk) a majority of the city council. There is general rejoicing among all religious and temperance people, a great thankfulness that corruption and "ring rule" have been rebuked and the power of the liquor traffic in Norfolk at last is broken.

In Lynchburg the W. C. T. U. is at present inactive, but the cause of temperance, which is one with the religion of Jesus Christ, can not be said to have declined, because there is greater activity in "rescue work" than ever before, and many of the W. C. T. U. are to the front in all good work of that kind.

Richmond, I think, in the W. C. T. Unions leads in religious and charitable enterprises. The last and best that has been done by any of the unions is the furnishing of wards and rooms in cottages at the Confederate Soldiers' Home near Richmond. The Y's have done a noble work in that line and the remnant of the Lost Cause that remains in pain and suffering, is cheered and comforted by the knowledge that there are those who care for them, body as well as soul. Many souls have been saved that but for these women who love the Lord, would never have heard of the blessed message the gospel has, even for those who have spent and wasted the best years of their lives in sin and forgetfulness of God.

The W. C. T. U. of Virginia has not taken up the department of suffrage. All things are lawful (or ought to be) we think, but all things are not expedient. It is the conviction of many earnest, thoughtful women that the women of this state, at least, are not prepared to assume the responsibility of the ballot. Not that education on other lines is not equal to what is needed, but education on that line is most decidedly "below par." Until our women learn to vote right we would not have them vote at all. At present very few even desire to exercise this privilege, and these few are not pressing a claim to it.

For several years circumstances have interfered with our flower mission for the state prison. This year we have the promise of again giving this great pleasure to our poor people "behind the bars." Prison work has not been neglected, although there has been no "flower day" for a long time. Religious services and Sabbath-schools are held regularly in both male and female wards. I think I can safely say there is no decline but rather an advance in temperance sentiment over the state, and along with it a marked increase in religious zeal and activity in all lines of religious work.

Circumstances not best to mention have prevented a regular letter from the state reporter. In future I hope, unless providentially prevented, to give the latest news from all parts of our work in the state.

Yours for service,
W. H. WHITEHEAD,
State Reporter, Ashland.

THE central union of Kansas City, Mo., has recently lost one of its oldest members. Mrs. Elizabeth Lindsey passed into rest Sunday morning, May 6, after a long and painful illness.

A NEW union is formed at Fillmore, Cal., the result of a visit by Mrs. A. Hammond, of Nebraska, to Mrs. Martin, both white-ribboners. The union now has twenty-four members and two thriving L. T. Legions.

TWENTY-THREE years ago saloons were voted out of Carthage, Ill., and all other evil institutions were outlawed as well. The inhabitants are prosperous and a finer residence spot would be hard to find. An application for license to run a billiard hall was promptly rejected by the city council.

MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN has been engaged for several of the eastern conventions and from the 27 of Sept. (when she attends the state convention in Maine) until the middle of November will be glad to answer calls in the Eastern states. Any one wishing to secure her admirable services for our "peaceful war" please address Mrs. Minnie B. Horning, 1116 The Temple.

A NEW paper bearing great promise has been launched by the Young Women's Christian Associations of America. The significant title is International Messenger, and the object is to unify and extend the work of the Y. W. C. A.'s through this valuable medium of communication. The editor is Mrs. Fannie C. Duncan, of Louisville, Ky., sister of our own lamented Jennie Casseday. Mrs. Duncan has had long and successful experience in journalism and we predict a fortunate career for the new Messenger.

THE seventh annual convention of the W. C. T. U., of the Indian Territory, met at Wagoner, May 16, 17 and 18. There was no union at that place but the delegates were made welcome and entertained right royally. The first evening was devoted to addresses of welcome and responses. May 17th a new union was organized at Wagoner with eleven members, and two honorary members, with Mrs. J. Parkinson, president. May 18 a Demorest gold medal contest was held, Miss Willie Akin, of Vinita, receiving the gold medal. The convention held morning and afternoon meetings for business and public meetings in the evenings. It adjourned to meet next May at Claremore, hoping to form a union there and do much good. The W. C. T. U. of Vinita entertained Mrs. Hoffman May 31.

WHITE SHIELD WORK.

It has long been my wish to unite the various White Shield societies to a common center, through which they might obtain an acquaintance with each other, and receive help by an exchange of experiences. As it now is, each society seems to be alone, working on its own plan and trying to solve its own problems. If there could be coöperation, an interchange of thought, a discussion of methods, an expression of opinion as to causes of failures, or a cheering recital of successes, the work would be greatly advanced.

I think I have found a way by means of which the different White Shield societies can be made each a link in a chain of sympathetic union through which shall flow the strong current of united effort. I have obtained the consent of a woman whose life is connected with young people, who understands their needs, sympathizes with their feelings and is desirous of giving them every possible incentive towards lines of purity and nobility, to act as secretary of the White Shield, and I now earnestly request that each White Shield society will at once report to Emma F. Bates, Valley City, North Dakota.

Give her all the facts concerning your organization. Tell when it was organized, by whom, with how many members it begun, and how many it now has. Tell her your plan of conducting meetings, the discouragements you have met, the successes that have been yours.

If you desire a personal reply to your letter enclose a stamp. The department appropriation has this year been cut down, and while you will not miss the two cents needed to secure you a reply, the department will be much helped.

Let me urge you to make this report at once, as we desire to have, as soon as possible, an accurate idea of the number of societies, their location and membership, that we may be able to put into definite form the plans that are in process of maturing for promoting this work.

Come, give your White Shield secretary a hearty welcome to her new office. With sincere confidence in your earnest coöperation, I am your cordial co-worker,

MARY WOOD ALLEN,
Nat'l Supt. Purity Dept.

Treasurer's Corner.

From Ceres, N. Y., comes a delayed, but no less welcome, dollar on the ten cent fund; also one from Wellington, O., and from Allston W. C. T. U., Boston, Amboy, Ill., Plummer, Ind., and Dover, N. H., with $2 from Kingfield, Me., and $1.20 from Mt. Ayr, Ia., 70 cents from Lena, Ill., 50 cents from St. John's Newfoundland, and a few single dimes from various friends. Those receipts are especially cheering in these hard times. Miss Willard is delighted that her earnest appeal has touched so many loving hearts and opened so many purses.

Delaware, West Washington and Illinois have sent in installments of state dues during the past week, and from Shanghai, China, comes a donation of $5.84, sent by Mary J. Farnham as a Crusade offering. She writes: "Miss Robinson asked me to forward for the Chin Kiang union, $6.70. The executive committee of the Chinese National union voted $5 for the same purpose, so I bought a postal order for 25 cents. The $11.45 (the two contributions) in silver put into gold ($5.84) seems a small sum, and I wish it were much more, but as yet we have to do with the day of small things in the temperance line in China. We have just been helped and cheered by the visit of Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell. They were entertained at our home, and we felt it a privilege to have them with us and were sorry to have them go. We are now looking forward to the coming of Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, and hope for much from their visit. We need to be constantly stirred up, and are so glad for the presence of the round-the-world missionaries of the W. C. T. U. I think very few even of the missionaries realize the importance of temperance work in China. The Chinese are said not to be a drinking people, but they do a good deal. At any rate, we do not want to wait until drink and the drink traffic become the curse here that they are in Western lands. Foreign liquors are already imported here, and the Chinese are very fond of champagne. I sometimes get very much discouraged, and then again something comes to inspire with hope and enthusiasm."

Isn't that a good letter and does it not show us the need of greater effort for the world's work?

I give to-day the opinion of two sisters with reference to the dollar dues. A North Dakota white-ribboner writes: "At a recent meeting of the Uxbridge W. C. T. U. it was resolved that in our opinion it would be very unwise to raise the fees and dues of the members of the W. C. T. U. believing that it would result in a decrease of membership and even money, as those that are able and have their heart in the work will pay just as much now as if the rates were much higher and we can ill afford to shut out or lose any that may feel like joining us and casting in their mite, and we will work, trust and pray that all will become more fully aroused and set themselves in array to combat with this giant intemperance."

From South Edmeston, N. Y., another writes: "We are a small union scattered over a part of two counties, and are having a hard time to live. I am sure an increase of dues would entirely destroy us—one member having already left on account of calls for money. Of course some of our members would not mind it."

We are glad to hear from both sides of the question and would especially be glad to hear of unions that have raised the dues and the result as to loss of membership.

At the federation of district unions held in the Fourth Baptist church of Chicago, May 31, a large majority of the delegates expressed themselves favorably to raising dues in Illinois to one dollar. In fact many unions have already done so.

Through the successful planning of Miss Mary E. Campbell, state leader of the Y's, the writer is having a delightful "fly" through New Jersey. Thirty-five appointments in scarcely more than as many days! This is certainly the best work on record for any state Y secretary. New Jersey white-ribboners believe in public meetings as a means of creating sentiment. It was reported last year at their state convention that forty-eight lecturers, besides their own women too, I think, had been in their borders during the year. For this reason the ground has been thoroughly canvassed, so that there are few calls for organization, but many are joining the societies already established which marks a substantial advance. More young women are identified with the W. C. T. U. of New Jersey than I have ever found in any other state. The unions are in a prosperous condition, and everywhere one sees the results of the recent work of Mesdames Bourne, Hunt, Benjamin, Mary Wood Allen and others.

This is the county convention season. I like New Jersey's plan of holding semi-annual conventions, the spring session to be a sort of conference or school of methods; the autumn for the election of officers, reports, etc. The clergy of this state stand by the women, and are generally present at our meetings and occupy the platform. At one point two ministers volunteered to conduct a Loyal Legion at the close of convention!

At Passaic we found a Young Ladies' League composed of seventy-five girls from the best homes in the city, who were holding weekly consecration prayer-meetings in the very parlors where they used to dance and play cards, this the result of a week's evangelistic services held under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. Twenty of these young women were present at our meeting, and all arose at the close to manifest their interest in our work. They have since brought it before their League, and ere this is read Miss Campbell will have organized them into a Y. W. C. T. U. What will it mean when there are seventy-five such consecrated young women in every town? The time is coming, this is my faith.

Merchantville union made money by giving a course of three lectures, and selling the tickets for the small sum of fifty cents, even when one of these lecturers was Col. Geo. Bain.

New Jersey women are good advertisers. At the Cumberland county convention word reached us that our appointment for the next night had been canceled. The Post Norris women, at that late moment, had the courage to invite us there and gave us a crowded house. Their work began at six o'clock Friday morning, and at eight o'clock Friday night their hall was full to overflowing. How did they do this? They secured a new and popular hall, the platform of which they decorated with rugs, rockers, pictures, lace curtains, stands and piano lamps from their parlors, and with natural flowers. They put a canvas on the omnibus, secured good music, and last, but not least, they had five hundred "complimentary tickets" printed and these were sent into the homes early in the afternoon by bright young men, the young pastor of the M. E. church leading. I hope this may help some discouraged union to hold public meetings.

The middle and last of June I am to give to eastern Pennsylvania, New York and Ohio, July 1, in N. Dakota. Not quite all the time in June is filled. Unions in states mentioned desiring my services may address me, 139 Somerset St., New Brunswick, N. J.

Yours for a more consecrated young womanhood, CLARA PARRISH.

[We publish this report in full since there are no others on hand. Organizers, please send in a message and your calendar of engagements long enough ahead to hulp make your appointments.—EDS.]

WHITE RIBBON PORTFOLIO.

Part III.

Have you seen in Part III of the White Ribbon Portfolio that beautiful picture of Frances E. Willard called the "Evangeline" picture? It is large enough to frame for your son or daughter's room, and will prove an inspiration to higher living. The poem on the opposite page was written by Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, our own editor of books and leaflets, who has given in the various Portfolios the choice, fitting description beneath each face.

These bits of word painting are alone worth the nominal price asked for the entire collection of artistic half-tones. Think of owning fourteen pictures of some of the grandest women of the world for twenty-five cents. This is your opportunity to have for constant companions the wise, the noble, the consecrated ones, whose hearts and lives are pledged to the downfall of the liquor traffic.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.

A good list of subscribers for our paper and THE UNION SIGNAL was secured at Hutchinson by Mrs. M. Welsheimer, an old Crusader, now over seventy years of age, but still active and as much interested in W. C. T. U. work as in the old days.—Kansas Messenger.

Columbia Quality.

The raw material used in the construction of the 1894 Columbia bicycles is carefully analyzed by an expert metallurgist in our employ, and thus only a uniform grade of the toughest and strongest metal is accepted. A Columbia bicycle as built to-day will wear longer and do better service than the traditional "one-hoss shay."

A TRUE TEACHER: MARY MORTIMER. By Mrs. Minerva Brace Norton. Published by the F. H. Revell Publishing Company, Chicago. It is the story of an intense, unique personality and a great life work. Miss Mortimer was one of the most remarkable teachers of this century, and her work, intertwined as it is with that of Miss Catherine Beecher, has left a deep impress. The education which has enabled women to enter upon their wonderfully enlarging opportunities meets with a notable and fascinating contribution to its history in this volume. A fine portrait and other illustrations add to the value of the book.

THE JUNGLE BOOK. This juvenile publication is from the quaint pen of Rudyard Kipling, whose stories of India have enriched the pages of St. Nicholas for young readers. THE JUNGLE BOOK contains stories of the animals of the wild jungle—the jackal, called the Tabaquai, the Dish-licker; Bandar-log, or the Monkey People; Kaa, the Rock Python, thirty feet long. This is harmless, wholesome fiction and Rudyard Kipling's strange yet realistic impersonations in the realm of wild animal lore have no small proportion of information in them.

The Century Co., New York City. Price $1.50.

A book that fits the approaching season of camp-meetings is entitled REVIVAL KINDLINGS, and comes from the pen of Rev. Martin Wells Knapp, the editor of The Revivalist. The volume contains valuable material, full of fervency and power, and will warm the hearts of all who read. One little paragraph explanatory of the title of the book is particularly apt: "The human heart is the furnace; spiritual truth the fuel; prayer the match; the Holy Spirit the fire from it; illustrative facts, anecdotes and incidents, the kindlings; the Christian worker the fire builder. Jesus, with the Father, is the proprietor and director."

The Revivalist, Cincinnati, O., $1.10. To ministers, $.85.

The World's Parliament of Religions marks an epoch in history. Its significance will be more and more clearly apprehended as the years roll on and it shall come to be seen how much that notable gathering had to do in breaking down false barriers between nation and nation and in bringing in the glorious "Parliament of men, the federation of the world." As the event itself is of such far-reaching significance, so any book which gives it faithful record cannot fail of being a great book and one whose greatness shall gain increased momentum with the flight of time. Rev. John Henry Barrows, D. D., has given us such a book. Compared with his two volumes, entitled THE WORLD'S PARLIAMENT OF RELIGIONS, all other sketches which have yet appeared seem ephemeral. Dr. Barrows is the one man who could fittingly write this history. As chairman of Religious Congresses upon the general committee, to him it was given as to no other man to feel the "very pulse of the machine." Add to this the natural breadth of mind and soul which made it possible for him to be selected as chairman of so important a committee, and one sees at once that his book could not be other than it is, fair, impartial, inspiring. The work is divided into five parts: Part first gives the history of the Parliament from the first inception of the idea down through the record of each day's session. Part second is an "Introduction to the Parliament Papers," and gives in terse and forceful language a general treatise upon comparative religions. Part third gives reports of the various papers presented during the entire session of the Parliament proper, while Part fourth deals with the Denominational Congresses. Part fifth is a "Review and Summary" under two chapters, "Spirit of the Parliament" and "Influence of the Parliament." There are also brief biographical notes, and an admirably arranged index. The work is profusely illustrated and pleasing in its binding and the makeup of its pages. That it will be a blessing to humanity cannot be doubted, and gladly do we speed it on its divine mission of proving to the citizens of this and other lands the great lesson proclaimed by Paul upon Mars Hill—that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth. . . . . That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after Him and find Him, though He be not far from every one of us. For in Him we live and move and have our being." That God will be more earnestly sought and more truly apprehended because man has through this Parliament come nearer to man, is Dr. Barrows' exultant belief, and he has so impressed these printed pages with his own enthusiasm that they read like a prelude to the millennium. No library of the future will be complete without this book.

All the Clothes, all at once, makes too much of a wash, perhaps. Use Pearline, and it's easy to do a few at a time. Lots of women do this. They take the napkins, towels, handkerchiefs, hosiery, etc., each day as they are cast aside. Soak them in Pearline and water, boil them a few minutes, rinse out—and there they are, perfectly clean. No bother, no rubbing. When the regular wash-day comes, there isn't much left to do. Why isn't this just as well as to keep everything and wash in one day? 419 JAMES PYLE, N. Y.

Frances E. Willard. "What glad Evangel dost thou bring to men,
O new Evangeline, whose hope-filled eyes
Facing the future's glory-tinted skies,
Reflect their radiant gleam on us again."

Miss Esther Pugh. "Few women have been more widely loved than she who was known as 'our Esther.'"

Mrs. Caroline B. Buell. "For fourteen years corresponding secretary of the National W. C. T. U., Mrs. Caroline Brown Buell may be counted both well known and well loved among white-ribboners."

Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap. "The Daniel Webster of the Temperance Reform," Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, needs no eulogy. No lips were ever more truly touched with a live coal from God's altar than are hers."

Mrs. Louise S. Rounds. "Few states are blessed with a leader so strong and brave and earnest, and in her loyal followers she inspires her own lofty courage."

Mrs. Mary T. Burt. "Queenly in presence, courtly in speech, elegant in manners in private life, as well as dignified and inspiring in public, she is well fitted to lead the more than twenty thousand consecrated women of the Empire State."

Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden. "Mrs. Fessenden is a born leader, queenly, magnetic, with the courage of her convictions, which is sublimely contagious, and a devotion to the cause which knows no discouragement and recognizes no obstacles."

Miss Margaret A. Sudduth. "Has fine literary and executive ability, and the force of her personality is felt by all who come in contact with her."

Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson. "Graduated in 1881 from the School of Theology of Boston University, being the only woman in her class. In 1891 she was elected corresponding secretary of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., which position she held for two years, coming in 1893 to Chicago as editor of Books and Leaflets and contributing editor to THE UNION SIGNAL."

Mrs. Harriet B. Kells. "Has rare literary ability, and a breadth of mind and courage of convictions which combine to make her influence most far-reaching."

Miss Jennie A. Stewart. "Is the Associate Editor of THE UNION SIGNAL and the 'Aunt Jane' enshrined in the hearts of the children."

Mrs. Caroline F. Grow. "Business Manager of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. Graduated from Wheaton Female Seminary, Norton, Mass., class of 1855."

Miss Ruby I. Gilbert. Among the many jewels grouped in the setting of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, must be counted Miss Ruby I. Gilbert, whom Miss Willard rightly denominates 'the staunch and true.'"

John G. Woolley. "The days of miracles are not yet passed, and this man with tongue of fire called of God as truly as was ever prophet of old, is a living proof of the fact. His work is just begun, but its outcome is destined to affect the future as has the work of but few men."

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

DEAF A QUARTER OF A CENTURY.

MAIZE, KAS., Jan. 28, '94.

For many years I suffered from catarrh of the head and throat, which destroyed my hearing, and for twenty-five years I was so deaf that I could not understand conversation at all. Could not hear a clock strike by holding my ear against it. I had tried every known remedy, and nothing had ever given me the slightest relief. Last summer I obtained Dr. Moore's treatment, and had not used it three weeks until my hearing began to improve, and has steadily improved ever since, and now I can hear common conversation across a room without difficulty; can hear a clock strike in an adjoining room, 30 feet away, with the door closed, and I think I am entirely cured and my hearing permanently restored. I urge all who are afflicted as I was, to obtain Dr. Moore's treatment.

Read What Our Exchanges Say About

A GREAT MOTHER

THE EVANSTON PRESS, MAY 26.

A Great Mother.

"A Great Mother," being the biography of the late Mrs. Mary Willard, the famous "Saint Courageous" whom temperance women all over the world delight to honor, is a book which will be of great interest to many Evanstonians. It is written under the joint authorship of Miss Frances E. Willard and Mrs. Minerva Brace Norton, a kinswoman of Mrs. Willard.

As the volume is a biography of Mrs. Willard, the scenes of the sketches are largely laid in Evanston, which had been her home for so many years. Many of the persons spoken of in the work are persons whose names are household words to all Evanstonians, and for that reason the work will undoubtedly find much favor in this city.

As a whole, the volume is one of rare interest. Carefully analyzing every prominent trait of character of Mrs. Willard, the analyzing is not so flattering as to be tiresome nor so critical as to be annoying. There are some admirable passages in the work and several of the chapters—those which have to do with the later years of Mrs. Willard's life—are of very unusual interest.

Lady Henry Somerset, in her introduction to the book, says: "It is my deliberate judgment, therefore, that this volume, sent forth by the leader of the white-ribbon host and her faithful kinswoman, will not only be a favorite hand-book of motherly teaching in the purest Christian homes, but one of the chief explanations of the character and achievements of that loving and loyal daughter whose life work has so largely molded the awakened womanhood of her epoch."

The book is the third which has been put before the public as a biography of members of the Willard family. The other two, "Nineteen Beautiful Years" and "Glimpses of Fifty Years" have met with an extraordinary amount of popular favor. "A Great Mother," which completes the trio, is certain to meet with generous appreciation.

The typographical work on the volume is especially good, and much is added to the book by the excellent portraits and other pictures with which its pages are embellished. It is issued from the press of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association of Chicago.

THE EVANSTON INDEX, MAY 26.

A Great Mother.

No better title could have been chosen than the above for the volume of sketches of the sainted Madam Willard. The word "great" necessarily includes the qualities of goodness, intelligence, patience, large heartedness, and the other virtues, else it has no fitting application in this connection. The office of motherhood is the most sacred to which a human being can be called, and to be a great mother, as Mrs. Mary T. Hill Willard certainly was, is a supreme distinction.

An appreciative biography of "Saint Courageous" would be pleasant and profitable reading anywhere. Here where she spent so many happy years, and where she was universally loved, this volume of sketches of a beautiful life will be welcomed with unusual favor. It will be the more enjoyed because prepared by Miss Frances E. Willard and Mrs. Minerva Brace Norton.

The principal facts in Madam Willard's life were given in these columns at the time of her death, and it is unnecessary to repeat them here. We cannot refrain, however, from quoting a single sentence from Lady Henry Somerset's introduction: "But the choicest trait of her character as schoolmistress and house-mother was that unfailing optimism which she had by inheritance from a long line of ancestors, wholesome and holy, a home training full of cheerful spirituality, and a personal faith in the unseen verities that never wavered, and that alone gives substance to any character or life."

The book is issued by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, Chicago. It is neatly printed, handsomely bound, and is beautifully illustrated by twenty-one full page half-tone pictures, including portraits of Mrs. Willard at different times in her life, and those of her daughter, Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Norton and other persons, as well as views of Rest Cottage and other scenes.

Signal Notes.

GREAT Britain's drink bill for 1893 is £2,011,433 less than the preceding year.

AN agitation in favor of unfermented wine is being made in ministerial circles at Blairgowrie, Scotland.

SEVENTEEN hundred and forty converted drunkards is last year's record of the London City mission.

MRS. JOSEPHINE BUTLER who has been resting with her sister at Naples, is reported to be greatly improved in health.

THE university of Tennessee has been recently opened to women. There are forty in attendance and the faculty pronounced the experiment a success.

THE Madras Temperance Advocate is the new monthly organ of the Madras Temperance League, which will help to spread the anti-liquor propaganda in far-off India.

THE new home for homeless and friendless native women recently opened at Calcutta, India, is the result of the well-directed efforts of Mrs. Thoburn and others.

IT is the business of the state to stand out clearly on the side of decency, sobriety and Christian manhood. This it cannot do so long as its hand is deep in the saloon-keeper's pocket.—J. H. Ecob, D. D.

TEN years ago there were one hundred and fifty thousand brewers in Great Britain. An evidence of what temperance agitation has accomplished is the fact that their numbers are reduced to ten thousand one hundred and forty-three.

AN imperial decree recently promulgated by the Mikado of Japan, repeals the law by which husbands were selected for women who were unmarried after a certain age. The new edict permits the Japanese women to remain single if they so elect.

MRS. CARLISLE, wife of Secretary Carlisle, is not only known to be opposed to the use of intoxicating beverages but is notably consistent in her convictions. Her dinners are served without the alcoholic concomitants which custom seems to have fixed so inflexibly upon less independent and enlightened society leaders.

MISS CHARLOTTE TUCKER, so well known to the Christian world as a writer of instructive and useful books for children, under the pseudonysm of A. L. O. E., went to India as a missionary when she was over fifty years of age, and there ended her useful life. It is said she seldom left a letter unanswered over night in the anticipation of the Divine call to the eternal home.

UNDOUBTEDLY for the first time in the history of the M. E. annual conference, a candidate to that body in New England has refused to answer affirmatively to the question, "Will you wholly abstain from the use of tobacco?" which the bishop is authorized to ask. An appeal from the bishop's refusal to admit the candidate to membership is to be taken to the General Conference which it is to be hoped will sustain so just a ruling.

SOMERSET HOUSE, in Norwood Road, near London, is the first headquarters operated by a B. W. T. A. branch, and named in honor of Lady Henry Somerset. The institution is conducted on a college settlement plan and is the center of many Christian activities as well as of special temperance endeavor. One of the rooms is fitted up as a meeting room in which are held gospel prayer-meetings, mothers' meetings, etc. Open air services are conducted during the summer season. A visiting evangelist is employed and a coffee stand has been established. In addition a soup kitchen will be operated in the winter. An employment bureau has been carried on and about forty domestic servants have thus been aided to places. There are two Y Branches, one composed of young ladies of leisure who give their aid to the good work of the institute, the other is a Y union for working girls. Altogether Somerset House is a center of refined influence, dedicated to "holy and helpful uses."

GOOD NEWS FOR ASTHMATICS.

EVERY LADY OR AGENT who sends us 10 cts. and the names and addresses of five good housekeepers will receive one of our $9.60 package of ELECTRIC SOLDERING PLATE, FREE. Don't miss this rare chance but send 10 cts. and names and addresses at once as this Special Offer is made to introduce it into thousands of new homes. The regular price of same is 25 cts. ELECTRIC SOLDERING PLATE is the greatest discovery of the age. It mends Copper, Lead, Brass Pipe, Tinware, Electric Wires, and in fact every article that solder will mend. If your Boiler, Dish Pan, Tea Kettle, Coffee or Tea Pot or Pail leaks you can mend it at home without any tools, rosin or acid, and it makes no difference if the article to be mended is greasy or dirty. It makes a neat and thorough patch, and any man, woman and child can use it. Each plate contains 132 quarter-inch squares, equal to $9.60 worth for 25 cts. as any tin-smith would charge you 5 cts. (often 10 cts.) for mending a small hole or break, so that 192 holes that this plate will mend would save you $9.60. Don't fail to send for a sample, give it a thorough trial and you will order more. We wish every one to understand that the soldering plate is an entirely new article, different in every respect from anything ever offered to the public, being the result of a large amount of study and experiment on the part of the inventor. It is something that will sell again and again over the same territory, as those who buy will be sure to recommend it to their neighbors. Men, women, boys and girls are making $45 to $75 per week clear, without any capital. Send for a package at once as per above special offer. Address C. STANFORD & CO., MONON BLDG., Chicago, Illinois.

SUMMER MEETINGS.

SCHOOL OF APPLIED ETHICS.

The third summer session of the School of Applied Ethics will be held at Plymouth, Mass., beginning July 12, and continuing five weeks, closing August 15.

A special feature of the next session will be the attention given to the labor question and allied subjects in each of the departments. In the department of Economics the relation of Economics to Social Progress will be discussed by leading economists from different universities. In the departments of Ethics and History of Religion various phases of the labor problem in the past and present will be considered by a large corps of able lecturers.

There will be an important Conference of Educators and Teachers during the week August 5 to 11, inclusive. The relation of various forms of educational activity to ethical and social progress will be considered by leading educators, and opportunity will be afforded for free and full discussion.

Plymouth has proved a most attractive place for a Summer School. It has good sailing and sea-bathing, and beautiful drives, besides the added attraction of interesting historic associations. An electric railway connects the hotels, boarding-houses and lecture-hall which will be occupied by the school.

Plymouth is a little over an hour by rail from Boston (Old Colony Road, Kneeland street), from which, also, it may be reached by steamer daily during the summer. The new railroad from Middleboro to Plymouth affords a direct route, via Fall River Line from New York.

SUMMER CONFERENCES FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

It has been a serious drawback to women's ability to avail themselves to the utmost of the many fields of religious work which have opened up to them that there have been and still are so few untrained workers. It has been to meet this great felt lack, that the International Committee of Young Women's Christian Associations has held for the last few years summer conferences for young women. Last year the first conference was held at Northfield, Mass., under the joint management of Mr. D. L. Moody and the International Committee of Young Women's Christian Associations.

The attendance numbered 180, representing forty-one schools and colleges, as well as many young people's societies and city mission workers. This year another conference will be held at Northfield, June 22-28. The attendance promises, even at this early date, to be large and the program is very fine.

Another conference will also be held at Lake Geneva, Wis., July 4-18. This will be the third summer conference which the young women will hold there. Last year the attendance was over 150, with large delegations from both the Western and Southern states.

There will be fine opportunities given for workers in young people's societies, and those who are interested in mission work both home and foreign, will find here many practical suggestions. None can go away from such a place without a deepening of her own spiritual life.

The International Committee also plan this year a third conference at Cazadero, near San Francisco, Cal., July 11-18. Thus no section of our country is omitted in the opportunities thus afforded for Bible study and practical methods.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

A change in ministry has occurred in Hungary.

Spain has an estimated deficit of five million dollars.

The Ohio militia has been called out to quell the riots of striking miners in that state.

Monopoly has gained a victory in the vote on the sugar schedule of the Senate tariff bill.

The United States Breweries Association meeting at Syracuse, N. Y., adjourned Friday.

Pennsylvania Prohibitionists met at Williamsport last week to nominate state candidates.

The South Carolina Prohibition convention closed June 8, without nominating a state ticket.

Much damage to property was done in Vienna, Thursday, by an unprecedented hailstorm.

An unusually large delegation was in attendance at the Ohio state prohibition convention, in Columbus.

The June graduation exercises have taken place in many educational institutions in different states.

After a three months' debate, the Belgian Chamber of Deputies has voted for a revision of the constitution.

San Francisco entertained the forty-fifth annual convention of the American Medical Association last week.

The welcome announcement is made by the Democratic managers of the tariff bill that a vote may be expected soon.

Portage entertained the twenty-first annual convention of the Wisconsin W. C. T. U. last week. The same officers were reëlected.

About twelve hundred delegates were present at the session of the Congregational Home Missionary Society which convened at Omaha, Neb., June 7.

The Stanford estate has been sued by the United States government for its share of the debt of the Central Pacific railway, amounting to fifteen million dollars.

Statistics sent out from Washington during the week show for the last ten months the largest exports in American manufactures ever recorded, $153,305,294.

The most successful convention ever held by the Ohio Sunday-School Association closed its thirty-fifth session Friday. Two thousand delegates were present.

Professor William Dwight Whitney, of the chair of Comparative Philology and Sanscrit at Yale College, and the superintendent of the Century Dictionary, passed away June 7, aged sixty-seven.

The American Flag Day Association is just founded in Illinois for the purpose of fostering patriotic sentiment among the school children by having June 14 fittingly recognized as the anniversary of the adoption of the American flag.

A committee was appointed in Pittsburg, Friday, which is expected to settle the difficulties existing between mine owners and miners in Pennsylvania whose strike has led to those in other states and a general inconvenience to coal dealers and consumers.

Dispatches from Honolulu state that the constitutional convention adjourned in recognition of Decoration Day. It is understood that certain franchise qualifications in property and education will be required of voters, although the constitution has not been given.

Senator Allen, of Nebraska, has introduced a bill which, it is said, was inspired by the Senate bribery investigations in which he has been engaged. The bill would forbid any senator or representative during his term of office owning stock, the value of which would be influenced by a vote of Congress, or being interested pecuniarily in any board of trade, stock exchange, national bank or any organization in which such stock is sold.

As Miss Willard will be on the "high seas" by the time this paper is printed, it is safe to announce the reception which is to be given her on the night after her arrival in New York city. This is in the name of the state W. C. T. U. and is called a "welcome meeting." It is to be held in the Calvary Baptist church, June 21. After this reception, Miss Willard and Miss Gordon will go to the secluded 'Eagle's Nest" in the Catskills, and rest until the Prohibition convention in Montreal, July 3-5, after which they will come directly to Evanston.

THE program for the meeting to welcome Miss Willard on her return to this country is being arranged, and knowing the devotion and loyalty of the young women to our leader, Mrs. Barnes is desirous that they, too, should have their part in the greetings of the evening. She therefore asks each Y. W. C. T. Union to send a small contribution toward an American flag for the cottage at Twilight Park, which she will present in behalf of the National Y Branch. As the time is short please send without delay to Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, 146 West 103d St., New York city.

IN the excellent letter of the Northern California Field reporter will be found an item of unusual interest relating to church W. C. T. Unions. The First Baptist and two Presbyterian churches of San Francisco have adopted unions into their regular services, placing their meetings upon their calendar and recognizing them as a part of the religious work of the congregation. White-ribboners will rejoice at this. They comprise a large proportion of the membership of the churches, their work is a part of the great work for Christ's kingdom and should always have been under the protection of the church.

A DISPATCH from Washington says that Mr. Breckinridge is decidedly unpopular in the House and that even his Kentucky colleagues avoid him as they would a pestilence. He has not been in Congress but a few days since the beginning of his trial three months ago, but has drawn his salary regularly. A few sentences from a private Frankfort correspondent are apropos: "THE UNION SIGNAL editorial on the Breckinridge case is considered, in this locality, the finest article that has been written on that subject during its long run before the public. It has been widely republished in Kentucky. The women of this district are turning their indignation meetings into prayer-meetings, and at the same time working hard against Breckinridge's reëlection, saying, 'If the men won't fear God, they must be made to fear good women.'"

OUR third and fourth round-the-world missionaries, Dr. Kate C. Bushnell and Mrs. Elizabeth W. Andrew, are now in Japan, and expect to sail from Yokohama June 22 by the S. S. Oceana, reaching San Francisco, July 6. From California they plan to proceed northward, from Sacramento to Portland, Oregon, and from Tacoma, Washington, via the Northern Pacific railroad to Jamestown, North Dakota; from Jamestown to Huron, South Dakota; thence through Mankato, Minn., homeward to Evanston by the Chicago & Northwestern railroad. These details of their precise route are given in order that any unions on their direct line of travel may take advantage of the opportunity to hear the story of their marvelous round-the-world journey and work. Under no circumstances can they hold more than one meeting a day. As the time is so brief, we mention here that it has been the usage generally in all lands visited, save in missionary fields, for the unions to assume the local expenses of arranging for their meetings and entertainment, and to hand the collection taken at each meeting to them. All unions desiring the services of these gifted, consecrated women will please address either Dr. Bushnell or Mrs. Andrew immediately, care Thos. Cook & Son, Bankers, San Francisco, California.

AN item of special importance may be found in Mrs. Carse's Temple Items on page 13. It relates to the beautiful Chautauqua fountain which is now being placed in Willard Hall. It is in the deep recess of the corridor, about middle way from the entrance on the left hand side. The fountain will be completed in a few days, but will be veiled from the public until the arrival of Miss Willard in July, when it will be appropriately dedicated.

SO MANY of the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL were patrons of the Woman's Dormitory last summer that they will be interested to learn the final outcome of that worthy institution. At a meeting of the directors held June 5 Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the president, stated that aside from the successful entertainment of 12,210 women, there was a balance on hand of $678.91. The total receipts were $73,708.16 and the disbursements $73,029.25. The building cost $38,688 and recently sold for $2,239. The furniture which cost $11,432 brought a fair amount. The great building was erected to accommodate 1,000 guests at a time, but one night there were 1,100 entertained. If any stockholders applied for admission when the rooms were all occupied, their money was either refunded or their board was paid at another hotel. As the six hundred dollar surplus would pay to each stockholder only about two cents, which would be swallowed up by the postage, it was decided to appropriate the money to some institution for the advancement of the interests of women. It should be a cause of great rejoicing that the Dormitory, by its low charge, not only enabled thousands of women to attend the great Fair but that it successfully weathered the stormy, financial tides of the Columbian year.

OUR readers will turn with eagerness to the report of the International Temperance Congress on pages 4 and 5. The congress was so full of mental feasts that our correspondent found it difficult to condense them into the space assigned, so we continue the excellent report into our next issue. It is too early to state the outcome of this large and enthusiastic meeting, but it is impossible to believe that there will be no beneficial result. In this period of unparalleled social revolution, the temperance question has not been uppermost in all minds as during the past decade at least. Other questions have been sharing its prominence until some foolish followers have declared, "Our cause is dying." Not so have the leaders and the great rank and file believed, and their faith has been sustained by this great meeting. What other moral, social or political question could draw so many noted advocates and such diverse representatives as has this gathering? The capital-labor question is a great one, but so long as the saloon bears signs of prosperity and perpetuity, and extracts from the unemployed their last bit of saving or charity's bestowal, there is no question so vital before the American people as the abolition of the drink traffic. The proposed Advisory Board, consisting of the two chief officers of each National temperance society, and the bureau for distribution of temperance literature stand as the most tangible results of the deliberation of the congress, but is that all? Not by any means. The congress has shown what the different temperance organizations really hold in their ranks. It has brought to the notice of the outsiders the intelligence, the singleness of purpose, the heroism of the men and women who stand opposed to the liquor traffic. It certainly was one of the most magnificent gatherings of "cranks" ever witnessed, and when they, in the fullness of time, all "turn" together and in the right direction, the props that uphold the liquor traffic to-day will fall. The organizations represented, one and all, and not least the W. C. T. U., are to be congratulated upon the choice of their representatives, and more than that, they are to be congratulated upon the fact that the bulk is of the same quality as the samples.

THE CONVERSION.

BY E. H. CHASE.

In my neighbor's garden in early spring,
A rampant thistle I chanced to see;
"'Tis a pest," I cried, "'tis a spreading thing!
Each tiny seed has an active wing;
You must root it out or 'twill trouble bring!"
"But the flower is soft and pink," quoth he.

So he let it grow all the summer through.
"It is only one, let it live," said he.
"If the thistle did but to rare plants belong
We should prize it much, it could do no wrong,
We should even give it a place in song;
Now this is true," said my friend to me.

In the spring through many a garden bed
The baby thistles were plain to see.
And out on the common their deep roots fed,
And new seeds fast on their light wings sped,
And tender fingers from sharp spines bled,
And my neighbor came calling on me.

"What can we do with this noxious weed?
The thistle is seeding the town," said he.
"Out in the pasture 'tis spoiling the feed;
And my wife lost her tulips because of its greed;
My lawn grass is ruined and full of its seed;
'Tis a pest!" said my friend to me.

But I knew my neighbor and answered him back:
"My dear sir, we can't hope to agree.
You should license the thistle and still let it grow;
'Prohibition can never prohibit,' you know,
And if seeds keep on flying, why just let 'em go."
"I've done wrong," said my friend to me.

A SHADOW IN A COUNTRY NIGHT.

BY FRANCES OVIATT LEWIS.

Twilight was stretching a ghostly hand over the small town. It had already gathered the woods in its embrace, and was stealing the slanting sun rays from the straggling stone wall. It was touching with dusky color the patient figure seated there—a woman's figure—presenting the tense attitude of long and painful watching. Her face leaning on her thin hand showed in the darkening shadows the dim blurred prettiness which comes early to the hard-worked classes, followed too soon by the more common look of worn resignation. But the delicate profile showed as yet the hope and desperation belonging only to youth—hope deferred, hope springing anew from a shallow grave, but still hope.

The country lay as still as a churchyard, only broken by an occasional dropped note of a half awakened bird, or the monotonous croaking of an old frog down by the brook. She had waited since her early tea, every moment dragging more heavily, and seeming to drop a clod on her already overburdened heart, as it passed. The sun had set gloriously, carrying with it the resplendent hope it had inspired, and now the deep stillness filled her with mystery and dread. Far off in the shadowy pasture a cow bell echoed faintly, as the animal crunched the short, sweet grass, and the bark of the shepherd dog sounded supernaturally loud and ominous.

She was a young thing—this Elizabeth—and had seen two summers glow and fade since her marriage. With a heart capable of the deepest love and a highly idealistic nature, she had given her life and soul to the man for whom she waited now so anxiously.

As she listened for the horse's hoof beats on the hard summer road, her thoughts rushed back to another summer night before their marriage. She could see him yet—strong and gay, with his erect head and impetuous gestures and his deep tones sounded again in her memory as he solemnly swore to make her happy as long as he lived. He was young, and did a young lover ever fail to swear by the changing moon? Like the scene from another's life she could see them there—could hear herself responding:

"Oh, but I am so afraid—so afraid. My mother says that your pleasure-loving nature will lead you astray. How could I bear a life like that your mother has endured with your father, and how could you bear to see me worn and anxious and faded like her, with nerves racked from long watching. For both our sakes I must resist."

Then she could hear again the protestations which followed and felt herself once more yielding to the sweet glamour of that love-lit night. Now it was past, and she could not linger over the days that lay between then and now. The first were sweet, filled with the wine of youth and love. He had been as active as she in doing the innumerable sweet nothings which go to make the witching beauty of a first home, and after that—ah—she had seen the dreaded spectre stalk into their simple lives. It shadowed every pleasure in these days, and the most dreaded were those on which he made his now too frequent trips "over town" just to get this or that for the house or premises.

How many nights she had watched there, sometimes with starry skies over her with fleecy clouds, like chariots for the dead, sailing across a moon-ridden sky; again, when the wind blew her thin coverings and wailed a requiem through the somber fields of wheat.

To-night the calm only made the beating of her heart more painful. The old kitchen clock struck one creakingly and slowly, and through the half-open door its voice seemed to tick a solemn warning: "Give up! Give up!"

Still she waited, and her thoughts surged on. Should she struggle longer? She had heard of brave women who had come out of such trials braver and stronger, but she was so weak and life so long. She thought of the lives around her, some holding the sweet perfume of the freshly gathered hay and adorned with the blossoms of happiness, but how many dwarfed and saddened, an endless, care-laden round, with work and worry writing their inscriptions on brow and cheek. Should she live to grow old? To watch and wait and suffer and die? Night held her in its spell. She was in the throes of a youthful grief, none more poignant. Age suffers and philosophizes and is resigned. Youth is stabbed to the death by its own impetuosity.

The murmur of the brook at the foot of the hill seemed to grow insistent in the stilly watches of the night. Its voice had a low, liquid song of repose: "Sleep and rest. Sleep and dream."

She would walk down the broad wall and bend over and watch the moon's reflections in its face, just as he and she had in days gone by. The wind was beginning to blow in light gusts which swayed her slender figure as she followed the curving wall. Her fair hair, tossed by the capricious breeze, enveloped her as with a floating garment. She seemed a thing of the night.

She knew the spot, the heart of the brook so deep and quiet. If only the old, familiar, strong hand were here to guide her. She felt strangely dizzy. Surely there was a step here—oh, God, she was falling . . . and the dark water seemed to reach up to gather her to its heart.

Far down the road came the quick, sharp beat of a horse's hoofs—a reckless hand guiding the lines—but the brook murmured on into the sea and its refrain was still, "Sleep and rest."

ANSWER TO DR. LYMAN ABBOTT.

II.

BY KATE C. BUSHNELL, M. D.

Men were educated and taught ancient languages long before women, and I have often wondered, consequently, how the case might have turned had woman got into the green pastures of learning ahead of man. "Possession is nine points of the law." In Genesis 36th chapter, we have an account of the dukes of Edom, and we illiterate women are able to spell out the fact that several of these dukes were women! At verse 14 we are told that Anah is the daughter of Zibeon; but by the time we reach verse 24 we read that this same Anah "found the mules in the wilderness as he fed the asses of Zibeon his father"; and by the time we follow on to study history in I. Chronicles, first chapter, at the fortieth verse we find Anah styled the son of Zibeon!

Yet we are called upon to prove that women have ever ruled to any extent, or can rule, or were meant to rule, according to Bible teaching or history; and I answer that when woman's sex is snowed under without protest between the beginning and end of a single chapter, by careless translators who take it for granted that men are doing almost everything that is done, the case is singularly hard to prove. And when "to stand before" and "to profess" mean "to rule" for the male, and to "do the work of a despot" means only to "guide" for the female, I wonder if sex or intelligence has the determining power in the "final authority" exercised in the translation of the English Testament from the undefiled original Greek!

To quote further instances of the degree that sex affects the English translation of the Greek Testament: The same word occurs in I. Tim. 3:2 and I. Tim. 2:9. When applied to men it is translated "good behavior," but when to women "modest." In Hebrew 12:28 man is exhorted to serve God with "reverence," but in the only other place where the same word is used in the original, it appears to the English translators more suitably rendered "shamefacedness," for it here (I. Tim. 2:9) refers to women exclusively. My Greek-English Testament lexicon calmly informs me that the masculine meaning of "sophrosyne" is "soundness of mind," but its feminine meaning is "modesty"! The Greek adjective "hagnos" is never given a stronger translation than "clear" or "pure" when applied to males, nor a weaker translation than "chaste" when applied to females. See Phil. 4:8; I. Tim. 5:22; James 3:17; I. John, 3:3; II. Cor. 7:11; II. Cor. 11:2; Tit. 2:5; I. Pet. 3:2.

In numberless instances in the New Testament diakonos is translated "minister" or "deacon," and so is it rendered every time it refers to an office held by a man in the church; but in the one instance where it refers to a woman, although distinctly stating that this is her rank in the church—an ecclesiastical order, yet it is rendered "servant" (Rom. 16:1). In this same 16th of Romans, at the 7th verse, mention is made of Andronicus and Junia as "of note among the apostles." Now, Chrysostom and Origen, Greek fathers of the early church, contended that this passage of Scripture proved there had been women apostles in the earliest days of the church, for they said, Junia was a household female name among the Greeks, and "of note among the apostles" meant, as it properly could be rendered, "noted apostles." But the modern commentators, Jamieson, Fausset and Brown, have found themselves able to master the difficulty with one masculine flourish as follows: "Chrysostom, Luther, Calvin," etc., "take this to mean 'noted apostles,' . . . and of course if Junia is to be taken for a woman this latter ['of note among'] must be the meaning." That is, if Junia is a woman she cannot be an apostle, and if Junia is an apostle he [she] cannot be a woman! But the Greek fathers ought to have been considered authorities both as to the meaning of a Greek phrase and as to the sex of a Greek proper name.

In I. Tim. 5:1 the word presbyteros is translated elder, and repeatedly used in the chapter as referring to an office in the church. But in verse 2 of the same chapter presbytera is made to mean "elder woman." These are masculine and feminine forms of one and the same word, and I assert my opinion that if presbyteros means "man elder" presbytera means "woman elder"; and if presbytera means simply "old woman," presbyteros means simply "old man." Thus much for the present as to man's title to the estate of "final authority" in household, church and state. It can be much more readily proved from the English translation of the Testament than from the original Greek.

Dr. Abbott says: "The wife will submit herself to her husband, not because she is his inferior nor because she is his servant, but because . . . . according to the divine law . . . . the husband is the head" (the final authority). I differ from Dr. Abbott. I would say: "The wife will submit herself to her husband, not because she is his inferior nor because she is his servant, but because she is the servant of one who commands her to resist not evil"; because the sacrifice of the spirit of meekness and gentleness is accounted as too great a price to pay for liberty (when subjection does not imply compulsion to immorality); cannot exist longer than the earthly career, and can affect only the outward life, unless a spirit of servility to the male is cultivated. For no other reasons than these may the real Christian submit herself, and this is what the phrase, "as unto the Lord," means—something wholly different from the usual inference that when the woman marries man takes the place of authority formerly exercised by God, that is, the husband is "as the Lord" to her (I. Cor. 8:5, 6).

Dr. Abbott's third inference, as we have noted them, is that the wife will obey although recognizing her equality with her husband, and that the husband will command, although recognizing the wife's equality with him. I assert that the wife cannot obey while recognizing her equality with her husband, without also realizing his injustice. The husband cannot command a wife who is his equal without his conscience accusing him of wrong. If the woman accepts cheerfully a "final authority" in her husband, it will necessarily be from one of two motives, either because she feels that it is better to suffer wrong than to do wrong by resisting evil, or because she does not feel herself her husband's equal. Every woman, I am sure, who has thought on this subject, will testify to the truth of this statement. On the other hand, no man can constitute himself "final authority" to a wife and retain the respect for her he may have for other women over whom he cannot exercise a "final authority."

But Dr. Abbott says, "This submission is the submission of love." Does love always lead to a spirit of submission? I think it does. Does hate always lead to a spirit of despotism? I believe it does. Then, as husbands are commanded in verse 25 to "love their wives" in proportion as they love will they master or submit to their wives? Can a woman love and reverence a husband who constitutes himself her "final authority"? She cannot, unless the Lord gives her the spirit of Matt. 5:44-46, or unless she is content at the loss of loyalty to her Lord, to find her "final authority" on earth. It is as true of woman as of man, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon," ye cannot "serve two masters." She will hold to one and despise the other, unless she hold to God and by His power, not by natural law, love in spite of inflicted injustice. Dr. Abbott may not be able to see this truth unless he put it to the test of the Golden Rule. Would Dr. Abbott love his wife as much as now if she felt herself constituted his "final authority," and proceeded to act accordingly? How long would Dr. Abbott live in blissful peace with his best beloved male friend if that friend constituted himself Dr. Abbott's "final authority"? How long would Dr. Abbott love and respect his best male friend after becoming "final authority" to that friend?

THE COMMONWEAL.*

BY CHAS. O. BORING.

I have recently learned a new use of an old word. The word is "comrade," which I have heard used many times and under many circumstances, but never before to stand for such depth and intensity of meaning as in the camp of the "commonwealers."

I recently visited several of these camps and conversed with a great number of the privates as well as some of the leaders. It occurs to me that no movement has been so little understood by the public as this, and none more misrepresented by the press. I will, therefore, give the impressions that come to me from what I conceive to be a reasonably impartial investigation. I certainly was not prepossessed in favor of these movements and previous to my personal acquaintance with them could only regard them as wild delusions of men led on by ignorant or designing leaders to a rash venture with no possible outcome but misfortune. That I hold a different view to-day is owing to personal observation, which has given me an impression different from any I could possibly have received through the public press.

I find it is a common opinion that these armies all originated with Coxey, who now languishes in jail. While Coxey has obtained prominence because his army was the first to reach Washington it is not true that he was the prime mover or organizer of the movement. No man or set of men originated it. It arose as spontaneously as the grass which comes from the soil when touched by heat and moisture. It originated not in one place or geographical situation, but where conditions existed favorable to it. Each army is independent of the other in movement, and most of them were independent in origin. In Kelly's camp none of the men in the ranks knew anything about Coxey's arrest at Washington the day after it occurred, or took the slightest interest in the fact. Indeed, I found very few who knew anything about any other movement, as newspapers are luxuries which they had not obtained.

Another very common misconception is that these men are willful tramps or "hobos" as they are called. There never was a grosser misconception. Professor Hourwich, of Chicago University, has explained this fact to the public here as regards Randall's army; and the census of Kelly's army showed it to be composed, seventy-five per cent, of skilled workmen. I, myself, talked with a large number, and am absolutely convinced that I met none but workingmen out of employment and positively unable to obtain it.

I was in Indianapolis when Fry's army reached there, and in Des Moines the day Kelly's army arrived from that fearful tramp through the mud from Council Bluffs, Iowa. I also met many of the men coming down the Mississippi from Minneapolis and in each case obtained all the information possible. I got a better idea of the movement, however, from Kelly's army than any other, and will devote this article to the impressions of this division which is now making its way up the Ohio river to Wheeling, whence they will march overland to Washington. They left Des Moines, on May 9, in one hundred and fifty flatboats which they constructed at this place, and numbered 1,425 persons in all at that time.

This division left Oakland, Cal., with eight hundred members, April 17. They had eleven hundred men when they left California, and recruited the remainder en route. They succeeded in getting passage on the cars to Council Bluffs whence they tramped to Des Moines, suffering most intensely from exposure, deprivation and exhaustion. For two nights they laid out in the mud under a pelting rain without the slightest shelter. For bedding they had scraps of comfortables, pieces of old blankets sewed together, gunny bags and other such material. I found very few whole blankets among them except for the sick—of which there were seventeen in the camp hospital on Sunday, May 6. The clothing of the army beggars description. It was pitifully worn, torn and ragged. Most of them were reasonably well clad when they started, but exposure and rough living had made sad havoc with it.

*As it seemed to an intelligent sympathizer.

As to the personnel of this army, I should say it was above the average of American workingmen in intelligence and ability. I talked with about one hundred of them in all, and heard many sorrowful stories. I do not see how it would be possible for any one to come into the atmosphere of this camp without sympathizing with these poor men, and without feeling that they are honest and in earnest. Let me relate a history as given to me by one of the men, an Englishman by birth, although eight years in this country, thirty-five years of age, clean as it is possible for a man to be in such a camp. And, by the way, let me say that the stories of the filthy and unkempt condition of these men are quite untrue. Ragged, they are, but not dirty as to person. They have barbers with them who devote their entire time, when the army is not moving, to shaving and shearing. The men bathe and wash their garments as often as possible. This Englishman told me he washed his underwear and shirt twice a week. He had no clothing except that which he wore, and, indeed, I saw little or no baggage of any kind in the camp. This man had been employed as bookkeeper in a fruit-preserving establishment at $1,800 a year. When it failed he secured a place as foreman at four dollars a week. When this failed he got brief employment at one dollar a day in another establishment. This failed and the wolf soon stood at the door. He had a little home partly paid for. He sacrificed this for enough to pay his wife's expenses back to England where she had relatives. "Comrade," he said, "I could not beg and would not steal. I could get no work at any price, and joined the army in hopes that I might find it en route. I have tried diligently every place we have been, but you can easily see why one whose clothes are worn as mine could not succeed."

I stooped at a couch where another man lay, upon whose face I saw the death mark written. "Is there anything I can do for you?" I said.

"No," said he; "many thanks; I am very comfortable. The boys are doing all they can for me. I get all I can eat and a comfortable place to sleep, so could ask for nothing more."

"Are you going on with the others to Washington?" I asked.

"Yes," said he; "the boys say they will not leave me behind."

I arose from the cot with tears in my eyes.

"Thank you, comrade," he said; "it seems very nice when some one besides the boys sympathizes with us."

I found those who had worked in fruit-preserving establishments most numerous. Besides these I talked with teamsters, carpenters, plumbers, brick-masons, stablemen, barbers and blacksmiths. I also found a most excellent opportunity to interview Commander Kelly. As I am often asked my impression of him I will state that he instantly presents the idea of a man who is honest and intensely in earnest. To be sure he shows signs that he is what is commonly called an egotist. To succeed a man occupying his position must have that degree of self-assurance which so often passes for egotism. He has a most winning smile and pleasing voice, a happy combination in any one. He is exceedingly tactful, and is a master at organization as well as diplomacy. He is a born leader, and is idolized by the army. He is not always grammatical in his remarks, but he is always pointed. He will win, if patience, good-nature, tact and far-reaching diplomacy are means to his end. He makes friends out of foes, and is vastly more popular where he has been than where people have not met him. In answer to my inquiries he told me the origin of this organization known as Kelly's army.

"In California," said he, "are the rich and the industrial populations with few of the middle class as regards wealth. When the panic struck the Coast all the works which gave employment closed down very quickly. The whole or nearly all of the industrial populations were thus thrown out of work and unlike those in eastern states, they had no fellow-laborers who had employment and were thus able to help them out. The situation became so desperate that the state of California set aside a sum to be expended in public works in order to make employment. This amount was soon exhausted and then followed greater want and destitution than before. This movement was then undertaken to proceed to Washington to ask help from the general government." . . . "I had nothing to do with this movement in the beginning," said Kelly, "but was finally asked by the men to lead them. I was employed as a printer and needed nothing for myself, but was willing to help my comrades. We have left nine thousand two hundred of these remaining in California in one body, and if we have suffered in coming they suffered not less in remaining."

"Now, Mr. Kelly," said I, "will you tell me what the object of your movement is and what you hope to accomplish when you reach Washington?"

"Comrade," he answered, "do you know much about the question of irrigation in the West?"

"Yes," I replied, "I am familiar with the iniquities practiced by the irrigation companies."

"Then I do not need to tell you," said he, "that with us this is the foremost question. We think the water of irrigation is as much the province of the government to superintend as the water of navigation. This is the fundamental theory of our movement. We intend to ask Congress to set aside a special fund to provide storage of water and make irrigating ditches to improve the arid lands of the West. We intend to ask that the ditches be under governmental control and that the land shall become the property not of corporations, but of private individuals. We think this work is not the province of any state or number of states but should be under the management of the general government."

I have given his words at length so I may clearly define the movement from their own position. I further asked him regarding the connection of the "Industrial Army of California" with the Coxey movement. He stated that there was absolutely no connection, whatever. He had never had any relations with Coxey, and that few, if any, of the men in the ranks had any information concerning the Coxey army. I was surprised at this, but learned that such was the case on making personal inquiries.

The sympathy of the working people of Des Moines was remarkable and touching. I saw them come by hundreds with baskets of provisions. They gave the money which was collected at Des Moines to build the boats and furnish the tugs. Little if any was given outside of the industrial population. They furnished the men tools to build their boats and helped to construct them.

"Are there not many criminals and professional hobos in this army?" I am asked.

I saw no signs of such, and on consulting those who had been with the army for some time, found that none had been discovered.

Mr. Kelly told me the three promises exacted from those intending to join the army were as follows:

1. Not to use intoxicating liquors of any sort, and to report any brought into camp.

2. Not to take anything from a comrade or from any one else en route, and to report any comrade who might be guilty of theft.

3. Not to use force under any circumstances or provocation.

These laws are enforced and the discipline maintained surpasses that of an ordinary regiment in some respects. These people are not all law abiding, it is said, and the actions of some who are not must reflect on all. This may be true, but it is also true that the movement is too great to be finally hurt by the folly or crime of any man or any set of men. In the fall of the year the great trade winds blow from the southwest. They mature the corn, ripen the grain and prepare the ground for another season's crop. Their value is beyond computation. They bring us physical discomfort for a time and are accompanied by storms and cyclones which do vast damage in some places. On the whole they are beneficent, even if the wreck and ruin and devastation of home is effected by the same cause. Can we expect a gigantic, evolutionary movement like this to be unaccompanied by danger or loss? It is certainly remarkable that there has been so little, thus far, to complain of. There have been marvelous patience, wonderful forbearance and masterful self-command.

Already the iron heel has been put upon some of the leaders, yet we cannot but admire the spirit of meekness manifested. This is but the beginning of possible martyrdom. If this is a great and destined movement, as I now think, there will be and must come only harsher treatment from selfish and prejudiced officials. The movement can only acquire greatness through repression, and will develop its strength in opposition.

I write this article for the reason that I consider these nascent times. We are in the birth throes of a great revolution, one long foreseen by sentient souls. The fact that it was not expected to come in this way is only greater proof of the magnitude of the movement. It has often been the way of the Lord to use the weak things of this world to confound the mighty, and the foolish things to confound the wise. It seems to me that just now is the time for the friends of the home and the enemies of the organized enemy of our institutions—namely, the saloon—to be more vigilant than usual. In another issue I will undertake to show what in my judgment is the real meaning of this movement and compare it with a previous mighty movement parallel to it in many respects.

Chicago, Ill.

A MOTHER hen calls her chickens to some special crumb every little while, and a leader must rally her comrades to some specific work quite often. The general lines do not suffice—there must be special pressure brought to bear, a clear sounding note of invitation, and the chicks who have been chirping in the grass or straggling here and there in pursuit of some worm that did not materialize, or some fly that eluded them, will all make tracks with great alacrity toward the center where the cheerful mother stands, resourceful, kindly and imperturbable.

THE INTERNATIONAL TEMPERANCE CONGRESS.

PROHIBITION PARK, STATEN ISLAND, JUNE 3–5.

Bright and cloudless dawned the 3d of June. The dark pall that hung over the shores of the Atlantic the previous night was swept away by the morning breeze and the June sun shone in all its splendor over the lightly rippled waters of the bay, when the tried and the true of the temperance reform wended their way to the beautiful camping-ground, Prohibition Park, the very name of which is indicative of the cause of their gathering.

From north and south and east and west they came to do homage to their "Grand Old Man" and lay at his feet while living the tributes of love, gratitude and admiration which, alas! so often are only bestowed upon the graves of the world's heroes. General Dow is fortunate in this respect; the garlands twined by loving hands are placed upon his brow before it is chilled by the hand of death, the sweet fragrance of the gratitude of nations is wafted to him to-day, not saved to perfume his bier or indicate his future resting place beneath his native pines.

Was the cloudless sky, the pure atmosphere prophetic of that coming day when after the passing of the nightly shadows the Sun of Righteousness shall arise over a purified earth from whence ascend no sickening odors from dramshops and dens of infamy? We believe it and to hasten that day the hero now honored has done his part.

At promptly ten o'clock the exercises of the day were opened with a devotional service, led by D. S. Gregory, D. D., late president of the Lake Forest University, Ill., who chose for his Scriptural reading a few verses from Romans 14 and Proverbs 20 and 23. ("Wine is a mocker," etc., and "Who hath woe, who hath sorrow," etc.) In his remarks Dr. Gregory called attention to the fact that the foundation of every good movement is laid in the religion of Jesus Christ, and that the principles of reform are found in the Word of God. After singing "How firm a foundation," Dr. A. A. Miner, of Boston, led in prayer. Eloquently did the venerable champion of prohibition express his gratitude for what had been given to the world through the life and work of General Dow; warmly did he thank the Lord for the men that are at intervals raised up to emphasize new truths.

As this part of the service was "irregular," to quote Dr. Gregory, any one in the audience who so desired was invited to take part, and several availed themselves of the opportunity.

General Dow, who had quietly entered the hall, was now called upon to say a word and took his place on the platform amid the applause of the audience. There he stood, the hero of many battles, unbent by age, with the snow of almost a century glistening in his locks, modestly receiving the plaudits of those who love and revere him. He spoke briefly, remarking that before the day was over he might have occasion to say something more, and referred to the old Virginia saying: "Never say die," which was what the Prohibitionists of the United States are saying just now.

Col. Alexander S. Bacon, of Brooklyn, president of the Sunday Observance Society and chairman of the executive committee of arrangements, now called the meeting to order.

This congress, said Colonel Bacon, was the most remarkable gathering of this century, and on behalf of the committee of arrangements, on behalf of the residents of Prohibition Park, and of the citizens of Staten Island he welcomed all present.

Hon. William T. Wardwell, of New York, who was to preside at the morning session, was now introduced. He defined the character of the meeting as an expression of gratitude to Neal Dow, who stood at the front of this age or any age. The psalmist had said: "Blessed is the man who passing through the valley of Baca make it a well." General Dow had more than made a well; the influence of his lifework has touched the world.

"The only distressing thing about General Dow," said Mr. Wardwell, "was that he had already crossed the line beyond which few mortals are permitted to go." Fain did the gray-haired speaker wish he could discover the fountain of youth, so as to keep the gallant leader forever. In closing he expressed the conviction that if they all get together the liquor traffic would be annihilated before the close of this century.

Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden, of Boston, was warmly greeted as the representative of the National W. C. T. U., and spoke for the white-ribboners in the absence of their beloved leader. Well was the organized motherhood of the land represented. Mrs. Fessenden spoke of the honor of which General Dow was the recipient, an honor not shown by his countrymen alone, but in all parts of the world, and pointed to him as a man of perennial youth, not only able to take care of himself, but to care for the homes of others.

Aaron M. Powell, editor of the Philanthropist, was the next speaker. He told how he had met General Dow at a temperance congress as far back as 1853. Times had changed since then and the man who then stood in the minority was now in the majority. There was no organized liquor league in those days, but times had changed even in that respect, and now an organized effort was needed to counteract the influence of the rum power.

Neal Dow, said Mr. Powell, had sounded the keynote of the W. C. T. U. and in his address he also touched upon the differences between the past and the present, especially regarding woman. The following eloquent passage ought to be burned into the heart and conscience of every citizen who loves his country and cares for its weal:

"It is the death-knell of the republic when its public men must trim their sails to catch the breeze of the liquor traffic." And when shall the Christian voters of this nation wake up to the truth of this statement of the speaker that "the saloons hold the balance of power in our politics and dictate to the law makers"?

Mrs. Ellen J. Phinney, of Ohio, spoke next on behalf of the non-partisan W. C. T. U. She referred to General Dow as the Moses of temperance reform, whose righteous soul had been vexed times and again by finding the people worshiping the golden calf, and dwelt in her brief but pointed address upon the achievements of the honored guest of the day.

Next on the program was Hon. Samuel D. Hastings, of Wisconsin, a representative of the Independent Order of Good Templars. He said he doubted that any one had been in the temperance work longer than he, for his first temperance speech was made over sixty years ago. He had never believed in license, high or low, and had introduced a bill in the legislature for the repeal of the license laws, which was, however, defeated, but by only two votes. General Dow had been an inspiration to him, and he paid a high tribute to the work and influence of the "father of prohibition."

A very important matter was next to be considered, and Colonel Bacon laid it properly before the people. The aim of the congress was to organize a National Temperance Advisory Board, composed of the first two officers of each general temperance organization that favors total abstinence, but to carry that idea into effect at least $2,500 was needed, which amount ought to be raised by the congress.

"Watchman, tell us of the night," was now appropriately sung, and, during the singing, Mrs. Helen M. Gougar entered, carrying a huge bouquet, which, amid cheers, was presented to General Dow.

C. A. Everett, of St. Johns, New Brunswick, Most Worthy Patriarch of the Sons of Temperance of North America, welcomed General Dow on behalf of that organization.

It was long since, said the Patriarch, he met their guest down in Virginia, in 1852, when he was initiated into the order. The Sons of Temperance did not begin on prohibition principles, but when General Dow came into the ranks he brought prohibition with him. Speaking of the present outlook Mr. Everett said that the people of the United States had to wake up, or their neighbors across the border would be ahead of them. Several provinces of Canada have already spoken in favor of total prohibition; New Brunswick had had and lost prohibition, but was going to regain it. They would go to Ottawa next, and make it national.

William Daniels, of Maryland, candidate for vice-president on the Prohibition ticket in 1888, spoke as the representative of the Prohibition party. He was present, he said, to honor his friend, Neal Dow, owing to whose teachings he had nailed his colors to the mast in the legislature of Maryland in 1853. He made his first political speech on prohibition principles, and on those principles he was reelected by his constituents. More than half of the counties in his state had local prohibition, and this year they planned to have General Dow come over and help them.

Mr. and Mrs. Beveridge now brought down the house by singing "Putting on Sand."

The representative of the Catholic church, Father McGlynn, was prevented by illness from being present, and a letter from his substitute, Rev. Father Nilan, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., who had not yet arrived, was read, after which Dr. Miner and Mrs. Gougar made a few remarks. Dr. Miner quoted Sir Wilfrid Lawson who said that "Neal Dow seemed to have got hold of the truth that the cause of drunkenness is drink." Mrs. Gougar said that we had with us to-day one who had planted a principle, one who had never compromised with evil, and that those present were there to bring to him the flowers of gratitude and appreciation, and were glad to bring them while he lived.

Henry B. Metcalf, of Rhode Island, Prohibition candidate for governor, spoke briefly for the National Temperance Society, and after him arose Colonel Ritter, the legal hero of the Hoosier state. Colonel Ritter pleaded for harmony and said that if any one was there to sow discord he would better not be there at all.

Mr. Hall, of the Christian Endeavor Society, brought to General Dow the greetings of the youngest of the temperance organizations whose 1,681,000 members said amen to his work.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

This session will stand out in future history as a fitting memorial to a grand idea, heroic, nay, divine, in its conception and faithfully, unflinchingly executed. It was the crowning of a noble life, one of the brightest rays in the great sunset of a historic character.

The gathering was truly representative. The different ranks of the temperance army had sent its most tested champions to greet the foremost leader of them all. True, some famous names were missing from the program, but all knew that though absent in body, separated perhaps by oceans, or continents, from the gathered clans, the bearers of those names were present in spirit, and the cheers that greeted their names whenever mentioned gave proof of the place they held in the hearts of that great assembly.

It was but fitting that one who had shared the dangers of the Southern battlefield with the hero of the day, no less than the hardships and triumphs of the moral war he has so long been waging, should preside over this session. When Gen. Wager Swayne, leaning on his crutch, appeared at the speaker's stand, the audience broke forth in prolonged cheers. "I do not forget," said the gallant warrior, "that General Dow was just as great a fighter for Abolition as for Prohibition." Prayer was offered by Rev. Hilliard, of Boston, and Rev. Father Nilan, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., delivered the first address.

Father Nilan said he stood before the audience in the spirit that would remove evil and substitute good. This spirit is simply what our Master taught us as being next to the greatest commandment: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Mr. and Mrs. Beveridge sang "The Broken Wing," and for encore "The Twin Votes," which naturally brought forth a thundering applause.

The orator of the occasion, Joseph Cook, now arose, a veritable Saul among the prophets, towering head and shoulders above the majority of his supporters on the platform. Space does not permit an extended report of the address. The epigrammatical arrows that flew right and left were not shot at random; they hit the mark. The oration was "A review of sixty years of temperance agitation—what it has accomplished," and as the program stated, "A tribute to the work started by General Dow with the agitation for prohibition in the state of Maine." A few stray expressions, caught on the wing, may show the drift of the sentiments.

Dr. Cook began by quoting Mr. Gladstone, who had said that "the House of Lords must either be mended or ended." General Dow has said that the liquor traffic cannot be mended, therefore it must be ended. He had fought a good fight, kept the faith, but, thank God, at ninety years not finished his course.

Glancing over the annals of the temperance reform he mentioned how far back the liquor traffic had been denounced by men famous in the world's history. John Wesley, for instance, classified liquor dealers as men living in houses stained by blood. "God has come to stay, and whatever is contrary to His will shall have to go," exclaimed the prophet of better times, and the audience showed by the applause that followed that this opinion was shared.

"General Dow was fortunate in choosing his parents," said Dr. Cook. "He was also born at a conspicuous time—the very year Napoleon was crowned—and the most stupendous events of history have taken place during his lifetime."

The story of General Dow's entrance upon temperance work was graphically told, the incidents of the passing of the Maine law related and the present condition of Maine described. Getting down to the politics of to-day the speaker asked with mingled scorn and pathos, "Are we coming to the day when promises made before election are like the platforms of railroad cars—made to get in and off on but not to ride on?"

Telling the story of the dog which turned over times and again at the bidding of his master to earn a cracker which he did not get after all, Dr. Cook said that the temperance people had turned over and over for the old parties but had not got the cracker yet and they did not propose to turn over once more.

"Can Neal Dow's program be mended by moderate drinking?" came next in tones of thunder from the platform, and the vast assembly answered as one voice, "No!"

A glowing tribute was paid to the leaders of the white ribbon movement and their names applauded to the echo by the enthusiastic audience. Speaking of the scientific temperance instruction in the public schools now in force in all but five states of the union, Dr. Cook said that Mrs. Hunt would shine as a jewel on the forefinger of the twentieth century.

But we must pass over the rest of the brilliant "review" in silence. It closed with the whisper of the statue of Liberty answered by the monument on Plymouth Rock, and through the auditorium echoed the words put into the mouth of the guardian of the main entrance to the republic: "I forbid the bans; I forbid the union of rum, religion and politics."

The presentation of the formal address to General Dow was next on the program. This document, presented in the name of more than 700 temperance leaders, and which will go down to posterity as the crystallized sentiment of the temperance hosts of the closing hours of the nineteenth century, was most impressively read by B. B. Tyler, D. D., of New York.

The address is too lengthy to be given in its entirety, but we cannot refrain from quoting its last paragraphs:

"This year the door of return for the saloon has been opened in Iowa. The Judas hand of the Liquor League is busy in the politics of Kansas. Let prohibition but be annulled there, and the solid rum power of the nation will concentrate itself upon Maine, to undo your grand lifework, sir, and never rest till there shall not be a spot between the seas where the American citizen can be free from the baleful shadow of the legalized saloon.

"That is the program. That is the battle-line—the extermination of temperance or the extermination of the saloon.

"We accept the challenge. We hail the clear-cut issue. Their rock is not as our rock. They come to us with the still and the brewing vat, the jug and the bottle, but we go to them in the name of the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, whom they have defied. We are fighting an enemy who cannot pray, while with us are the prayers of saintly fathers and mothers, of pure and devoted wives and of white-souled little children gathering year by year, like a cloud of incense, around the throne of Majesty in the heavens. The answer must come upon earth, and if we bring but the consecrated hearts God is ready to give the blessing now to our waiting hands. This congress must be historic. Something must be done here to advance the cause of total abstinence and prohibition to a point it has never before reached in all the march of time.

"With the hope and prayer that God will grant you to see the dawn of this grander triumph, we lay at your feet, Gen. Neal Dow, to-day the tribute—all too little—of earnest, grateful hearts, wishing for you every blessing in the heavenly Father's gift; while

"'Behind you holy martyrs
Hold up the palm and crown,
Before you unborn ages send
Their benedictions down.'"

Rev. J. C. Fernald, of New York.
Commander Ballington Booth, of the Salvation Army.

Deeply moved, General Dow rose to respond, and the audience rose en masse to greet him. After the tremendous applause had died away he told in his earnest, eloquent way what prohibition had done for Maine. The venerable speaker prefaced his speech with saying that it was not true that prohibition was a failure. It has been a great, a wonderful success. As an illustration of how people talk about what they do not know, he told how a gentleman who had been in Maine a week came to him and said that prohibition was a failure. On being pressed for his reasons for that conclusion he admitted that he had been refused wherever he had applied for liquor and that even a barber, who of course ought to know, had told him it could not be bought in the city,

"but," said he, "I have seen a drunken man lying in the park with a bottle by his side," whereupon the General asked him if he knew for sure that the man had not come on the early train from Boston.

A generation has grown up which has never seen an open saloon and the condition of the state is entirely changed. Maine is now one of the most prosperous states in the Union, whereas before the adoption of prohibition it was undoubtedly the poorest.

"The person," continued General Dow, "who says that prohibition cannot win is very much mistaken. It will win when the churches wake up from their lethargy. They are the masters of the situation. When they say go, the liquor traffic will go. Some say that the temperance cause is spoiled by being carried into politics, but the temperance question is the most prominent before the people, for more misery comes from the liquor traffic than from all other crimes combined."

General Dow closed by saying that this great meeting must result in making the people understand the question better than before, and took his seat amid tumultuous applause.

The historic session closed with benediction by Father Nilan.

EVENING SESSION, JUNE 3.

The last session of Sunday was presided over by ex-Governor Perham, of Maine, who said they were very proud of Neal Dow in his native state. As he had been requested to say something about prohibition in Maine in addition to what General Dow had already said, he told how, under the law that bore the name of his state, the jails had been emptied and poorhouses relieved from the burden that had rested upon them. He also told how a strong license law had once been enacted by the people, who thought it would be an improvement upon prohibition. It was a failure. A change came over the country. About six months after the passage of the law it was found that drinking had increased three, four or five times, and, in some places, even ten times. They let the matter run for two years to test it, although the license law was unpopular. After two years the law was repealed and, as the prohibition sentiment of the state has been steadily growing, and prohibition, after a thirty-three years' trial, put into the constitution by a majority of 47,075 votes, there was little danger of a license law ever being enacted again.

Mr. Joseph A. Bogardus now read a few of the many congratulatory letters and telegrams received by General Dow. Among the congratulations we note Lady Henry Somerset, the National W. C. T. U. through Mrs. Woodbridge, Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, Mrs. Clinton B. Fisk, Hon. John Bidwell, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Rev. Josiah Strong, Dr. Talmage, Francis Murphy, John J. McLaren, of Canada, Bishop Hurst of Washington, and a host of others.

Governor Tillman, of South Carolina, who had arrived during the afternoon session, was requested to show himself, and "the worn-out governor of Maine," as the chairman styled himself, introduced "the live governor of South Carolina," who, interrupted by cheers, gave notice that Monday night he would tell what he knew about being "far between dispensaries."

Then followed one of the most powerful addresses of the congress; an address which Dr. Funk truly said ought to be in the hands of not only every Catholic but every Protestant minister. Father Lawrence W. Murphy, of Montreal, well sustained his reputation both as orator and temperance reformer. The address was a terrible arraignment of the churches for their indifference in regard to the temperance cause. "I came here to-day," said Father Murphy, "as a Roman Catholic priest to lift up my voice and tell the house of Jacob, or in other words, the churches, of their sins. I will tell you of the juggernauts of so-called Christian civilization which are crushing the heart's blood out of millions of our fellow beings. Shall the sleeping churches awaken to the cries of the heart-bleeding multitudes, and with a baptism of heavenly deliverance, sweep away as by a divine tidal wave this idolatrous temple of the liquor traffic? The social, political and economic unrest and distress of the world demands an answer and that answer will be either religion or revolution."

"Drink has no place in this world," shouted the Catholic apostle of temperance. "Alcohol makes a sick man sicker, and a weak man weaker. A monkey and a dog will die the respectable deaths of decent brutes, rather than subsist on food saturated with alcohol. Do the churches and the clergy imitate Jesus? No. The watch dogs on the towers of Israel are muzzled, and the stones are crying out that the wolves of the liquor traffic are devouring the fold for whom Christ died. If Christ came into the world to-day, He would not shake hands with most of the modern clergymen, for they know Him not. Alcohol is no more a gift of God than cholera. It destroys the body and damns the soul."

Father Murphy proposed that "all the Catholic prelates of Canada and the United States meet all the leading representatives of the Protestant churches, say, two years hence, in Chicago, and let a Christian edict go forth anathematizing the manufacture and sale of alcoholic intoxicants on the American hemisphere," and closed with, "In the name of Jesus, the Saviour of men, let the churches come together, and if they do the power of the Holy Ghost will overshadow them and they will sweep this evil forever from the earth with the force of an incoming, irresistible tide from the great ocean of God."

The session closed with a few three-minute speeches.

MORNING SESSION, JUNE 4.

This session opened with Mrs. Caroline B. Buell in the chair. The committee on resolutions, to which all resolutions were to be referred without debate, was appointed and the names announced as follows:

Volney B. Cushing, Portland, Me.; Hon. Wm. Daniels, Baltimore, Md.; Wm. H. Armstrong, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Fessenden, president Massachusetts W. C. T. U.; Mrs. Ellen J. Phinney, president National Non-partisan W. C. T. U.; Hon. Samuel D. Hastings, Wisconsin; Col. Eli F. Ritter, Indianapolis, Ind.; Hon. Henry B. Metcalf, Rhode Island; Joseph A. Bogardus, New York; Dr. Miner. Boston.

The first subject on the program was, "The Medical Profession and Total Abstinence." An excellent paper by Dr. Norman Kerr, of London, was read by Hon. Henry B. Metcalf. Dr. Kerr gave the pioneer medical testimony on temperance, the American and the English testimony on the same subject, spoke of the decrease of alcoholic expenditure in hospitals and workhouses, treated alcohol as a medicine and stated the peril of an intoxicant prescription as well as the responsibility of the medical attendant. He defined the duty of the medical man to the inebriate and spoke of the true medical teaching on alcohol.

A paper on the same subject by Dr. T. D. Crothers, Hartford, Conn., was next read by Dr. Shepard, of Brooklyn. Dr. Crothers said that to the medical man total abstinence is not a theory, it is a fact. The societies for the study and cure of inebriety have brought out the fact of disease in drunkenness, and opened up a vast realm of causes and conditions of heredity. These societies in their work are slowly and surely laying foundations for a great revolution of theory and opinion concerning alcohol and drunkenness.

Rev. Charles L. Thompson, D. D., of New York, followed with a speech on "The Saloon a Power in Municipal Politics." He brought forward the fact that it was in the great cities the important battles of reform were to be fought.

"But," went on Dr. Thompson, "there is one way to meet the question of the saloon in politics and that is to meet it on the high ground of principle. As long as the liquor traffic stands on legally protected ground it is too much for you, same as the giant was too much for Hercules as long as he stood on Mother Earth."

The next speaker was Col. Eli F. Ritter, of Indiana. He spoke of the legal aspect of the question and said there were laws enough to suppress the liquor traffic if they were enforced.

Mr. Stearns, secretary of the National Temperance Publication society, spoke in the absence of T. Edward Murphy, of Connecticut, the son of Francis Murphy, who was to have treated the subject of "Pledge Signing." Mr. Stearns said that they could always count on him as one for temperance, and told how he had been down South and found that the drink devil was just as bad in a dispensary as in a licensed saloon.

Father Murphy, of Montreal, next announced by the chair, spoke eloquently, as usual. He reminded the delegates that they were there on a solemn mission, and that the thoughts uttered will become a motto. On this question there was no Catholicism or Protestantism.

Dr. A. A. Miner, of Boston, a veteran of veterans in the temperance reform, was called upon, and responded by saying that it was a pleasure to speak to veterans. In 1830 he gave his first temperance lecture, and since that he has never tasted a drop of liquor.

Prof. Samuel Dickie, of Michigan, chairman National Prohibition Committee, who had just arrived, was accorded a royal welcome as he stepped forward. He spoke briefly, portraying the effects of the liquor traffic, and being requested to answer some questions replied to the following by Dr. Boole:

Question.—Back of the saloon are two things greater than that institution—the license and the law. How are we to dispose of the saloon while the license remains and the law remains on the statute books?

Answer.—To wipe out the saloon wipe out the law. Get rid of the saloon by shaking all the license voting Christians over the brimstone pit until they change their course.

Having previously remarked that his church would not allow him to keep a saloon, but it would allow its bishops and ministers to vote for others who kept them, he was asked by a gentleman in the audience how he justified himself in leaving a party which supported the saloon, and staying in a church which did not support prohibition. His answer was that that question was "bothering him a good deal just now."

AFTERNOON SESSION, JUNE 4.

Col. Eli F. Ritter presided. Dr. Louis Albert Banks, of Brooklyn, took the place of Dr. David J. Burrell, of New York, who was to speak on the subject of "The Drinking Usages in Society."

Not long ago, said the speaker, Dr. Daniel Steele, of Boston, had told him how, when a boy, he was taken to an auction of church pews and that when the bidding was lagging the demijohn was brought out and the people treated. After that the bidding became more spirited. The temperance sentiment had made progress since then. About sixty years ago drinking was common among the middle classes; to-day it is principally confined to the Four Hundred and the Submerged Tenth.

Now came a very interesting part of the program. The officers of the different temperance organizations represented were requested to step upon the platform and with General Dow, who received an ovation whenever he appeared as the central figure, a historic group was taken. After the camera had done its work Mrs. Helen M. Gougar took her place at the speaker's stand. It was incomprehensible, she said, that in the afternoon of the nineteenth century we should have to discuss the relation of the Christian church to the saloon.

After a song rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Beveridge in their own inimitable way, a paper was read by Rev. J. C. Fernald, of New Jersey, on the topic: "A National Bureau of Temperance Literature."

The plan outlined was to sow the nation knee-deep with temperance literature, as the state of Maine had been sown fifty years ago. The literature is ready, said Rev. Fernald. The National Temperance Society has a rich store of books, pamphlets and leaflets, and the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association has a great number of admirable productions. Various individual publishing houses have also each their store. The question was only to give the literature feet and hands. It must come off the shelf into the hand and the home.

To this end a Missionary Society of Distribution was proposed, with a central bureau probably in or near New York, and branches in every city, town and hamlet. The members of this society would simply take the one obligation that each one will endeavor to distribute at least ten cents worth of literature every three months.

If this society becomes a fact, provisions would be made for the translation of the best temperance leaflets into German, Swedish, Italian and Spanish, and for their circulation among those people by persons of the same nationalities.

It was further proposed that a start be made there at the congress by the appointment of a committee, with power to nominate a board of directors, to consist of from three to five members from each state. If the proposed society was given a room and a man, able to survey the vast field, and such assistance as he may need to do the clerical work, it would undertake to put 5,000,000 pages of temperance literature into the hands of the American people before the congress meets again next year.

A resolution recommending the establishment of a National Bureau of Temperance Literature was introduced and carried.

Mr. B. F. Wright, representing the Prohibitionists of Iowa, spoke next. He paid the highest tribute to the honored guest of the congress, General Dow, and after that turned to the condition of his state.

The condition of Iowa was "better than it was, but not as good as it had been." In 1896, however, prophesied Mr. Wright, the people will bring in prohibition with a majority of over 50,000, for there is as much prohibition sentiment there now as when the prohibitory law was introduced.

The next subject, "Total Abstinence for Young Men; How to Make it General," brought out one of the brightest stars in the galaxy of the congress orators, A. C. Dixon, D. D., of Brooklyn.

"The young men," said Dr. Dixon, "must be convinced of four things to make total abstinence general:

"1. That nature is against alcohol.

"2. That the Bible is against alcohol.

"3. That the church is against alcohol.

"4. That the state is against alcohol."

Rev. Father Eagan, of Yonkers, N. Y., representing the Catholic Total Abstinence union, spoke briefly, touching on the same subject. "The total abstinence idea is growing in the Catholic church," said the Father. "The church is committed to the opposition of the saloon, and either the church or the saloon must go down."

A congratulatory letter to General Dow from Mr. Terrence V. Powderly was now read by Mr. Joseph A. Bogardus.

Against a background formed by the great map of the United States, with only five states covered with black, the next speaker stood out boldly, a personification of combined gentleness and strength, of consecrated motherhood and heroism.

Mrs. Hunt reviewed the work done for the introduction of scientific temperance instruction in the public schools, and told of the battles fought and the victories won, and when she said that thirteen million of children were now under the instruction of temperance hygiene, the auditorium echoed back the prolonged applause of the enthusiastic assemblage.

Mrs. Ella A. Boole spoke with unsurpassed eloquence on the same subject. She likened the liquor traffic to an Upas tree, which it is our duty to cut down. This was not only the duty of the W. C. T. U., it is the duty of all. Mrs. Boole also reminded the assembly of the almost forgotten fact that it was a woman who first suggested the placing of the American flag over the school-house. The Grand Army took up the idea, afterward it was taken up by the politicians, and now flags are waving everywhere. She asked that the right hand of fellowship be given to the W. C. T. U. by the temperance people in enforcing the temperance instruction laws and that they help the women when they are trying to get the text-books into the schools.

An "address to the people of the United States and Canada" entitled, "Reasons for the more than fifty years of temperance agitation" was next read by Mr. E. J. Wheeler of The Voice. The committee selected to frame this address was composed of the following persons:

E. J. Wheeler, of The Voice, New York; H. K. Carroll, of the Independent, New York; A. A. Hopkins, of Harriman, Tenn.; Edward Everett Hale, D. D., of Massachusetts; Rev. Father Malone, of Brooklyn; Sallie Chapin, of South Carolina; Robert Graham, of New York; Samuel Dickie, of Michigan; Hon. George E. Foster, Minister of Finance, Canada; Mrs. Ellen J. Phinney, of Ohio.

The document is too long to be given here, but it closes thus:

"We express the hope, warranted by the deliverances of the courts during the last few years, that in the not remote future they will decree the saloon an outlaw and an alien, on the principle enunciated by the supreme court of the United States when it said (102 U. S., 816):

"'No legislature can bargain away the public health or the public morals. The public themselves cannot do this, much less their servants. Government is organized with a view to their preservation, and cannot divest itself of the power to provide for them.'"

Dr. Boole, Mr. John Lloyd Thomas, Hon. Henry B. Metcalf and Dr. Miner spoke from the floor on the address, and an amendment was moved to substitute for the word saloon, drink traffic, or traffic in alcoholic drinks.

EVENING SESSION, JUNE 4.

Up to this time the speakers had generally agreed as to methods; now there was a change in the program. The other side was to be heard. A more appropriate person to present that side could hardly have been chosen than Governor Tillman, of South Carolina, the man of dispensary fame, who in giving his pedigree, said he went straight from the plow to the chief executive's chair. The auditorium was filled, the New York reporters had scented the fray, and they were there to witness it as seen through their own spectacles of different hue, and, as thus seen or imagined, give it to their readers.

"The autocrat of the evening," to use Colonel Bacon's pet expression, was H. L. Wayland, D. D., of Philadelphia, a giant in stature, who amply filled the chair. Introduced by Colonel Bacon, he alluded in his preliminary remarks, in a jocular way, to the national reputation earned by his introductor through his arrest by John Y. McKane, the czar of Gravesend, now serving a seven years' sentence in Sing Sing prison for election frauds, and spoke in terms of highest appreciation of the lifework of Neal Dow.

The following telegram was received and read:

"California sends greeting. Outlook bright. Harvest ripe. On to Washington." KATE LINDEN.

(Concluded next week.)

A SONG FOR TO-DAY.

Groweth the morning from gray to gold;
  Up, my heart, and greet the sun!
Yesterday's cares are a tale that is told,
  Yesterday's tasks are a work that is done;
Yesterday's failures are all forgot,
  Buried beneath the billows of sleep;
Yesterday's burdens are as they were not,—
  Lay them low in the soundless deep.

Share thy crust and ask no dole,
  Offer the cup thou wouldst never drain;
Only he who saveth his soul
  Loseth all that he fain would gain.
Smile with him who has gained his day;
  Smile the gladder, if at thy cost.
It was his to win and thine to aspire,
  It is his to-day who loved the most.

Pluck the flower that blooms at thy door;
  Cherish the love that the day may send;
Cometh an hour when all thy store
  Vainly were offered for flower or friend.
Gratefully take what life offereth,
  Looking to heaven nor seeking reward.
So shalt thou find, come life, come death,
  Earth and the sky are in sweet accord.

A BABY'S FUNERAL.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

It was such a pitiful little funeral, so sad in its every detail, so full of the pathos of poverty!

The memory of it has lingered with me for years,—the memory of that baby's funeral in the poorest, lowest quarter of the town.

The work of a flower-missioner leads her into the by-ways of life, into odd, unexpected, out-of-the-way places, into the pathetic homes of poverty and sin.

The cheap little coffin upon which I laid my flowers encased a tiny fragment of humanity—a three-weeks-old baby girl. The frail little body lay at peace in a simple little gown of cheap material, and the poor, pinched baby face with its blue eyes forever closed touched one's heart by the very pitifulness of the drooping little mouth that had known its mother's kiss so brief a time.

The mourners sat in their wooden chairs against the wall,—father, mother and four small children. The father sat with face downcast but one could see the marks of dissipation upon every feature. The poor mother, wan and haggard from recent illness, insufficient care and grief for the little being who lay before her, sat beside her husband, patient, humble, submissive. No ray of hope shone in her face,—just patient, dumb despair.

The four little brothers and sisters sat looking about them curiously at the novelty of the scene. They were all barefooted, and sat curling their little toes about the rounds of their chairs like bird's claws about the twig of a tree. Those little bare feet! How eloquently they told the sad story—drunkenness and its inevitable result.

The floor of the one poor room was bare and not too clean. The scanty furniture was of the plainest and cheapest kind. The tiny coffin stood upon the small box stove (for it was summer time) and near it stood the minister, whose highest joy it was to enter homes like these, to comfort aching hearts, to bring the healing power of Christ, his Master, and apply it to such needs as these. A few poor neighbors, with sympathy upon their faces, sat and stood about the room, and in one corner were three or four of us who had come to sing.

I cannot recall one word of the minister's prayer, or of his brief address. I do not know what were the words he read from that great Book of Comfort for human souls. I only know that while he prayed the hot tears ran down his face, that his deep voice broke in such sobs as only strong men, moved by great emotion, can express. I only know that borne upon that shaken voice there rose such a power of passionate pleading to God—not for the dead baby, that was safe—but for the father and the sad-eyed mother, for the four little brothers and sisters who were left. The very angels must have paused awe-stricken that midsummer day when that strong supplication came up to the gates of heaven.

It seemed as though a something Christ-like entered into the minister's soul that hour; such pity, such sympathy, such deep, unfathomable love for these poor souls as the Man of Galilee himself must have shown had He been the comforter in that poor home.

Not one in that full room was left unmoved. It would indeed have been a heart of marble—a heart such as no human being can possess—that failed to respond to the eloquence and pathos of that prayer. In the experience of years I have never heard a prayer that compared.

The minister, a highly-educated man, a man of great talents and wide-spread influence, had been so filled with divine love and pity and so thrilled with passionate longing to lift up and heal the sin-sick souls groping in the darkness of poverty and ignorance, that all his soul ran over with compassion.

I do not know what good was wrought that day to others; I know that one heart was deeply touched and lifted up and filled anew with desire to be good and do good.

We sang that old, sweet hymn—"Shall we gather at the river?"—the weeping, pale-faced mother bent over the tiny baby form in its little coffin, the children were lifted up to look once more and for the last time upon the wee sister's face,—the father gazed in silence—with what thoughts, who can tell?

A plain, two-seated wagon stood at the door, and when the father and mother in their shabby mourning were seated they took the little burden upon their laps,—the tiny black coffin with its simple cluster of pink and white blossoms tied with white ribbon. The neighbors lingered and talked a little, then dispersed, the minister walked, with his Bible under his arm and with a thoughtful face, and so they wended their slow way up the long hill to the cemetery where the little one was left to sleep.

Into the daily life of a flower-missioner there come experiences strangely sad and sweet. The silent comfort of a bunch of blossoms or a simple little wreath of white and green,—the warm hand-clasp of sympathy, the kind look, the magic power of even the least thing we can say—"I am so sorry for you"—are often the keys that touch a sore, despairing heart and unlock it to the Great Physician and His gentle ministrations.

We cannot all wrestle with God in such impassioned prayer as did the minister that day beside the baby's coffin; we cannot all speak with such eloquence and kindle indifferent hearts to highest aspirations; we cannot all sing—even the old familiar hymns that bear such blessing on their tuneful wings, but we can carry to the homes of sorrow and poverty the light and beauty and fragrance of those sweet messengers of comfort—God's flowers.

And it is no small thing, after all, for hearts are often touched by the silent power of beauty and purity that are not reached by spoken words, and often their sweet influence is left behind in the lonely home after the loved one is laid away from human sight. God's blessing surely rests upon a work so beautiful, so pure, and to the worker there come, as I have said, experiences like these, which make her better, truer and more like Him whose servant she delights to be.

SUCCESSFUL CONDUCT OF A BUSINESS MEETING.

BY ELLA BEECHER GITTINGS.

How to dispatch the most business with the least waste of time and nerve force is a problem of ever-increasing importance to the busy local workers who are the sinews of our Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Of no two things has the average W. C. T. U. woman less to spare than time and nerve force. To use these with conscientious economy should be our most earnest desire.

All realize the waste of time when business is allowed to drag, or is done in ignorant, "bungling" fashion, but do all comprehend the full mischief to our over-taxed nerves? As an illustration let us think back to the conduct of business in our own homes on two typical days—for we assume that most W. C. T. U. women are practical housekeepers. Both were busy days, but one is remembered as the day when "everything went right," and the other as the day when "everything went wrong." In the first instance you put forth much more physical effort, perhaps, than in the second, but you went to bed with a self-approving sense of having done well much work, than which nothing is more conducive to quiet nerves and refreshing sleep. At the close of the second day you dropped exhausted into the nearest chair, every nerve strung to its highest tension, saying—possibly sobbing: "I've worked so hard all day and I cannot see the first thing that I have accomplished!"

It is not the housekeeper possessed of greatest brawn who always gets best results, but she who has most system in her work; she, who in the language of our grandmothers, has learned to "let her head save her heels." A frail woman, who has learned this, often puts to shame some sister of almost Amazonian strength.

The same holds true in a degree of the feelings with which we leave our W. C. T. U. meetings. If all do not feel this difference I am sure that the president and secretary do.

Let us take as the Golden Text for our business meetings, "Let all things be done decently and in order." This resolves itself naturally into two parts: 1. Things to be done. 2. Manner of doing them.

Our business meetings are of two kinds, regular and special. The business of the latter is usually stated in the call and should be entered upon at once with little if any preliminary. For the regular meetings a fixed order of business should be adopted and strictly adhered to, except when set aside by a two-thirds vote to meet an emergency. This order of business should be well understood and remembered not only by the officers but by the members, who will learn thus not to waste time by trying to introduce business out of order. The order usually adopted is that found in "Roberts' Rules of Order," viz: 1. Reading of minutes. 2. Reports of standing committees. 3. Reports of select committees. 4. Unfinished business. 5. New business.

As boards of managers, superintendents of departments, etc., come under the head of standing committees and there is seldom time for all to report at one meeting, business is facilitated by assigning to each a regular day upon which to report. The president and secretary should then have perfectly in mind or on paper or note-book just what reports are due each day. The president should call these reports promptly when due and the chairman of committee or superintendent be on hand with or send full but concise report.

The art of successful reporting is worthy of closest study. Do not—pray, do not—let the preamble consume more time than the actual report. Too often this preamble, usually taking the form of excuses, is about all there is of it. If you have nothing to report say so in less than a dozen words, and "stand aside," as King David bade Ahimaaz do for Cushi, who brought the real tidings, while Ahimaaz could only report that he "saw a tumult, but knew not what it was."

In disposing of committee reports bear in mind that "accept" or "adopt" are synonymous, and both make the action of the committee the will of the union.

The reports of special committees usually have a close relation to unfinished business, which follows them as a logical sequence. The reports of standing committees often suggest new business. This furnishes temptation for the common error of proceeding at once to its transaction instead of deferring it until its proper time. By this error important unfinished business is still further postponed for lack of time, and the whole machinery thrown seriously "out of gear."

In the transaction of new business we cannot remember too well that it should always be brought before the house in the form of a motion before it is open for discussion. Have rules regulating discussions and adhere to them.

Do not resolve yourselves into a "committee of the whole" or "informally consider" a question unless you have formally voted to do so. We often hear it said: "What is the use of all this formality in our small local meetings?" We must not forget that each union is a part of the whole magnificent machinery of the World's W. C. T. U. Good business training and experience in the local union is the foundation of good business transactions in county, district and state conventions. Successful and thorough conduct of state business insures perfect National and World's business and saves, much precious time for the inspiring papers and addresses that clothe the dry bones of our conventions with the flesh and blood of true philanthropy in which alone the public in interested. Truly if "one member suffer, all the membevs suffer."

One of the greatest hindrances in our local business meetings is the lack of personal responsibility on the part of the members. In nearly every organization there are usually a few members who more than others feel this personal obligation. Let us call them Mesdames A, B and C. They are usually busy women, to whom time is precious—to many of them it has an actual cash value. They are frequently energetic, nervous women to whom dilatory work of any sort is real torture. Rather than see business lag they are ready with motions to put it in shape for action. Now Mesdames X, Y and Z, whose obligation is equal, finding that A, B and C will make motions, allow them a monopoly of this part of the work. Presently a rumor gets afloat—not always a kindly one, either—that Mesdames A, B and C "run the union." Whose fault is it? If you will not, or cannot, bear your share of the burden of responsibility at least you can refrain from backbiting those upon whose shoulders you shift it.

Truly has it been said that a fitting epitaph for many women would be not "She hath done what she could," but "She hath done what she thought she couldn't."

So, while we sing with swelling hearts and dewy eyes, "We all belong," let us not forget that we "belong" to the labor as well as the joy, to the responsibilities as well as the glories of our beloved W. C. T. U.

THE GARDEN FOE.

BY CARRIE L. POST.

I once knew a garden fair
Bright with pansy blossoms rare,
Pinks beside the violets grew
Sunned and freshened by the dew,
Modest mignonette so sweet
Nestled humbly at my feet,
And the little weeds were drawn
Carefully in early morn.
Yet with all my watchful care
A foul monster entered there,
Hidden from the light of day
Secretly he caught his prey.
And my beauties drooped in death
Poisoned by his vicious breath,
Biting with repulsive jaw
Filling his capacious maw
With my pansies' velvet bloom
And for tender pinks made room!

How I dug and searched for him
Round each root to outward rim,
And I found him—sleek and full
Fed on pansies—bountiful;
"Oh! you hideous beast," I said,
"Get thee quickly from this bed,
Hated enemy, ill-bred,
'Woman's heel shall bruise thy head.'
For such evil do you dare
Hope that I your life can spare?
Or that I will license give
Granting you elsewhere to live?
Never—never, 'cut worm,' think
I can license you to drink
Life-blood from a royal plant,
License I will never grant,
And my trowel strong and true,
Evermore PROHIBITS you!"

JUNE.

O June! delicious month of June!
When winds and birds all sing in tune;
When in the meadows swarm the bees,
And hum their drowsy melodies
While pillaging the buttercup,
To store the golden honey up;
O June! the month of bluest skies,
Dear to the pilgrim butterflies,
Who seem gay-colored leaves astray,
Blown down the tides of amber day;
O June! the month of merry song,
Of shadow brief, of sunshine long;
All things on earth love you the best—
The bird who carols near his nest,
The wind that wakes and, singing, blows
The spicy perfume of the rose;
And bee, who sounds his muffled horn
To celebrate the dewy morn;
And even all the stars above
At night are happier for love,
As if the mellow notes of mirth
Were wafted to them from the earth.
O June! such music haunts your name;
With you the summer's chorus came.

LITTLE FOXES.

Among my tender vines I spy,
A little fox, named "By and by."
Then set upon him quick, I say,
The swift young hunter, "Right away."

Around each tender vine I plant
I find the little fox, "I can't."
Then, fast as ever hunter ran,
Chase him with bold and brave "I can."

"No use in trying"—lags and whines
This fox among my tender vines.
Then drive him low and drive him high
With this good hunter, named "I'll try."

Among the vines in my small lot
Creeps in the young fox, "I forgot."
Then hunt him out and to his den
With—"I-will-not-forget-again."

A little fox is hidden there
Among my vines, named, "I don't care."
Then let "I'm sorry," hunter true,
Chase him afar from vines and you.

UNCLE JOHN'S GOOD-BYE TALK.

XVIII.

SWILL-BARREL.

How many of you have a swill-barrel at home? How many chickens have been drowned in it? No wonder you don't want to tell. My estimate is that about one man in ten covers the swill-barrels so as to lose no chickens, kittens, or—yes, I once heard of a dear little baby. It makes me shiver to think of it, but it is partly on this account that I want you to make the kind of cover I propose to tell you about. Not wholly, for I may tell you whom I know so well, when no one else hears, that even I have cried over a poor little chick that lost his life in a swill-barrel.

Best place is under a tree, far enough from the house so that the smell will not be troublesome. See that the barrel is level. Take a rough 1x4, and cut off two pieces as long as the diameter of the barrel four inches from the top; and two pieces two inches longer. Nail the four together to make a square frame, like a box four inches deep. Slip this over the barrel and nail through the staves, leaving the edge of the frame a trifle higher than the barrel. Now make a cover of thin stuff and let the cleat on the east side extend north about ten inches beyond the cover. Hinge the cover to the frame at the north side. From the projecting cleat take a strong twine to the ground. Now any kind of a board about four feet long, to lie on the ground along the east or right hand side of the barrel, the north end just reaching that string. One of you stand on this board and hold the cover straight up, while another fastens the string to the board. Now as the cover closes, the board will be lifted from the ground. Then when you approach with a pan of milk, holding it with both hands, you simply step on the board and up goes the cover; and after you empty the pan you step off and down it comes.

Convenient? I guess so. Why, Aunt Mary actually made as much fuss over that thing as she did over the dumb-waiter to the cellar. Saved our chickens? No, because I was one of the tenth men; but it was so awkward when Aunt Mary sent me out with one of her widest pans full to the edge, to set it down where there wasn't any place for it and take the cover off. Yes, it is important to adjust the string just as I said, so that you can step on the board as heavily as you wish. And it is also important that the cover shall not stand up after you get off from the board. Yes, you can study it out and I need not use up your time. Mine, you see, has a stick nailed to the east side and running obliquely down so that the end of the cleat strikes it before the cover is quite perpendicular. Don't let another day pass before you make one, and my word for it your mothers will be glad.

Look at that list. Fifty things to talk about and you all going off next week! I wanted to tell you about my miter-box, rocking-chair, pigeon holes, dumb-waiter to save cellar stairs, noon mark, shades with rollers at the bottom, book shelves, gates to save the baby, Bessie's sandwheel and windmill, whistling signals and a half gross of other things.

But if you remember all I have told you, you will know more than some people I have seen who called themselves mechanics. Good-by, dears, and may "God be with you till we meet again."

Vineland, N. J.

THERE are four days for patriotic study and remembrance in June, which are well described by the Youth's Companion:

JUNE 14: Adoption by Congress of the "Stars and Stripes" as the American flag, 1777. "The symbol of the power and glory, and the honor of fifty millions of Americans."—George F. Hoar.

JUNE 15: The granting of the Great Charter (Magna Charta) on the banks of the River Thames, England, 1215. This was the first great step of the English people toward freedom.

JUNE 17: The Battle of Bunker Hill. On this day the American insurgents made their first effective stand against the British power.

JUNE 23: The gift of corn, 1621. In the summer of 1621 Mr. Edward Winslow, Mr. Stephen Hopkins and an Indian guide named Squanto crossed the Taunton River and the Kickemuit and came to the village of Sowams in Pokanoket or to some place near that village. They were the first white men who ever came to the town, and their errand was to beg corn of Massasoit for food and planting. The chief received them like a father, and gave them the cereal which has become the strong food of the nation. Indian corn should be put on every plate on Thanksgiving day, in memory of the scant ration that once kept our forefathers alive.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Just about the time this paper reaches you and you turn to read your own page, a certain great ocean ship will loose its cables, and slipping away from the harbor of a large English city will set out for its trip of more than two thousand miles across the Atlantic ocean.

We can imagine the shouts of the people on shore and the waving of handkerchiefs as the great ship moves away with her precious burden of humanity.

There are two people on this steamer (the Teutonic) in which we are specially interested. They each wear a tiny knot of white ribbon, and nearly all the friends who bade them good-bye wore the same familiar badge. One has sunny brown, wavy hair peeping from beneath her bonnet, and such a happy smile. The other has a face familiar to temperance children around the world.

Their pictures are in every temperance home. Need I describe them to you?

Who are these interesting people?

Miss Willard and Miss Gordon, of course! In one more week they are expected to land in New York harbor. Wouldn't we enjoy giving a Cozy Corner salute on that occasion! And wouldn't we like to swell a great chorus to greet them with the words:

"There are bands of ribbon white
Around the world!"

Your

Aunt Jane

NIECES AND NEPHEWS.

I am a little temperance girl and would like to join your Cozy Corner. Will some of the Cozy Cornerers please write to me? MYRA HORTON.
Greenport, Suffolk Co., N. Y.

May I step into your Corner? It must be a nice place. I have a little sister named Fay. She is near three months old. There is one saloon in our town.
San Gabriel, Cal. GRACE WHITE.

We have five saloons in our town and I hope some day they may be voted out. We have no L. T. L. here but I am a temperance boy just the same. May I be one of your nephews? I can crack most of the Soft-Shelled Nuts. CHARLES HENRY GOODNO.
Sutter Creek, Cal.

My papa is a temperance man; he neither smokes, drinks nor chews. I have no brothers, but if I had I would try to get them to be temperance boys. My little sister and I belong to the L. T. L.
Lancaster, Ky. CORA WARD.

I am a little girl ten years old. I sent and got the picture of Toots Willard and think it is lovely. I have a little brother. When he was just learning to talk, one morning he went outdoors; he saw a caterpillar and said: "Oh, mamma, come and see the little worm with plush legs!" We are temperance children.

JOHN WESLEY AND "THE WOMAN QUESTION."

Already the shadow of the coming General Conference is falling athwart the Methodist Episcopal church, North. The question so evaded and stifled in the last session of that great body has proved like Banquo's ghost—it will not down. The famous "Hamilton resolution" is coming to the front and, if not in the conference, at least in the press, is occupying both time and space in its discussion.

Without entering into the merits of this particular resolution, or indeed, into the discussion of the rights of women as lay delegates, it seems to us it would be well to look at the general subject of Methodism's early attitude towards woman as embodied in its great founder. Those who are always ready to deify the past at the expense of the present, may be influenced by considering the fact that John Wesley's views more than a century ago were somewhat more advanced than are the views of the editor of the church's chief official organ to-day.

What womanhood owes to John Wesley can never be fully estimated. He opened her lips in testimony and all that has followed has been but the necessary sequence of that act. He early appointed women as class-leaders, it is true, over classes composed of women alone, and he seems not to have considered the possibility of their addressing mixed audiences any more than he considered the possibility of Thomas Maxfield's preaching, but when the exigency arose, he was as slow to thwart the one as the other.

There is an amusing progressiveness in his letters on this subject. The first to Sarah Crosby bears date of 1761, in which, after saying, "Hitherto you have not gone too far, you could not well do less," he exhorts her to be sure and say everywhere, "The Methodists do not allow of women preachers; nor do I take upon myself any such character." In 1769 he charges her never to take a text, and never to speak "in a continued discourse, without some break," above four or five minutes.

In 1771 he concedes to Miss Bosanquet "an extraordinary call," but on this same plea of an extraordinary call bases his approval of all lay preaching. In 1791, within a month of his death, having for thirty years, as Tyreman says, "winked at" woman's preaching, he writes to Miss Cambridge, who for preaching publicly was meeting with opposition from the younger ministers, as follows: "Mr. Barber has the glory of God at heart and so have his fellow laborers. Give them all honor and obey them in all things as far as conscience permits. But it will not permit you to be silent when God commands you to speak; yet I would have you give as little offense as possible; and, therefore, I would advise you not to speak at any place where a preacher is speaking at the same time, lest you should draw away his hearers."

Was this unconscious irony, or was Mr. Wesley meeting, in his wisdom, one of the brethren's chief causes of opposition to the labors of Miss Cambridge?

Can any one doubt what would be John Wesley's attitude on the "woman question" if he were in the world to-day? Do you say he would not admit her to an equality of position with man in all departments of church life and polity? How dare one say so in view of what he did? But he never designed woman to be ordained. He never thought of her in church deliberations. Probably not. Did he design lay preaching; separation from the established church; the ordination of his preachers; the establishment in America, of an Episcopacy?

Much that John Wesley never designed, because he could not sufficiently project his mind into the future to see its needs, has, nevertheless, come to pass. If he were alive to-day he would approve what he did not design; he would be broad enough and great enough to take upon himself the conditions of the nineteenth century, as he was broad enough and great enough for the conditions of the eighteenth.

One man to-day as the leader of a great religious movement is John Wesley's legitimate successor. Allowing for certain distinct differences of culture, training and methods, William Booth may be said to represent John Wesley. When we see woman's position in the Salvation Army, we see what would have been her position in the Methodist Church had the birth of that church and its founder been retarded for a century. It behooves that great church, as it stands to-day, to see that its future be not such as shall shame its past.

When the last relic of sex intolerance shall be destroyed, and the last shade of narrow bigotry laid with its departed kindred; when woman's brains shall have a part in the councils, as her hand in the work, and her heart in the prayers, of her church; when her call to preach the Word shall be fully recognized, and she left free to obey God's call anywhere; then, and not till then, can she pay to the world, in loving, consecrated, effective service, the debt she owes to the brain, the heart and the life of John Wesley.

DISTORTED SCRIPTURE.

In an infidel circular, recently issued, about seventy Scripture references are given which, with three exceptions, are in the Old Testament. To show how hard pressed the authors of the circular were to make out their case, note these three citations. In order, presumably, to show the harsh and wicked civil government taught by Christ, a reference is given to the command of the prince in Christ's parable, that "his enemies," who would not have him rule over them, should be put to death, which is about as fair as to make Gibbon responsible for the acts of Nero. Another of the three from the New Testament is the statement of John in Revelation, that in his vision there was "war in heaven"; the third is the advice of Paul concerning marriage.

Of the Old Testament references twenty are accounts of the wicked doings of some of the Old Testament characters. David's sin against Uriah is given, and, while the compilers omit to refer to it, we can safely trust that the majority of persons will read on and learn God's terrible punishment of Israel's great king, and that such persons will draw the very obvious conclusion concerning the honesty of those who have used this incident in such a way and for such a purpose. The outrageous sins of the sons of Jacob are referred to, but the statement that Joseph incurred their bitter hatred because he reported their evil doings to their father, is omitted. We do not see why, on the principle on which the other references are selected, the selling of Joseph into Egypt would not serve as a specimen of the "precious morality," etc., taught in the Bible, were it not that that beautiful narrative teaches God's care for the righteous and punishment of the wicked in a way that flatly contradicts what the authors of the circular wish to prove concerning these points. Also the blameless character of Joseph might quite as reasonably be supposed to be a Bible ideal as the wicked characters of his brothers, and the purpose of the circular is to show that the Bible prefers immorality.

Other references are to severe judicial punishments pronounced, some of which without doubt seem harsh to us of the present day; but any one of sense knows that if God left man as He made him, a free will agent, He must allow him to develop according to his nature by virtue of his own choices and that all laws must be adapted to their times. The civilization of 1900 A. D. could not be imposed upon people living 1500 B. C. The judgments pronounced upon heathen nations, the command to destroy the inhabitants of Canaan, are not of course forgotten. But the thoughtful reader will hardly fail to notice that this judgment was delayed many centuries, that Abraham was explicitly told that he could not have the land for a possession because the "iniquity of the Amorites was not yet full," in other words, because these people had not yet had every opportunity that could be given them to repent, and that when sentence was at last executed upon them it was for such crimes as offering human sacrifices, burning their victims alive, at that, to please a wicked deity.

The fact that slavery was allowed is made the most of, but of course no mention is made of the fact that it was under such restrictions that slavery as an institution practically died out among the Jews. The permission to make slaves of aliens is quoted but not: "Thou shalt neither vex a stranger nor oppress him, for ye were strangers in the Land of Egypt."—Ex. 22:21. The law of Moses about a man's divorcing his wife is quoted but not Christ's statement: "Moses, because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away your wives; but from the beginning it was not so" with his statement of the strict law of marriage. It would be, of course, too much to expect that these candid (?) students (?) of the Bible should notice that, for some reason, under the Jewish law polygamy entirely disappeared, and that in no contemporaneous nation was woman held in so high esteem or family life so sacredly guarded. Passages commanding absolute obedience to God, and the worship of Jehovah only are referred to, but those which show what the service of God involves are for some reason left out. The Mosaic law is chiefly concerned with establishing just relations between man and man, and such passages as Micah 6:8 explicitly state its spirit: "What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly and to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God?" while Christ teaches the same with increasing emphasis by putting love to man on an equality with love to God.

The chief end which the circular has in view is to show that members of Christian churches are "more devoted to attending to the imaginary wants of a God and Saviour than to the real needs of little children, the aged and the helpless" and that as a necessary logical result of the teachings of the book which they believe to be the word of God. In this connection, the fact is not mentioned that this Saviour explicitly taught again and again that His "imaginary wants" are identical with the real needs of "little children, the aged and the helpless" and that He makes this one test the sole ground of the salvation or ruin of those whom he judges, for, "inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

The attempt is another of the many striking fulfillments of Christ's words: "If they have persecuted Me, they will also persecute you." "If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household." Yet there is another side to the matter which we have no right to disregard. The character of the accusation gives ground for fear that the church of Christ has not truly reflected the spirit of its Master. The chief complaint against Him was that He was the friend of publicans and sinners. There can be no doubt that the church as an organization has not won for itself the unquestioned reputation as the friend of the lowly that the Master did. The "common people heard Him gladly," nay, more, they thronged Him until He was compelled to flee to the desert for opportunity "so much as to eat." It is the fault of the church that they do not hang thus upon His words to-day.

We do not forget the mission work carried on in our great cities by devoted Christians, nor the well meaning if sometimes mistaken charities of the followers of Christ; but there is a recognized gulf between the church and the poorer classes of society which all these efforts have failed to bridge. We do not, on this account, indulge in wholesale denunciation of the church; we believe this sad state of affairs is due not to the lack of good intention but to the failure on the part of the church to recognize her mission in its entirety, to realize that she was to save not men's souls alone, but their bodies as well, and not men individually merely but society as well; that her great prerogative and privilege is to set up the kingdom of Christ in the earth.

If the church shall awaken, as we believe it will, to a realization of its whole mission, if it shall as the Master did, minister to the bodies as well as to the souls of men, if it shall take its rightful place as leader in the great social crisis which is upon us and demand that the reorganization of society be effected in accordance with the principles of Christ, there will be no need to waste any time in refuting so senseless a libel as that the Christian church is careless of the welfare of those whom her Master left to her care as "His brethren."

ANOTHER VIEW OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLIES.

Having inadvertently given a wrong impression in our criticism of the failure of the Presbyterian Assemblies to pass stronger resolutions upon the Breckinridge case, we gladly give space to a correspondent's view of the matter, taking exception only to the statement that the Assemblies might well feel "affronted" at being called upon to define anew their position on the social purity question. The late Assembly passed particularly strong resolutions on temperance, Sabbath observance and the Mormon question; surely a deliverance on the subject of social purity, which has received a wonderful impetus by reason of the infamous disclosures in the above-mentioned case, would be no more of a "reflection" upon the church than these. Such exigencies should always be utilized as opportunities for expounding afresh the attitude of the church on all moral questions:

You speak of the Northern Assembly as "A religious council representing the church in which a notorious offender against morality holds his membership." Surely you should be aware of the fact that the person referred to is not, and never has been, a member of a church represented by the Northern Assembly, unless, which is not probable, he was a church member before the beginning of the civil war. The Northern Assembly, therefore, has just as much to do with him, and no more, as the General Conference of the M. E. church.

What necessity exists that the Presbyterian church of this country should define its position on the subject of social or personal purity? Can there be any possible doubt on that question in the mind of any intelligent person? The suggestion that any deliverance by the Assembly on the subject was required seems to me to be an entirely unwarranted reflection upon the Presbyterian church. The Assembly did not feel called upon to give out any public utterance on a subject with respect to which the church it represents occupies, and always has occupied the highest possible ground. And to say the least, it is a doubtful proceeding for an ecclesiastical body to take action by which it shall appear to dictate to the Congress of the United States what regulations it shall adopt for the personal conduct of its own members. Does not the church perform its duty in this matter when in all its teachings it presents the standard of absolute purity according to God's Word, and so far as possible enforces this standard upon all its members?

The court to which the Assembly had reference is the church court, or the session, of the particular church of which Colonel Breckinridge is a member. The impropriety of the supreme judiciary expressing an opinion in the case in question arises from the fact that the case may yet come by appeal, through presbytery and synod, before the Assembly itself for final adjudication. In view of this possibility, as well as of the fact that the case is now in the hands of the session of the church of which the offender is a member, which should be left to act upon it without prejudice or pressure from any higher court, the Southern Assembly felt that it had no right to prejudge the case.

A court, whether civil or ecclesiastical, before which a case may come by appeal for adjudication, is always very careful not to prejudge the case by expressing any opinion beforehand. And it is equally careful not to interfere in any way with the lower court while the case is passing through that court. And the same thing should be said of the Southern as of the Northern Assembly. A public deliverance in favor of social and personal purity was not needed to assure the people of the country as to its position on the question, even though the offender in this instance was a member of a Southern Presbyterian church. I can well believe that the members of both Assemblies felt almost affronted at the intimation that they were required to give an assurance to the country as to the position of the Presbyterian church on this question.

It gives me pleasure to say that I find myself in cordial sympathy with nearly everything that I see in your paper, and that many articles appear in it which commend themselves to my mind as especially able and valuable. I might specify such articles as those on "Capital Punishment" and "The Nude in Art," which have appeared in recent numbers.

Wishing you all success and prosperity in your noble work, I am, Very respectfully yours,

Carlinville, Ill. W. S. PRYSE.

OUR LEADERS IN IRELAND.

May 22–24, inclusive, were occupied by Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard in going from London to Dublin and back again, holding two meetings and attending a reception given them by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress.

Forty-eight hours of travel over and back were accompanied by weather clear as a bell, so that not even the smallest perturbation assailed the sensitive diaphragm of our senior editor. All the leading temperance representatives called upon our leaders, and among the company of thirty or more there was a Wesleyan minister, a Catholic priest and a Quaker lady, who presided at a meeting of ladies in the Friends' lecture room. A large list of names and addresses was made out of those who agreed to join a local temperance union—the first in Ireland on the white-ribbon plan—and with the understanding that when others have been organized in the leading towns and cities we are to have an Irish W. C. T. U. directly affiliated with the World's.

The meeting in Leinster Hall was one of the largest recently held. The hall accommodated six thousand persons, and was packed like "honey in the honey comb." The united choirs of the Band of Hope sang delightfully. John Wigwam, president of the Chamber of Commerce, presided, and welcomes were given by leading representatives of the cause in the Irish capital. A young Irish priest said that "Ireland has so great a heart that she welcomes everybody who comes to her shores, but when those who come bring blessings, as do the ladies here to-night, an Irishman can say no less than that our guests are welcome a hundred thousand times."

The wider outlook was stated and illustrated by both speakers, and seemed to find a warm response in the wide Irish heart. The ladies visited Trinity College, the Bank of Ireland, and other famous places in the beautiful old city under the escort of Professor Barrett, a leading member of the college faculty and a devoted friend of temperance and every good cause. When this gentleman in his address of welcome at the great meeting, declared that the ballot in the hand of woman was the way out of the wilderness, the applause was far more hearty than our radical reformers had hoped to hear.

Plans are being made for an active year's work in Great Britain. Well-known leaders will take up different lines of departmental work under the auspices of the B. W. T. A., now grown so large, and keeping step with that movement by means of which

"There are bands of ribbon white
Around the world."

THE NORTHERN PRESBYTERIAN ASSEMBLY ON TEMPERANCE.

The position taken by the late Assembly for the scientific teaching of temperance and its advocacy in the pulpit, the Sunday-school and the home is so strong and commendatory that we gladly publish the entire deliverance of the temperance committee, which was cordially adopted by the Assembly:

Resolved, 1. That we approve of the Permanent Committee on Temperance, and we ask the sympathy and cooperation of all our churches and Sunday-schools and young people's societies in this noble work.

2. That we deplore the evils of intemperance, and that we see in those evils a great hindrance to that coming of the Lord's kingdom for which the church labors and prays. We realize that the early education of the young as to the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics is a powerful preventive against intemperance. And we rejoice that laws have been enacted requiring this study in the public schools of thirty-nine states and in all the territories, in the national military and naval schools and in all Indian and colored schools under federal control—embracing fully thirteen million children of school age. We recommend that our churches appoint special committees to make efforts for the enforcement of these laws, and in cases where the laws are not sufficiently mandatory we recommend that our synods instruct their temperance committees to petition for such amendments as the case may demand.

3. That the time has fully come for the introduction of physiological temperance instruction into all schools, home and foreign, under the direction of the Presbyterian church. We therefore urge that the proper school authorities be required to provide for instruction as to the extent of alcoholic drinks and narcotics, and their effects upon the human system.

4. That we commend to the presbyteries and synods in the five states yet without temperance education laws, viz.: Indiana, Tennessee, Arkansas, Georgia and South Carolina, the example of the synod of New Jersey, which last autumn instructed its temperance committee to petition the next legislature of that state for compulsory temperance education in all public schools, which petition has been granted in the enactment of a very satisfactory statute requiring this study of all pupils in all schools in that state under state control.

5. That while recognizing the importance of a wise discussion as to methods, we especially urge that temperance instruction be given from all of our pulpits, in all our schools, and in all our homes, and we recommend the recognition of the fourth Sabbath of September, or some proximate day, as a day for special instruction on this subject. We also heartily approve of the recommendation of former Assemblies that a special collection be taken for the work of the permanent committee on that day.

6. That we recognize the good work of the Presbyterian Woman's Temperance Association, and other similar societies of Christian women. And we approve of all attempts on the part of our national government to suppress the rum traffic in all parts of the foreign field.

7. That we reaffirm the deliverance of the Portland Assembly that "no political party has the right to expect the support of Christian men so long as that party stands committed to the license policy, or refuses to put itself on record against the saloon."

THE June number of Life and Light for Woman, the organ of the Woman's Congregational Missionary Board, is an ideal missionary-temperance issue. Aside from the editorial mention of the progress of the temperance reform in foreign lands, there are four leading articles on the special features of our own white-ribbon work, to wit: "The Polyglot Petition," by Lady Henry Somerset, "World's W. C. T. U.," by Miss Willard, "Temperance Work Among the Zulus," by Mrs. C. W. Holbrook, "Temperance in the Smyrna Boarding School," by Miss Agnes Lord, and "Business Methods for the Conversion of the World," by Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, also articles of special interest to the juvenile readers. We congratulate our Congregational sisters on their magazine.

A friend in San Francisco told me that one of the invariable accompaniments of the conversion of a Chinese was the relinquishing of his seat to a lady in a crowded car. Dare we apply such a test to a native Christian?

The Rev. Dr. Parker, of London, recently protested against a misquotation of the text, "Where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them." Many a time he had known people fling themselves out of a church, gather up their books and hassocks with spite and malice written on every feature, and go down to the street corner and sing, "Where two or three are gathered together, there am I in the midst of them." Christ was not in that temper. One had no idea how many little corner shops had been set up by that misquotation. If the mother church sent its children out to form churches for themselves in Christ's name there was Christ, but a church built upon spite was the worst of the infidelities.

The day of prayer which preceded the British Council meetings was most helpful, and no address was more so than that of the Rev. F. B. Meyer, who is called the "beloved disciple" among the London clergy. He said that in the glades of Eden our Heavenly Father cried out, "Adam, where art thou?" and He has been repeating that loving question ever since. It is the keynote of all religions just as a cloud most saturated and steeped in light is the one nearest the sunset, so the heart most loving toward God is the most tender, and all that we do we do not of ourselves; it is God's work through our yielded lives whose hearts are drawn toward Him as the tides swell beneath the moon.

An easy solution of the labor problem in a nutshell is found in this paragraph: "The trouble with this world, Raggsy," said Walker, the tramp, "is just here. In Central America bananas grow wild, but there ain't no markit for 'em. Up here where there is a markit for 'em they don't grow wild. What nacher wants to do to help the workin' man is to have things grow wild where there's a markit for them things."

"How shall we rescue the full-blooded Indian?" was asked in the recent missionary congress in San Francisco. "Send after him the full-blooded Christian" was the bright reply.

It is refreshing to read the high tribute paid to Mrs. Bishop Thoburn by a Calcutta correspondent. During the Bishop's absence in this country, his noble wife fills the position of deputy bishop marvelously well. She is an M. D., and the professional calls upon her strength and time are severe, but she manages to look well to the ways of her household, preside over the W. C. T. U., lead a "class" in the good 'old Methodist fashion, visit the members of her congregation, and, in short, is a quiet leader in all branches of Christian work. "So long as Bishop Thoburn will leave his wife at home," writes this (man) correspondent, "we do not feel so badly at letting him go."

An entire day of prayer and devotional service preceded the recent annual meetings of the British Women's Temperance Association. Among those who spoke were Miss Willard, Mrs. Bramwell Booth, Mrs. H. W. Smith and Rev. F. B. Meyer. The Woman's Signal reports these services with rare skill and says concerning our own leader: "When she advances in response to the call, it is not difficult to recognize the existence of that force which has been wielded among the women of the New World and the Old. The slight frame and delicate face cannot conceal the strong personality; and when Miss Willard speaks all present know the leader of thought and action, the dauntless worker and brilliant orator who represents America's womanhood amongst us. Miss Willard's message to the women is, 'The Master has come and calleth for thee.' It is impossible in these notes to give a true presentment of the noble utterance in which the assembly is led to the very feet of God. Apt simile, keen intellectualism, tenderest pathos are mingled here. And whether the winged words glance from 'the finer chemistry of the world invisible' to the 'great, leaping, living light' by which Christ is symbolized; whether they throb with 'the flutter of that quick wing that beats the air of the eternal life,' or pass 'beyond the curtains that close around the cradle of this world,' they bring love nearer to us, and lead through the infinite isolation of life, and the infinite loneliness of death, into the very infinite of God, to that 'divine which is given away, and the heaven that may be had for the asking.'"

ON DUTY.

CALIFORNIA.

CONGRESSES AND CONVENTIONS.

The Midwinter Fair is at its height as midsummer approaches and therein is finely consistent with a climate that knows neither winter nor summer. Interior California can emphasize the summer season sufficiently, but San Francisco never gets beyond the springtime, or passes the period of expectancy. The sensation that summer is approaching is perennial, and even the storms of winter have the effect of having by some chance fallen out of season.

The Fair attracts the people who were not able to go to Chicago, and it is delightful to see the eager faces of the rural youth as they enjoy its novelties, and the older faces of those to whom recreation is a novelty, and we are all glad of the treat they are having. Above all other treats have been the congresses. Of course, Chicago knows all about them, but this western world has never had such a feast of fat things before.

Of the congresses in which we are most interested, the Woman's Congress of Missions led off with a three days' session. It was an unqualified success in every way; not the least of which was in showing how well women can do such things. The topics discussed were missions, the city, the state, the nation and the world. The first half of the program might have been supposed to be a temperance congress, so frequently did that subject appear in the papers given. Twenty-two speakers were W. C. T. U. women, and the sympathy of the audience was manifest every time allusions were made to temperance.

The Woman's Congress was a notable occasion, and was the most popular and fashionable of all the congresses, assertive, aggressive, esthetic and intellectual, with the highest ethical sense but committed to no tangible reform but the general advance of woman. Mrs. Sturtevant-Peet, our president, Mrs. Nellie B. Eyster, Dr. Kellogg Lane, Mrs. Sarah C. Sanford and Miss Severance, ably represented the W. C. T. U., and "shone amid that galaxy of stars."

The Temperance Congress was really a very ambitious undertaking for San Francisco. There has never been a premium on temperance sentiment in this city, and to fill a week with such meetings seemed even to our friends a preposterous scheme. However, there was a plan of work, well adhered to, and carried out thoroughly. The design was to combine as many as possible of the various temperance organizations and friends of the cause. The result is satisfactory.

Hon. J. E. McComas was the very excellent choice for president of the temperance congress, a vice-president for each organization presiding on their respective days. Forty men and forty women appeared in the week's program of eighteen sessions, beginning with the general congress Monday afternoon, May 21; the same evening David Starr Jordan, president of Stanford University, gave a most effective address on "The Relation of Artificial Stimulants to Human Evolution." The next evening Prof. E. R. Brown, of the University of California, gave one on "The Relation of Total Abstinence to Intellectual Development." Tuesday afternoon and evening were under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society which numbers 42,000 in the state. A fine feature in their program was the reading of resolutions sent from all parts of the state by local societies. How delightfully cheering to know that this grand army of devoted youths are coming right along.

In fine contrast to these young recruits was the next day under the Good Templars. These veterans brought out in bold relief the magnificent record of pioneer work that has made possibilities for others wherever they have been, and the well trained workers and thorough system that characterize their work.

Thursday and Friday were W. C. T. U. days, and when the gavel fell on Thursday morning fifteen minutes earlier that devotions might not be hurried, the song arose full and strong—our own hymn,

"To thee, O Lord, we raise
Our hymn of love and praise," and Anna Bidwell's sweet voice spoke of the Light of the World. The full chord was harmonious and the discipline of another corps of veterans was felt. A cablegram from Miss Willard, 12,000 miles away, added inspiration to the occasion. Friday evening was given to entertainment, serving the several purposes of relaxation, instruction and business.

Miss Severance's "Extra Session" was produced to a most appreciative audience who might well afford to laugh after the tension of five days of the most "deadly in earnest" people ever met together; the object lesson was given and the proceeds paid our share of the expenses, by no means a small consideration.

Saturday morning was occupied with the consideration of alcoholism as a disease, and naturally the Keeley cure came in for discussion. There are said to be five hundred graduates of that institution in this city, and that they are but a fraction of the number who need such remedies is an appalling fact.

The afternoon and evening were improved by the Prohibition party. They were considerately placed at the end—given the last words, as it were—but it was hard to say which day had not belonged to them, so prevalent was the strong prohibition sentiment throughout. The chairman thanked the management for the place assigned them, calling the Prohibitionists the tail end of the Congress. There was an unpremeditated fitness in the circumstance, for while the whole organism of a whale may be engaged in spouting, the process by which attention is attracted, its fighting, must be done by the tail. The program was carried out very nearly as arranged. Mrs. Lilian Cole Bethel failed to appear, and her place was filled by Major Scott. With characteristic perversity the newspapers credited his facts and figures to her. Several speakers were reported as advocating exactly what they did not, but the press gave notice enough to help along considerably, notwithstanding, by provoking discussion.

The enthusiasm of the congress outran the time, and a mass-meeting Sunday afternoon was held to close proceedings. Steps were taken to form an Anti-Saloon League, with the hope of uniting all elements that work against the saloon.

A new organization to defend the saloon interest follows directly on the congress, but perhaps the most significant straw is the following extract from the press dispatches in a morning paper, in regard to the preparations going on at Sacramento for the Republican state convention:

"Secretary Steppacher says it never was understood that any intoxicating liquors would be sold in the convention building, and the San Franciscans who set up a howl for fear that temperance voters would be lost, squealed before they were hurt."

This is funny, when it is remembered that an inducement held out to the last Republican convention to meet there, was, that all the breweries in the city would be thrown open to it.

One of the attentions the state union is glad to acknowledge is the invitation to fill a day in the program of the Chautauqua Assembly at Pacific Grove—this is placing our work in the recognized educational institutions where it belongs.

This letter has been so full of congresses that the county work is crowded out. Several counties have lately held successful conventions, all showing healthful vigor. Mrs. A. J. Wheeler succeeds Mrs. D. S. Dickson as president of Sonoma and Marin Bi-county, but the old officers are generally being reëlected, their faithful service making their constituents reluctant to change.

The last union organized here marks a step in the right direction. In harmony with the suggestion of Miss Willard in her last annual address, our state officers have recommended the following plan of work for church W. C. T. U.:

"A union within a church is recommended to adopt the constitution and methods of other local unions, and a plan of work as follows: While by no means neglecting the various departments of work in the W. C. T. U., the special object of this union will be to secure attention to the importance of the subject of temperance in all the various lines of church work. To this end there shall be committees appointed by the president, with the approval of the union, whose duty it shall be to interest themselves in all working societies in the church, and secure in each a definite time for instruction or discussion of the subject, to distribute and circulate literature throughout the church, suitable to the time, and arrange special meetings or lectures as may be required.

"Committee for prayer-meetings, committee for Sunday-school, committee for Christian Endeavor or Epworth League, committee for juniors, committee for mission bands and children, committee for young men's societies, committee for social work—this list of committees is intended to suggest what may be done in each church, and may be adapted to the existing organization of the church."

The First Baptist church of this city (the first Protestant church ever organized in California) is the first to avail itself of this idea. The pastors of two Presbyterian churches have expressed the wish to have a W. C. T. U. as a part of the machinery of their churches, in regular place on their calendar. The Baptist church already had a temperance baby band—the pastor's wife, Mrs. J. Q. A. Henry, having originated the baby band idea. The vignette portrait of her little daughter on the baby band literature is a sweet remembrance of the suggestive life of a little child.

KANSAS CULLINGS.

'Tis said "a rose by any other name would smell as sweet" yet that seems scarcely possible, when, as now, every breeze that is wafted in at my window comes laden with the perfume of this favorite flower. But the fragrance of the roses is not all that is "in the air"; it is full of the ozone of the suffrage movement which is sweeping over the state with the spring breezes, gathering strength as it goes, and the summer's heat will but increase its forces until we fully expect it to develop into a veritable "Kansas cyclone" by the sixth of next November.

The series of meetings that are being held under the auspices of the amendment campaign committee are destined to be a great factor for good. Miss Susan B. Anthony was expected to assist and it had been so advertised, and it is a great disappointment that she was recalled to New York when her work in our state had only just begun. Dr. Anna Shaw is not a stranger in Kansas and is cordially welcomed whenever she comes to us. Other speakers of national repute have been lent us, and we fully appreciate their efforts. Our own workers are "afield" and have put their hearts into the cause.

Rev. C. H. St. John has filled several of Miss Anthony's appointments, and it was a satisfaction to listen to his earnest plea for justice to the womanhood of Kansas, and coming from a man, it must have an influence over the voters. I would recommend unions to secure him if possible for an address on suffrage at some time before election.

We are anxiously waiting to see the outcome of the political conventions of the state on the amendment question.

Three of the four conferences of the M. E. church within our borders, at their recent sessions, passed ringing resolutions of indorsement, the fourth was presided over, I am told, by a bishop who is not in sympathy with the movement, and out of respect to his views the subject was not brought up. I make this explanation, that the ministers of said conference may not be classed as opposing it; for they are as loyal to the cause as those of the other conferences.

Suffrage contests are being held, the contestants oftentimes being middle-aged or old people. The contests are highly spoken of and are recommended to others.

Mrs. Kemp, state superintendent railroad work, says: "The work of my department is steadily advancing. Mrs. C. M. Woodward was at the third district convention and did much to arouse interest, and to awaken to intelligent action. She returned the next week and presented the department before the South Kansas Conference of M. E. church. This was quite an awakening to some who knew little or nothing of our work. A resolution of commendation and a promise of helpfulness was passed by the conference. The department was specially presented in many of our county conventions this spring, and already the good results are becoming apparent. Our spring convention was a most excellent one, the best ever held. Each convention is a decided advance. Our district is improving. The loving, sweet Christian spirit of comradeship was especially noticeable in convention."

From Wichita union comes the following: "We are doing all in our power to keep temperance sentiment alive here, but have many and strong odds to encounter, and find it necessary to take every possible method to attract public interest to our work. Major and Mrs. E. T. Scott were with us a week, and helped us wonderfully. We celebrated Neal Dow day. Services were held in the M. E. church. Several made short addresses, and papers were read which proved that the best intellect and character of Wichita people is arraigned on the side of the temperance reform. The "Crusade" of Wichita union, as reported in THE UNION SIGNAL, was an evangelistic service, held with the desire to lead sinners to Jesus, and the good done will doubtless be revealed only in eternity. Word has since come to the union of a man who was in from the country on that day and was in one of the saloons when those Christian women visited it. Evidently God's spirit convinced him, for he says he had never heard such reading and such prayers before, and that he will never enter a saloon again."

NOTES.

Rev. C. H. and Rev. E. F. St. John celebrated their silver wedding anniversary April 10. Four hundred guests were present. Sweet music was discoursed, speeches made, original poems read and abundant refreshments served. They were the recipients of gifts of silver money and valuable articles, testifying to the friendship of the people present.

Parsons also celebrated Neal Dow day.

Cherokee union has just opened a fine reading room. More good has been done than the mere opening of the room, for it has interested the town in our work.

Many places celebrated "Prohibition day" on May 1, that being the anniversary of the date on which our prohibitory law took effect.

Mrs. J. C. Haines, president fourth district, conducted a successful silver medal contest at Eskridge recently. She also organized a suffrage amendment club at the same place. She is doing much work in both these departments.

The Chautauqua Assemblies of Kansas, both to be held the latter part of June, are preparing for their annual "feast of reason and flow of soul." Those having charge of the W. C. T. U. hours are evidence that our department will be a success.

In several places women were elected to municipal offices at the spring election, and they "held the balance of power" in many more, carrying the election for "law and order." More women voted than at any previous election.

Our next state convention is to be held at Baldwin.

The brother of our state president, whose illness was noticed in last UNION SIGNAL report, passed away March 17. The sympathy of all her constituency is with her in this sad bereavement.

At the meeting of the state executive board, a Cooper medal contest was held, the contestants being members of that body. Mrs. Dora Evans, president of fifth district, won the prize, although the contest was for the purpose of winning votes more than winning the medal, and was pronounced a success.

Augusta union had the Jaquith sisters (W. C. T. U. evangelists) for a four weeks' meeting, resulting in several conversions, also several pledged members to the union. They also celebrated Neal Dow's birthday, holding services in the opera hall. Excellent addresses were delivered by Revs. F. J. Rice and Joel Brown. Neal Dow UNION SIGNALS and memorial cards were distributed, and the temperance sentiment of Augusta much strengthened.

Miss Edith Hill, one of our white ribbon evangelists, has been ordained pastor of the First Baptist church of Pittsburg, Kan. A neat ordination card announced the fact.

PHYSICAL CULTURE DECAPITATED.

You may be startled by this heading, but cannot be more so than was your reporter when she read in her last UNION SIGNAL letter the note on the Physical Education Department which left her hands with a fully developed, round head, but in process of publication had been decapitated and consequently had no individuality whatever. We can but hope that all who saw the note were so familiar with the National superintendent as to understand what was intended and have already ordered the department literature package from Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, Mansfield, Ohio.

GOOD NEWS.

On the third of May a bill passed the legislature of Ohio repealing section 2,123 of the statutes of Ohio, by which municipal governments were empowered to regulate prostitution.

DISTRICT AND COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

The twentieth district met in annual convention in the M. E. church of South Charleston, the president, Rev. Emily K. Bishop, presiding. The pastor, a strong Prohibitionist, gave the convention a royal welcome. The attendance of delegates was good and all the meetings were largely attended. The convention was gratified to have present as delegate from the Xenia union the beloved president of the state, Mrs. Monroe, who rendered valuable assistance and gave an able address on purity, which awakened the women of the district to increased diligence along this line. From eleven to twelve o'clock each day was spent in devotional exercises which were pervaded by the power of the Holy Spirit. It was found that evangelistic work had accomplished much good in house-to-house visitation, distribution of literature, public meetings, establishing mission meetings, holding services in infirmaries and refuge homes for women and girls. A police matron was reported as established in her work in Dayton. Parlor meetings have secured additions to membership. Ten departments of work were carried on the past year. Scientific temperance instruction will be given special prominence the new year. Unions will procure the law in suitable form and will have it tacked up in school-rooms. A number of subscriptions were taken for THE UNION SIGNAL and Ohio Messenger and ten copies of State Minutes were sold. The evening address was given by the National superintendent of physical culture, Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, of Ohio, who charmingly and forcibly emphasized the close relation of physical development to temperance. At the close of the convention delegates and friends held a praise meeting in the depot while waiting for trains. It was a fitting close to the spiritual temperance feast that had been enjoyed. The pastor of the church in which this convention was held preached two rousing temperance sermons the following Sabbath. Six new members were secured.

The seventeenth district and Allen county held their annual conventions jointly in the English Lutheran church, of Lima, Mrs. Mary E. Mehaffey, president, in the chair. Reports on prison and infirmary work showed much good accomplished among prisoners and unfortunates. A Bible reading and prayer service closed the first morning meeting. A paper by Mrs. Hesser, on narcotics, was so highly appreciated as to be ordered published in the Ohio Messenger. Literature, peace and arbitration and juvenile work were also well presented by papers. A gymnastic drill by a class of boys and girls, under direction of Miss Belle Hughes, a teacher in the city schools, is reported as the most interesting feature of the afternoon, and was given a well-merited round of applause.

The address of the first evening was given by Mrs. H. E. Hammond, of Cleveland, on "The Mission of the W. C. T. U."

After devotional exercises the second morning the election of officers was conducted by Mrs. S. A. Strother, of Findlay, and Mrs. Mehaffey was again elected president of district and county. Practical reports on resolutions and plan of work were adopted. Mrs. Hammond read a paper entitled "The Bible Position of Women," a strong plea for the equality of women and men. Mother Strother, a veteran white-ribboner, led in the noontide prayer.

A good presentation of Sabbath observance, and a report of work done by the union toward the better enforcement of Sabbath laws, was made. Purity, parlor meetings and evangelistic work were reported, and the question-box was specially enjoyed.

Mrs. Strother led the devotional exercises of the second evening's meeting. After excellent music Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, of Indianapolis, gave an address which the Lima daily papers say bristled with strong points interspersed with wit. Many ladies, leaders in society, stated to the president that they had been won to franchise. The convention was esteemed such a pleasure and profit to the city that the officers were invited to hold the next annual meeting in the same place.

On May 17 and 18 the twenty-third district union, consisting of Highland, Ross, Fayette and Clinton counties, assembled in annual convention in the Christian church of Wilmington. The president was detained by sickness, which detracted much from the meeting. A fine address of welcome was given by Miss Bessie Todhunter, a professor of Wilmington College. The state president, Mrs. Monroe, who was present throughout the convention, responded. Thursday afternoon she gave a practical lesson on parliamentary usage. The address of Thursday evening was given by Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, of Indianapolis, subject, "The Present Outlook—Woman Suffrage." The large audience was delighted.

After the election of officers, Mrs. Emma Unthank, Wilmington, president; Mrs. Lucy Thorne, of same place, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Harsha, of Hillsboro, recording secretary, and Miss Mary Kline, of South Salem, treasurer, Miss Rachel McGregor was elected delegate to the National Convention. The county presidents gave encouraging reports of the progress and outlook for the work in their counties. The state president gave an hour's talk on state work, the financial condition and the plans in hand. On Friday morning Mrs. Nichols gave a Bible reading on lessons from the Bible regarding women. The treasurer made a fine financial report, showing a large increase of dues. Peace and arbitration was well presented by the state superintendent of that department, Mrs. Abigail J. Hadley, who distributed much valuable literature on the subject. Excellent, practical reports on resolutions and plan of work were adopted; devotional and consecration services opened each meeting. On Friday evening Mrs. Henrietta L. Monroe, the honored president of the state union, gave an inspiring address on Christ in the Work. At its close Mrs. Eva Holland sang beautifully "Christ, My All."

The third district held its annual convention at Sandusky on May 23 and 24. The twenty-two unions of the district were well represented. Excellent papers were read and discussed spiritedly. "Industrial Schools" was treated by Miss Mary Stewart, of Norwalk, daughter of Hon. Gideon T. Stewart. "Good Roads" was presented by Mrs. Perkins, of Wellington; Mrs. Cooke, of Sandusky, told of "Delsarte and Physical Culture"; Mrs. Cady, of Sandusky, of Social Purity, and Miss Boehm, of Monroeville, reported the last National Convention, to which she was a delegate from this district. Mrs. N. S. Hershiser, of Wakeman, was elected president of the district. Rev. Henrietta G. Moore gave the evening address.

The midyear convention of Lorain county was held in the M. E. church of Wellington, May 9. Devotional exercises, earnest in prayer and praise, opened each meeting, and the singing was full of spiritual fervor. Seven local unions reported. Large delegations were present, especially from Oberlin and Lorain. The former place had twenty-three visitors and delegates present. The Loyal Temperance Legion of Wellington was ably reported. "The Temperance Question from our Point of View," was well handled. Young ladies from the high school rendered beautiful music. Miss May Haskell, a little girl, served the convention very acceptably as page. Rev. McClay, of Oberlin, led the noontide prayer. Dinner was served by the ladies of the Baptist church at the expense of the Wellington union.

The plan of work recommending the distribution of social purity and suffrage literature, parlor meetings, securing new members, becoming acquainted with strangers that come into our society, Demorest contests, occasional visits to town council, etc., was adopted. Strong resolutions bearing directly on lines of work were passed. Visiting and resident clergymen were made associate members of the convention. "Conservatism the Enemy of Progress" was thoughtfully presented by a paper, as was also "Women as Factors in the Progress of Nations." Mrs. Root, of Lorain, pleaded for greater vigilance in protecting boys and girls from the beginnings of vice, and for an equal standard of morals for both sexes. Mrs. Leiter, of Mansfield, followed, speaking of the knowledge she had acquired of the sin palaces of Chicago by a visit to them during the last National Convention. Ministers also denounced a double standard of morality for men and women.

An organ voluntary, an anthem by the choir, prayer by Rev. Mr. Wall and solo, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," by Miss Agnes Haskell, formed the opening exercises of the evening meeting. Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, of Mansfield, National superintendent of physical culture, gave the address of the evening on the relation of physical education to the temperance question. It was stated by all present that the meeting was delightful. Written invitations were sent to the superintendent of the schools, the teachers and school board, to King's Daughters, Epworth League, each Y. P. S. C. E., and many families were personally invited by the secretary. The result was a fine audience and we believe good results.

The annual convention of Cuyahoga county union was held in Grace M. E. church, Cleveland, the guest of the Quincy street union. The day was beautiful, the attendance large, although some of the prominent workers were absent attending W. C. T. U. and suffrage conventions in other places. The church was decorated with wreaths of roses and fragrant bouquets on desk and stand. Mrs. H. B. Wisner, president, was in the chair, all the officers present. All reports were full of interest, showing the work going steadily on. The committees on benevolence and mercy have been busy the past winter. Several new Y unions were reported. Jail and prison work is actively carried on by Mrs. T. K. Doty, state superintendent of that department. Franchise department rejoices over the passage of the school suffrage bill and the purity department in the fact that the city has ceased to advertise its shame. Flower mission is growing. The first president of the county union, Mrs. H. Ford, after an absence from the state of several years, was present at this convention. Cuyahoga county is looking forward to the National Convention with pleasure.

The convention of the Ross county union held in Bainbridge recently, was one of unusual interest. The business meetings were held in the Presbyterian church. Mrs. Purdum, state treasurer, served as president. The addresses of welcome and response were followed by a paper on "Young Womanhood," by Miss Kline, several other papers and recitation. The evening meeting was held in the M. E. church, which was crowded. Vocal solos and music on the mandolin and guitar enlivened the program. The address of the evening was given by Mrs. J. R. Nichols, of Indiana, and was a highly interesting lecture. By request, the date being open, Mrs. Nichols remained and spoke the next evening in the same church. Twelve members were added to the union, eight active and four honoraries.

Miami county recently held its semi-annual convention with the new union at Bradford, at which six unions were represented. Mrs. L. F. Hedges, president, was in the chair. "The Relation of Intemperance to Pauperism," "History of the W. C. T. U.," and "Equal Suffrage" were presented by papers. An interesting discussion followed the last named topic in which many gentlemen took an active part. The county union has two hundred and twenty-seven members. Reports showed advancement along many lines of work. The address of welcome, by Mrs. Rev. Wright, was exceptional, to which Mrs. Harrison responded very happily. Mrs. Northcutt, of Troy, gave a parliamentary drill. Their resolutions were strong and worthy of publication would space permit. Rev. Hughes of the Presbyterian church of Piqua, gave the address of the evening.

RHODE ISLAND.

"So God delights to teach this lesson ever,
That His success depends on our endeavor,
That lovingly performed, each lowly duty
Adds to the inner strength and outer beauty."

"Our semi-annual state meeting has passed and we have entered upon the latter half of our working year. The reports, as gathered up by our corresponding secretary, show increased interest and activity all along the line." So says our president, and that her own efficient and systematic efforts have helped to bring this about, is the glad testimony of many unions. The Newport correspondent says: "In consequence of an address by Mrs. M. A. Babcock, state president, the union has been greatly encouraged to do more and better work for the Master." She made three visits to Block Island before election, resulting in an increase in the Prohibition vote from seven last year to fifty-nine this. A promising union has been formed. The town has been controlled by the liquor element a great many years, and it created quite a little stir among the illegal liquor dealers (no licenses are granted) when they learned there was a prospect of a Woman's Christian Temperance Union being formed. An increase in the Prohibition vote was also noted in the towns near her home, and many throughout the state have been set to thinking by the earnest words and clear arguments of our state officers. The truth has been pressed home that "Your vote is the standard of your morals on the prohibition question." Also, for our encouragement we note the election of two members of the Prohibition Central Committee to seats in the general assembly.

A new union has been organized at Knightsville under hopeful conditions, and

Our state union has four districts now instead of county divisions. The monthly board meetings are made educational as well as executive by the presentation of a paper on some branch of the work. The subject of the enfranchisement of women was ably brought forward and received hearty indorsement. The "Effects of alcohol on the body and its use as a medicine," by Mrs. A. W. Chase, elicited warm commendation and animated discussion. The fact that every remedy known to medical science has a substitute was emphasized by one member for the benefit of those who believe that there are cases where alcohol is a necessity, in order that they may find and use this substitute rather than risk the terrible consequences of an appetite awakened or stimulated when the body is least able to resist its power.

Ten delegates were appointed to attend the Neal Dow celebration at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, June 3, 4 and 5. An invitation has been accepted to arrange the program and take charge one day at the Hebronville camp-meeting to be held in August, under the auspices of the Christian Workers' Association.

The Outlook has entered upon the ninth volume of its existence with a circulation of two thousand copies. As the years go by, it keeps strengthening and developing. In fact we are very proud of our state paper under its able management. The editor says: "Though far from being satisfied with its present material progress, and desiring nothing so much as an ability to enlarge its influence, still it rejoices in the fact that for a year or two it has made advances, financially, and each time come out a little further ahead."

Providence Y's are busily at work preparing their new Rest Cottage at Saunderstown for the coming season. Their new and beautiful drinking fountain, near the electric car station, promises to be a boon to the thirsty wayfarers in that portion of the city. Their loan library in connection with the tea rooms is appreciated by its patrons, two hundred and ninety-seven books being taken out during one month.

As the anniversary of the Beacon approached, the Newport Y decided there could be no more fitting celebration of the dedication of a gospel mission than by holding a series of gospel meetings. Accordingly Mrs. J. K. Barney was invited to conduct such meetings.

Saturday, Sunday and Monday, May 12-14, these services were held each evening at the Beacon, Sunday afternoon a Bible reading in a church, and Monday afternoon a social purity talk to women.

The meetings were well attended, much interest manifested and some souls saved. The power of the Holy Spirit was manifestly in every service.

Monday evening, May 28, Mrs. H. D. Walker came to Newport, speaking at the regular service that evening at the Beacon, and working during the following day, which was election day, and speaking in the evening.

Election day the Beacon was open the entire day, two or more ladies being present each hour to serve lemonade and sandwiches, give out leaflets, sing, or hold personal conversation with all who came in.

In the afternoon leaflets were distributed to those passing by and in the saloons on the wharf. The gospel service of the evening was attended with the power of God in the salvation of two souls.

The refreshments were served, the leaflets given, the words spoken to many from out of the city, but having been given "In His Name" we leave the results with Him and know that He will see to it that it shall not be in vain.

Miss Flora Grant won the grand gold medal at a contest held in the Y. M. C. A. rooms, Providence.

Providence union mourns the loss of one of its oldest and most faithful members, Mrs. Martha Humphreys. A memorial service was held by the union and sincere tributes of respect and affection were given by Mrs. Babcock, Mrs. Martin, Mrs. Walker and others.

RIVERSIDE county, Cal., which is under a prohibitory law, still harbors those who insist upon disregarding such mandates, and expect to avoid punishment through some technicality of the law, therefore for that reason the trial of the first case was awaited with much interest. It came, and was one of liquor having been sold at a hotel under cover of a sandwich. The case was tried by a jury which convicted the offender, much to the joy of the W. C. T. U., who have worked hard and contributed liberally to have the law enforced.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

STRONG WORDS FROM THE SHUT-IN SECRETARY.

Last week had I been able to write I should have given you in our own column that magnificent telegram from the secretary of the state prohibition committee of Virginia, announcing the complete prohibition victory achieved at Norfolk—the capital of the state—a note of which was found among first page items. It was a trial to be laid aside, but while I have lain in my bed looking straight up the words have sunk deeper and deeper in my heart and I have "thanked God and taken courage." "There is more and more to follow," if the W. C. T. U. will stand with unbroken front against every form of compromise, even though it be the specious Gothenburg system of tax, license, local option, high license to include brandy and lighter drinks, etc., his honor, the governor, being the final referee. Anti-saloon, anti-license are in the same category, and "whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise."

It is anti-traffic that is wanted by the W. C. T. U., and it is for anti-traffic that one state, at least, will stand. Read the following message received with thanksgiving:

"TO THE OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION:—
Greeting from Michigan W. C. T. U.

The Michigan division stands ready for marching orders. Our chosen captain for the fourteenth time is Mary T. Lathrap, who will stand for us in the National. May the year to come be blessed with soldiers who shall be armed with conviction, consecration and intelligence wielded in faith, and may the Michigan division do its share of earnest battle.

Who will stand with these women and their magnificent leaders? Let us hear from each state, and when all shall have thus declared themselves, the world may read upon the National W. C. T. U. banner, "As for us and our house, we will serve the Lord."

Miss Hattie Henderson, corresponding secretary Texas union, writes: "The thirteenth annual convention of the Texas W. C. T. U. will be held June 15 to 17 inclusive, at Taylor, where are found the banner union and L. T. L. It is a small town but full of wide awake people, the union having over three hundred pledged members. We are anticipating a fine time with Mrs. Hoffman (who will be fifteen days in the state) in attendance, but must close her work with us with our convention."

Miss Belle H. Mix, corresponding secretary of Iowa, tells us "new unions are being formed just now with pleasing rapidity." What true woman will not rejoice in this and earnestly pray that the Iowa W. C. T. U. through "grace, grit and gumption" may be delivered from the intrigue by which the state has been led to its present "temperance (?) status," and which still as a tireless enemy is seeking whom it may destroy.

Mrs. M. H. Switzer, president Oklahoma W. C. T. U., allows me to share with her the good words she has received from another, and believing in the "greater good to the greater number," I pass the words along. "A prayer-meeting was held by the W. C. T. U. of Guthrie on election day from five o'clock in the morning until the closing of the polls. Great interest was aroused in temperance, thirteen were added to the membership of the union. A new union was soon after organized a few miles away, and plans are laid for another among colored women." "Queen Mary said she would rather face a regiment of soldiers than one of John Knox' prayers." Why are not our prayers of equal power?

Owing to the detention by illness of the National corresponding secretary from the Staten Island International Prohibition Congress, Mrs. S. S. Fessenden, president Massachusetts W. C. T. U., kindly represented the National organization. The following telegram was sent:

CHICAGO, June 2, 1894.—The National W. C. T. U. sends greeting to our honored prohibition chieftain and prays that "your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment and that ye may approve things that are excellent."

Headquarters have been made increasingly pleasant by the reception of a delightful invitation from Mrs. Mary T. Burt, president New York W. C. T. U., to attend a meeting of welcome to be given our beloved president, Frances E. Willard, upon her arrival in this country on Thursday evening, June 21, 1894, at 8 o'clock, at Calvary Baptist church, Rev. Dr. McArthur, pastor. Thanks, dear Mrs. Burt. We want to come, and will if we can, every one of us.

MARY T. WOODBRIDGE.

Treasurer's Corner.

A letter from our musical veterans, Mr. and Mrs. Bailey, contained two dimes and many words of cheer for the work. They are now resting in Iowa for a time.

Three white-ribboners from Palmyra, N. Y., also sent their dimes in response to Miss Willard's call. Freeport, Ill., W. C. T. U., sends $3.10 for thirty-one members, to apply upon same fund. Elizabeth City union, N.C., sends Neal Dow collection, $2.60; Akron, O., $5 for World's; Popham Beach, Me., also sends Neal Dow collection, and $6.45 was sent by Miss Ames, treasurer of Wisconsin, as self-denial fund. Whatcom, Wash., sends $1.85. Olinda, Cal., 20 cts., and Mexico, N. Y., $2.68, all of which will be forwarded to Mrs. Williams, treasurer of the World's W. C. T. U.

The question of increased dues is being considered by many states more seriously than ever before. The outlook for National finances seems bright, and we are hoping that dues may not fall off; if memberships are kept up, and dues are paid promptly, we shall be able to send our superintendents their much-needed appropriations.

DEAR CO-WORKERS:—It is now May 30, and I have been longing to get into this corner again ever since I wrote you last, which was February 15. Since I wrote you I have filled fifteen engagements in Steuben county, N. Y., organizing two good unions there, and our Sunday mass-meetings were really inspiring. We spoke at seven points in Potter county, Pa., organizing two good unions there in the midst of the most fearful snowstorm of the season. At one meeting only twenty men and three women were present on account of the storm which blocked the roads in all directions, but the woman who is true to the white ribbon can brave the storms of winter and heat of summer. Following this came our county convention at De Ruyter, Madison county, N. Y., where we organized a splendid Y between afternoon and evening sessions, then we held meetings at Camden, Poland, Norway and Gray, N. Y., organizing a strong union at the latter place, May 22.

I entered the grand old prohibition state of Maine and spoke at South Berwick, York county convention, where I had the pleasure of meeting Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, president of Maine, who was helping her white ribbon daughters as usual, for she is a faithful, tireless, cheerful worker to whom her loyal women can always turn for counsel and aid, feeling sure of a ready response.

May 23 found me at Woodford's, a lovely seaside resort where the Cumberland county convention was held, with its able president, Miss Cornelia Dow (daughter of Hon. Neal Dow), in the chair. Both these conventions were crowded with interesting reports, showing the ability and fidelity of both county and local presidents and workers. Then followed a pleasant rest of two days at the delightful home of Mrs. Sarah Lord Cram, of Biddeford, corresponding secretary of the state. This lady is one of those quiet, faithful, persistent workers who accomplish so much in such a quiet manner that you feel restful in their presence. Our meeting last Sunday evening at Bath was

THANKFUL FOR THE OPPORTUNITY.

"I am delighted with the White Ribbon Portfolio. Have received Part I. and Part II. and now wish Part III. I should think every white-ribbon sister would obtain these photographs of our beloved temperance workers. I feel that I cannot be sufficiently thankful for the opportunity of obtaining these precious pictures."

A THANKOFFERING.

"A subscriber and friend of the temperance cause" sends a thankoffering for our beautiful Flower Mission number. This will give some poor, hungering sister THE UNION SIGNAL for many months.

an inspiration, for it was estimated 1,400 people were present and with four Prohibition ministers on the platform it was no wonder forty-two new names were added to their union and a big collection put in the baskets. The good minister who made the collection speech told of the many efforts and organizations started by men for the better enforcement of their law since the W. C. T. U. was organized in Bath, and of all these only the latter had lived on and worked on while the men had given up again and again. He commended their faith and never tiring efforts, and in silvery tones the audience generously responded.

In our work since March 11, God has given us 580 new names to be added to the unions mentioned, and as Samantha says, "More anon."

Yesterday with Mrs. Stevens I called on General Dow who was busy in his study preparing scrap books. He greeted us with a pleasant smile and seemed like a man of fifty years instead of ninety. To-day he goes alone to that great New York meeting at Prohibition Park. God bless and keep him is my prayer.

I am now resting for a few days at the Maine W. C. T. U. headquarters, which is a pleasant home in the midst of this busy city of Portland where "they say" there is so much drinking, but I have looked everywhere for a man who showed signs of drink and have not yet seen one in Maine. To-day being a holiday and a loafing day for the drinking class, I walked slowly through the worst part of the city, going down on one side of the street (where it is thought liquor is sold) and up on the other side, hoping to see at least the worst side of the city, but saw no evidence of drink. In all these suspected places I did not see as many persons enter in the half hour I watched as I would see enter one saloon in my own city in five minutes, and no air of respectability given to any of these places. When the women of Maine vote, Portland will have officials who will look after even the suspected places, so that the large cities as well as the small ones shall be protected from the rum fiend.

At Maine W. C. T. U. headquarters every afternoon you will meet Mrs. Stevens, the state president, and Miss Cornelia Dow, who at their desks are looking after the state work. This handsome house was purchased by the Maine union, and the rooms rented (besides those reserved for use of headquarters) will bring in a nice income as soon as the house is paid for. It is now helping to pay for itself that way. My work will be in Maine until the middle of July when I return to New York state. They have arranged for me to speak at ten county conventions in Maine which will enable me to see for myself the effect of their law in different portions of the state, and as I expect to speak in their state prison on Prison Sunday I shall see the criminal side. HELEN L. BULLOCK.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

The faith which thou hast have thou to thyself before God. Happy is he that judgeth not himself in that which he approveth. But he that doubteth is condemned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith: and whatsoever is not of faith is sin.—Romans 14: 22, 23.

The Chautauqua fountain, now being placed in Willard Hall corridor in the Temple, is of exquisite beauty and workmanship, commemorating as it does that which has proved the greatest factor in the temperance reform. The Temple Trustees have decided to keep the fountain from the inspection of the public until Miss Willard's return, after which it will be unveiled with becoming ceremonies. The ceremony will probably take place some time in July. The intention is to invite the leading women who took part twenty-one years ago in the formation of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union at Chautauqua, N. Y., to be present at the unveiling of the fountain, which has been erected through the indefatigable efforts of the white-ribboners of Chautauqua county—to commemorate the birthplace of the W. C. T. U. It will indeed be a notable occasion, and will give white-ribboners an opportunity to welcome their chieftain back to her own city, state and country after such a long, enforced absence. It is probable that the presentation and unveiling of the Children's fountain will take place at the same time, as that fountain is to be placed in the street at the entrance to Willard Hall.

Lady Henry Somerset in her annual address before the British Women's Temperance Association, in London, May 7, spoke as follows in regard to the Temperance Temple:

"Having been cognizant of the pros and cons connected with the great enterprise that has resulted in the building of the Woman's Temple, I feel that it is no more than an act of loyalty to our co-workers across the water for me to say that the unfair presentation of that enterprise to the public is, in my opinion, the result of local jealousies, which unfortunately are never absent from any circle of workers, no matter how good and earnest they may be. It is the pitiful human element entering into the work of God, and has characterized that work in all ages. What I wish now to impress upon the minds of all my comrades is, that disinterested business men of the highest standing in Chicago have put their names to a statement that the Temple enterprise has been so founded and so well conducted as to deserve the confidence of the public, and that if carried forward, as they have reason to believe it will be along the lines at first laid down—which have not been changed and are not likely to be,—the enterprise merits the people's confidence. Among those who thus gave the weight of their business reputation to the enterprise are such men as Philip Armour, George M. Pullman and Marshall Field. No fair-minded person will doubt but that such a statement is better worthy of credence than the spiteful declarations of local workers who have for a year or two past misled many good men and women with regard to an enterprise that deserves the sympathy and help of all well-wishers of humanity."

The following communication was received during my absence in California from Mrs. Eliza Hume, secretary of the Eau Claire, Wis., West Side W. C. T. U.: "At the last meeting of our union, a unanimous vote of sympathy for, and confidence in, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, and the great work she has undertaken, was passed, and the secretary instructed to convey the same to her. The Eau Claire West Side union is proud of having its name in Willard Hall, and can truthfully say that raising $100 in no way hindered their own local work." Mrs. S. A. Packard, at present a sojourner for her health at Winter Park, Florida, writes a lengthy letter from which the following extracts are taken: "I always look at the Temperance Temple Items the first thing on receipt of THE UNION SIGNAL. I am a Massachusetts woman by birth, but was Temple treasurer in Santa Clara, Cal., W. C. T. U., when that union raised $200 for the Temple, and I helped to raise it. It did not take so very long, and we did not find it such dreadful hard work either. Our union was small and the work done for the state was never more prosperous than during the time we were contributing our penny a day toward the Temple. The next two years found that little union able to purchase an Estey organ for the benefit of the L. T. L., and money enough beside to erect a fountain on the street, for which we paid $24 a year for water. I want to say to my sisters, my experience is, give if you wish to receive. Let every white-ribboner put her penny a day into the Temple at once, until it is all paid for. All I want is health once more, and be assured I will stand shoulder to shoulder with you in the Temple work."

The souvenir Temple spoon is giving great satisfaction. All who receive it are delighted. Mrs. F. M. Honaker, Carrollton, Mo., writes: "The souvenir spoon is a beauty; every W. C. T. U. member should have one. Will try to fill another mite-box this year." Mrs. Edward Eells, Washington, D. C., writes in regard to the Columbian souvenir: "It is lovely and I take the greatest pleasure in showing it to my friends."

Let our white-ribboners remember all persons sending $1 to the Temple will receive the beautiful Columbian souvenir. Any individual who fills a mite-box during 1894 will receive a solid silver Temple souvenir teaspoon. This, however, does not apply to persons filling boxes for unions; they receive the Columbian souvenir. All money orders and checks should be made out in the name of William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, the Temple, Chicago, Ill. All orders for mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Frances E. Willard. "What glad Evangel dost thou bring to men,
O new Evangeline, whose hope-filled eyes
Facing the future's glory-tinted skies,
Reflect their radiant gleam on us again."

Miss Esther Pugh. "Few women have been more widely loved than she who was known as 'our Esther.'"

Mrs. Caroline B. Buell. "For fourteen years corresponding secretary of the National W. C. T. U., Mrs. Caroline Brown Buell may be counted both well known and well loved among white-ribboners."

Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap. "The Daniel Webster of the Temperance Reform," Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, needs no eulogy. No lips were ever more truly touched with a live coal from God's altar than are hers."

Mrs. Louise S. Rounds. "Few states are blessed with a leader so strong and brave and earnest, and in her loyal followers she inspires her own lofty courage."

Mrs. Mary T. Burt. "Queenly in presence, courtly in speech, elegant in manners in private life, as well as dignified and inspiring in public, she is well fitted to lead the more than twenty thousand consecrated women of the Empire State."

Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden. "Mrs. Fessenden is a born leader, queenly, magnetic, with the courage of her convictions, which is sublimely contagious, and a devotion to the cause which knows no discouragement and recognizes no obstacles."

Miss Margaret A. Sudduth. "Has fine literary and executive ability, and the force of her personality is felt by all who come in contact with her."

Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson. "Graduated in 1881 from the School of Theology of Boston University, being the only woman in her class. In 1891 she was elected corresponding secretary of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., which position she held for two years, coming in 1893 to Chicago as editor of Books and Leaflets and contributing editor to THE UNION SIGNAL."

Mrs. Harriet B. Kells. "Has rare literary ability, and a breadth of mind and courage of convictions which combine to make her influence most far-reaching."

Miss Jennie A. Stewart "Is the Associate Editor of THE UNION SIGNAL and the 'Aunt Jane' enshrined in the hearts of the children."

Mrs. Caroline F. Grow. "Business Manager of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. Graduated from Wheaton Female Seminary, Norton, Mass., class of 1855."

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

A GREAT MOTHER

THE ABLY-WRITTEN AND DELIGHTFULLY INTERESTING BIOGRAPHY OF

Madam Willard

has just issued from the press of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, and is a rare acquisition to our literature. It is more than a biography; it is a setting forth of her sublime and a record of her wise, pithy sayings, as well as of the incidents in which she put her philosophy to the test of practical experience.

Philosophy of Life,

It should be in the hands of each Mother

while, at the same time, so vivid is its portrayal and so interesting the facts recorded, each child will find it full of interest.

It is now ready. ORDER AT ONCE.

HANDSOMELY BOUND. PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED. PRICE $1.50.

Read What Our Exchanges Say About

A GREAT MOTHER

FROM CHICAGO HERALD, SUNDAY, JUNE 3.

A Great Mother.

If one is to judge of a book as of a dinner, it is easy to draw the line between the good and the bad. The man who carries from the table where he has dined the wholesome flavors of a meal calculated to nourish rather than stimulate, to strengthen rather than to exhilarate, is the man who will feel no after effects of indigestion and no deterioration of aptitude for assimilation. Just so with a book; the reading that inspires to nobler action, that reveals the worthlessness of a life that is wasted on the emotions, that uplifts and purifies and strengthens, is the only reading that is healthful to mental digestion. Nobody can peruse the beautiful tribute paid by daughter and kinswoman to the late Madam Willard without laying aside the book at last with a sincere thankfulness for a most pure and wholesome mental repast. Each chapter is but another note in a bugle-call that summons us away from a life of sordid materialism to a higher plane of action, where honor and sweetness and rectitude take the place of vapid self-seeking and empty gain.

Madam Willard was a glorious woman in all ways, but of her nothing could be said more truly, nor in higher meed of praise, than is contained in the grand significance of the title which is affixed to the book wherein loving hands have recorded the brave record of her life, "A Great Mother." No more blessed memorial could be written for a woman than is contained in these three words. And she merited them. She was graciously and genuinely human as well as sweetly spiritual. She combined qualities that made her delightful on all sides. Like a rose that opens to every point of the compass, or like a hill-top that emerges from the plain into sun-lit and wind-blown space of the upper and freer air, her nature was supreme in its individuality. She was quaint, humorous, sympathetic, human and Christian all in one. She was variable as a June day that shines and blossoms and clouds a little all in one, but carries no frost in its bosom, and knows not the meaning of blight and decay. She could get humanly cross and scold a bit when occasion required—witness her method of dealing with her belligerent grandchildren—but there was divine compensation in her quickly following smile, and the touch of her beautiful hands.

In the home where for so blessed a lifetime her influence was supreme, love was the ruling power and sympathy the bond. Nothing that she ever said was sweeter or gave a truer index to the long chapter of her life than the words she breathed upon her dying bed: "If I had it all to live over again I should praise more and blame less." This was said in reference to her dealings with her children. In that philosophy is summed a greater wisdom than many attain. Not harshness and not reproof, but love is what will keep the home happy and the heart tender.

Another distinguishing trait in the dear old lady's character, as strong in age as in youth, was her belief in keeping work subservient to advancement, or soul-growth and development. Miss Willard says of the peculiar phase of her mother's individuality: "She would never allow me to stay at home for work. She always insisted that we should go to school, no matter how much extra work it brought upon her on the farm. She would rather, she often said, her girls came to their best physically, mentally and morally, no matter what it cost, and always held the 'housework,' as folks call it, subordinate to that intention." Dear grandmother that she was; no wonder she gave Frances Willard to the world. Great mothers will produce great daughters as surely as robins hatch robins.

To read of Madam Willard's dying hour is to drop the dread of death, and learn to see in the great harvest angel but the beneficent hand that transplants the rose he gathers. The record of those love-watched hours, when the sweet spirit cast its moorings like a white-winged bark and softly slid across the bar to meet its "pilot face to face," will teach the thoughtful soul a new significance in death. There can be no mistake when such a soul as hers holds its faith steadfast through eighty-seven years, and finally meets its God with such calm assurance. "Quietly, softly, came the last breath. Into the face upon the pillow came a look wholly seraphic, tender, ineffably loving, expectant, blissful, as if to say to us: 'I love you and I leave you; it has all come true.'"

So passed a life of which no grander record has been left than the story of a great motherhood. It would be of incredible benefit to the world if young women everywhere could read this record and benefit by the beautiful story. Not by outside deeds, but in the sweet sanctities of home is wrought the tapestry whose warp and woof shine with the golden thread of God's approval. No better thing for womanhood could be done than to scatter this book broadcast as the wind scatters blossoms. There is no more sacred hope for future citizenship than in the maintenance of a great and good motherhood, and how to do it and not to fail is recorded in the life of Madam Willard, who, although actively public-spirited and far removed from littleness of thought and narrowness of outlook, still maintained her strongest hold and most blessed influence upon the hearts of her children and in the home she sanctified with her presence.—Amber.

AN APOLOGY.

We confess ourselves humiliated by the second appearance in our advertising columns of a deftly concealed cigar premium, under the guise of an innocent time-keeper. We have advertised these watches for years, and our unsuspecting stenographer, whose duty it is to read each advertisement, trusted too fully to the assertion of the advertiser that this particular advertisement was inadvertently sent to us, and would not be offered again. Rest assured, dear friends, we would not knowingly advertise tobacco in any form, and we wish humbly to apologize for the oversight in our advertisement department, and promise for it and ourselves greater watchfulness in the future.

Yours sincerely,

CAROLINE F. GROW,
Business Manager.

PERSONAL.

"Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty"—from the all-insinuating cigar, so says our editor, Miss Margaret Sudduth, in our issue of May 31, first page.

Miss Sudduth felt it incumbent upon her to write as she did owing to the fact that a watch advertisement, offering cigars as a premium, inadvertently found its way into our columns.

And much to our surprise and to my personal chagrin the same advertisement was inserted again in the issue of May 31. It was purely an act of carelessness or oversight on the part of myself and assistant, and no one, either in this office or member of the union, regrets it more than I do. I beg to assure the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL it was not done purposely, and if I can help it, will never be repeated. We shall watch the advertising columns closer than ever, as we do not propose to advertise anything inconsistent with the principles advocated by our paper.

SAM'L H. BLOOM,
Advertising Manager.

FOR THE MINISTERS.

"I am so thankful that you make it so easy for W. C. T. U. women to supply ministers with our good paper the very best that enters our homes. If our women would realize what good they might accomplish by sending this paper into ministers' homes, thousands of our preachers would be supplied. We send it regularly to our four pastors—a few years ago our one prohibition preacher moved away—to-day our four preachers are Prohibitionists. The reading of THE UNION SIGNAL has been an important factor."

EXCEEDS MY ANTICIPATIONS.

OLD—NEW—TESTED—FRESH

GOOD because it contains the favorites of White Ribboners everywhere, the songs which have become their watchwords.

NEW because rich treasures of word and song have been prepared for its pages.

TESTED because its hymns have borne the wear and tear of use.

FRESH because it rings clear and sweet for the home, the nation, and the truth of God.

It is divided into the following sections:

Devotional Meetings	Mass Meetings
Evangelistic Services	Prohibition Rallies
Gospel Temperance Meetings	Special Days
Memorial Services	Closing Hymns
Responsive Scripture Readings

Signal Notes.

MORE than all the warriors of the Matabeles, the white man's whisky is dreaded by the native South African. "Its wounds," he says, "never heal."

THERE are 20,903 juvenile temperance societies in Great Britain with a total membership of 2,678,000. Nearly one thousand societies were added last year.

A SHOCKING spectacle was recently witnessed in the bull ring at Madrid, when a matador, El Espartero, was gored to death by the infuriated bull whom he was attacking.

EIGHT thousand of the twelve thousand saloon-keepers in New York City have served terms in prison. Yet licenses have been issued to them as men of "good moral character."

AT six per cent interest, reckoned semi-annually, the cost of smoking three cigars a day at five cents each from the age of twenty to fifty years amounts to $4,494.41. At ten cents each the total of principal and interest is $9,205.16.

THE refusal of liquor dealers to attach their names to woman suffrage petitions when invited is indicative of a conviction on their part that with the ballot in the hands of women the supremacy of the liquor traffic as a factor in politics will be practically destroyed.

BELIEVING that statehood should be postponed until the youth of Utah are instructed in pure morals and good American principles, the recent Presbyterian General Assembly passed a strong resolution asking the United States Senate to postpone action on the admission of Utah as a state.

THAT one of the most serious signs of decay in this country is found in the increase of insanity is the firm opinion of Dr. De Costa. Years ago it was found that society was "dying at the top," and it was computed that 1 in 250 of the population was insane, but now the number has been put at 1 in 127.

FIFTY saloon-keepers were prosecuted by the Citizens' League of Chicago in May on seventy-six charges. Forty-four were charged with selling liquor to minors, twenty-eight for selling to drunkards and four for allowing minors to play pool. Fines and costs amounting to seven hundred and thirty dollars were imposed.

BY a recent treaty with Belgium, Great Britain has secured a coveted strip of territory in Central Africa which enables it to establish a British highway from Cairo to Cape Town. Now let the rum traffic be banished from the sad heart of Africa and the tramp of British soldiery will mean protection for both the native and alien in the dark continent.

AT a recent exposure of the tricks in spiritualism at Leeds, England, Mr. Walton Powell, president of the National Anti-Infidel League, gave practical illustrations of how the illusions are produced. Shining out through the darkness the forms of three women seemed to float in mid-air, caused by an ingenious arrangement of mirrors. Other well-known tricks were also made clear.

DURING the recent trial of Rev. Arthur Prautch, at Bombay, in spite of the fact that the evidence fully sustained his and others' published statements against the opium smoking dens and illegal selling on the part of the government opium contractor, the biased magistrate imposed a fine of 200 rupees. Mr. Prautch, who has been a missionary in India for seven years, of course declined to pay the unjust sentence and was remanded to prison for a month. Great indignation is felt at this unwarrantable action on the part of the magistrate.

THE deadly cigarette has again added to its unrecorded work of destruction. This time it is a young American pastor whose fatal addiction to the poisonous "white pipe" has just ended his promising career at the age of twenty-nine. He leaves a young wife and three babies. Although the papers chronicle the cause of his death as heart failure, there is no doubt that he died from a "smoker's heart." He was the heaviest cigarette purchaser in the town. Can any worker in Christ's vineyard afford to abate his influence in the least degree by use of the offensive weed, granting that the effect may never reach the tragic end thus noted?

Careful Attention

to the healthful feeding of the cows producing the milk received at our condenseries is vitally important. We rigorously prohibit the use of foods not qualified to produce pure, wholesome milk. Hence, the superior quality of the Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk.

HAVE YOU READ KORADINE

A GIRL'S BOOK...

A MOST FASCINATING STORY, GIVING THE ART OF TRUE LIVING, AND POWER TO MEET EVERY DIFFICULTY

"No more charming book could be placed in the hands of a girl. It is so bright, so piquant, so full of delicious bits of nature, that one can hardly lay down the book without finishing it at one reading."

Nellie Blessing Eyster.—In Koradine the science of right thinking and right living is portrayed in a way so fascinating to the reader that one closes the book with a realization that he has been breathing the air of heaven. No other book like it in scope of thought, in elegant simplicity of language, nor in sweet and wholesome purpose, has appeared in this century. Although written for the benefit of young girls, it is equally enchanting and instructive to thoughtful boys; and the wise, loving mother, seeking for the highest spiritual and physical development of both, can obtain no better aid than by placing in their hands this incomparable book.

ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO., - 277 Madison Street, CHICAGO

EVERY LADY OR AGENT who sends us 10 cts. and the names and addresses of five good housekeepers will receive one of our $9.60 package of ELECTRIC SOLDERING PLATE, FREE. Don't miss this rare chance but send 10 cts. and names and addresses at once as this Special Offer is made to introduce it into thousands of new homes. The regular price of same is 25 cts. ELECTRIC SOLDERING PLATE is the greatest discovery of the age. It mends Copper, Lead, Brass Pipe, Tinware, Electric Wires, and in fact every article that solder will mend. If your Boiler, Dish Pan, Tea Kettle, Coffee or Tea Pot or Pail leaks you can mend it at home without any tools, rosin or acid, and it makes no difference if the article to be mended is greasy or dirty. It makes a neat and thorough patch, and any man, woman and child can use it. Each plate contains 192 quarter-inch squares, equal to $9.60 worth for 25 cts. as any tin-smith would charge you 5 cts. (often 10 cts.) for mending a small hole or break, so that 192 holes that this plate will mend would save you $9.60. Don't fail to send for a sample, give it a thorough trial and you will order more. We wish every one to understand that the soldering plate is an entirely new article, different in every respect from anything ever offered to the public, being the result of a large amount of study and experiment on the part of the inventor. It is something that will sell again and again over the same territory, as those who buy will be sure to recommend it to their neighbors. Men, women, boys and girls are making $45 to $75 per week clear, without any capital. Send for a package at once as per above special offer. Address C. SUMMER MEETINGS.

THE W. C. T. U. AT BAY VIEW.

Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, president of the Illinois union, accepts an invitation to conduct the W. C. T. U. Institute at Bay View, Mich., this year. This means a model institute, for no worker has a more intelligent conception of the needs to make our work effective, and besides, her organizing ability and energy are an assurance of an institute that may well draw the attendance of white-ribboners from near and far. The institute dates are from the opening of the assembly, July 18 to 29, and among those who will be in service as lecturers and instructors, are Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, National secretary of the King's Daughters, New York; Mrs. V. H. Campbell, president of the Wisconsin union; Mrs. E. N. Law, president of the Michigan eleventh district; Mrs. Carrie L. Grout, secretary of the Illinois union; Mrs. P. J. Howard, president of the Michigan tenth; Mrs. A. E. Sanford, editor of the Watch Tower; Miss Mary H. Mahon, Illinois superintendent of Y work, besides many other prominent workers who are planning to participate. Bay View has always been a favorite rallying place for the white ribbon forces, and we have there the finest summer headquarters in this country. Bay View is one of the most interesting summer resorts in all the world, and in all the plans women are given a prominent place. The Bay View summer university which now is regarded in the lead in this country, has a faculty of forty-five instructors drawn from prominent institutions of learning. It opens on July 12, and a week later the assembly, which is equally strong, opens, both extending to August 15. Living expenses at Bay View are very moderate and all roads make special low rates going there. A card addressed to J. M. Hall, Flint, Mich., will bring a copy of the Bay View Magazine for June. It is beautifully illustrated and gives all the summer announcements.

James Clement Ambrose, of Chicago, will deliver several lectures this season at each of the following Chautauqua resorts: Thousand Island Park, Old Orchard Beach, the Atlanta, the New England, the Round Lake, the Lake Madison, the Beatrice, the Epworth Park, the Northern New England, and every time some good words for the two great wants of woman and the land—a broken bottle and a whole ballot. A.

VOTE FOR IT.

It is gratifying to have our efforts to give to white-ribboners the pleasure of looking daily into the faces of their leaders so thoroughly appreciated. One enthusiastic correspondent writes: "I am more pleased than I can express in words with this beautiful collection of prominent temperance workers." We wish soon to issue Part IV, and to make sure of pleasing our friends we have concluded to give them the opportunity to decide upon the fourteen faces which shall appear in this number.

Every woman owning one part of the White Ribbon Portfolio is entitled to a vote, and the fourteen receiving the largest number of votes will appear in Part IV.

THE executive board of the Knights of Labor has decided to send out a circular to all labor men urging them to abstain from the use of beer at all times and places—where union beer cannot be obtained! This, alas! is not from temperance principles, such as Grand Master Powderly used to inject into the organization, and for which he was probably ejected, but for the laudable object of crippling the St. Louis syndicate breweries!

THE Central Y. W. C. T. U. of Chicago has organized an extensive flower mission department, and solicits flowers from country towns and city conservatories for distribution in hospitals and among the poor and disheartened of the city's "stony streets." Wild flowers, as well as the choice cultivated ones, will give great pleasure to those who seldom see so much as a clover blossom or a spear of green grass. Such flowers should be sent, express prepaid, to Miss Grace Greenlee, Superintendent Flower Mission, Room 1113, The Temple, Chicago.

APROPOS to Rev. Mr. Fernald's suggestion of having our best leaflets translated into foreign languages for use of the Bureau of Distribution, we would call the attention of our readers to the fact that our National superintendent of work among foreigners, Mrs. S. F. Grubb, of Kirkwood, Mo., has already in stock a large and valuable collection of leaflets for use among our foreign citizens. No union desiring to do effective, practical work could do better than to send to Mrs. Grubb for price list. We are sure the newly appointed committee of the Bureau will be glad to avail itself of so valuable an aid in a most difficult branch of its work.

WE are gratified with the following indorsement of our attitude towards the International Temperance Congress by Henry B. Metcalf, of Rhode Island: "I am pleased with your comment as to the probable effect of the late Congress. In my opinion the meeting did much more to strengthen the cause of prohibition than any distinctively 'prohibition' meeting could have done. Our great need is the opportunity to meet representative non-prohibitionists in open discussion before the people. It is impossible that we can lose thereby, and highly probable that we shall greatly gain. Our problem of the hour is how to make converts, which problem is not solved by love-feasts of the converted, however enjoyable those may be. The 'almost converted' are a mighty host; we want to meet them just as often as they will listen to us, even if, in return, we may be constrained to hear from them some words that may seem to us weak. I think your editorial as 'sound as a nut.'"

MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, who is enjoying a well-earned month's vacation from her UNION SIGNAL duties, in the delightful home of an Ohio cousin, writes so charmingly of the pleasures which follow the respite from office cares, that we cannot forbear extracting a few of the crisp sentences: "I drive every morning and evening through the most beautiful towns and by the sweetest homes I ever saw. My soul is ecstatic over the homely, human atmosphere. People have time to run in and 'sit a spell' and tell us about the child they thought would have the scarlatina last week, and to plan for simple neighborhood pleasures, while my mind keeps singing, 'And God set them in families?' The beauty of environment rests me and the beauty of spirit comforts me. When I have a sudden pang at heart about the unemployed at Chicago and elsewhere, I say, 'Now, Lord, you know I can't help it away off here,' and take 'the goods the gods provide' with a kind of conviction that the dear God is equal to the contract He has taken, to govern the universe without me!" Mrs. Kells' comrades rejoice over her good out-of-door times and promise to look after her share of the "unemployed" and the government generally, while she stores up pure oxygen for fresh endeavor and bids "dull care, begone."

WE are happy to be able to state that Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge has almost entirely recovered from her recent attack of sciatica. She was at her desk in Chicago several days last week, and on Monday of this week started to New York, to be one of the reception committee which will greet Miss Willard on her arrival in New York, June 20. Mrs. Carse is also in New York City and will be present at the reception. Her interesting Temple Items were omitted this week for lack of space.

DR. D. C. KELLEY, of Nashville, Tenn., presented the World's Petition to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, instead of the Southern Presbyterian General Assembly, as reported. What this Assembly did with the Petition we are not informed. The same General Conference reversed the sentence of suspension imposed for six months upon Dr. Kelley by Bishop R. K. Hargrove, on account of his canvass of the state of Tennessee in behalf of prohibition, and added advanced legislation in regard to prohibition, as follows: "Let all our preachers and members abstain from the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage, from signing petitions for such sale, from becoming bondsmen for any person as a condition for obtaining a license and from renting property to be used for such sale. If any member shall violate any of the provisions of this paragraph, he shall be deemed guilty of immorality."

THE welcome meeting to Miss Frances E. Willard, June 21, although extended by the New York State W. C. T. U., will be participated in by the following prominent organizations: National W. C. T. U., King's Daughters, Suffrage Society, Sorosis, Labor League, National Temperance Society, Prohibition Party, Good Templars, Father Matthew T. A. B. Society, Church of England Temperance Society, National League for the Promotion of Social Purity, Y. M. C. A. and many others. Among the prominent speakers invited to participate are General Neal Dow, General O. O. Howard, Anthony Comstock, Elbridge T. Gerry, Mr. Wm. T. Wardwell, Miss Susan B. Anthony, Mrs. Stanton, Mrs. Lillie Devereux Blake, Mrs. Helmuth, Mrs. Croly (Jennie June), Mrs. Bottome, Miss Grace Dodge, Terrence V. Powderly, Dr. Mac Arthur, Dr. David J. Burrell, Dr. Satterlee, Dr. Wilson, Father Elliott and Father Eagan. The young people and children will also join in a hearty greeting to Miss Anna Gordon, given by representatives from the L. T. L. and True Blue Cadets.

THE constitution of the new Republic of Hawaii provides for a president but no vice-president, a cabinet of four ministers, an advisory council of fifteen members and a legislature consisting of a senate and house of representatives, sitting separately, and each composed of fifteen members. All aliens, except those who supported the provisional government, must be able to read and write English fluently and possess property worth at least two hundred dollars in value. All voters must abjure monarchy. The president is to be elected for a term of six years and cannot be his own successor. The first president is named in the constitution and is to continue in office until December 31, 1900. In case of a presidential vacancy the office is to be filled by one of the cabinet until a new president is elected. If one house adjourns without the consent of the other, the latter has complete legislative power. The president and senate have power to conclude a treaty of commercial and political union with the United States. The legislature may restrict the residence and business of all persons coming into the Republic. Freedom of speech and press does not permit advocacy of the restoration of the monarchy. Crown lands are declared to be the property of the government, and lotteries are prohibited. We rejoice that the new Republic evidently believes that prohibition will prohibit.

NOT OLD.

BY CELIA SMITH BERKSTRESSER.

Call me not old, it cannot be,
I feel no touch of time upon my heart,
It seems but yesterday I stood beside my mother's knee
A little child—care free.

You say the marks of years are on my face and in my hair,
But as I look within upon my soul
I see no silver crown, no faded eyes, no wrinkles there,
But all is fresh and fair.

It is the same sweet joy to live to-day as yesterday,
And what to-morrow has in store for me
To suffer, live or die, I leave to One who said to lay
On Him our care alway.

Time cannot hurt my soul unless I will it so,—
I have the right to everlasting life.
When age and death have spoiled this house of clay, I go
Beyond the winter's snow.

There springtime stays always, and all are young,
And when I meet my friends, newborn,
We'll clasp glad hands and shout that parting, age and pain are gone.
We're young. Let time pass on.

HOW HETTY HIGDEN HELPED.

BY MARIE J. HESSE.

"I don't understand it, wife," sighed the minister, as he sank wearily into an easy chair, after his morning sermon. "The church was crowded as usual this morning, but in spite of my earnest appeal for closer acquaintance and more hospitality in the church, immediately after the benediction the congregation hurried out as if there were no such thing as friendliness or hospitality or my appeal for both. I suppose I ought not to complain for I never met a more generous people. They help willingly toward any good cause and always pay my salary. They want the very best of everything and are willing to pay handsomely for it. They are cordial enough in their homes, but they freeze when they come inside those walls. What can it be? Is it the church or the pastor?"

"I'm sure it isn't you, dear," soothed his wife. "Besides, I don't believe that our congregation is more so than any other city church."

"Oh, yes, it is," said he. "This morning I looked in vain to see the Burnhams speak to the Whithams, or the Ottars speak to the Fords, or the Fords shake hands with those new people who have taken the pew next to theirs. Why! If that whole congregation had been congealed to blocks of ice there could have been no less warmth!"

"Come, come, dear," gently said Mrs. Marvel, "you are taking it too seriously. Only keep on preaching sociability and see if you aren't rewarded," prophesied she with wifely faith in her husband's ability to remove icebergs of social conservatism if he only tried.

The next Sunday he preached from the text: "Bear ye one another's burdens," and pleaded again for a closer friendship among the members so earnestly that at least one hearer went out stirred with a determination to help the minister all she could.

The more she thought about it the more her determination grew. Her face became so earnest with the thought, that her rosy lips were compressed and every freckle on the stubby nose stood out prominently. She gave the lock of red hair that strayed across her forehead a sharp twitch, which process seemed to open the floodgates of speech: "See if I don't do it another Sunday! The idea of you, Hetty Higden, calling yourself a Christian, and after your pledge to help the pastor in every way you could, standing there selfishly letting your pride, that you call bashfulness, rule you, and stand in the way of your doing your duty! I'm ashamed of you! Now you've got to go and shake hands with those folks and stop thinking yourself too good!"

This, and more of Hetty's self-reproaching sermon would have sounded extremely funny to any one overhearing it, for Hetty was only a little, unfashionable girl in a great church; whose homely, freckled face, or unruly red hair that never stayed where it was put, could hardly have been noticed; whose short little jacket and a hat that had done several seasons service never attracted the least bit of attention in the fashionable throng; nor did this disturb her mind, for her ideas of the world were as yet limited to "mother's" opinion.

She thought "mother" was an uncommonly grand looking woman with her plain bonnet and shawl, and was quite sure no man was so good and true as her own father. Her parents were devout Scotch people, who were still old-fashioned enough to believe in bringing up their children in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord," and if they couldn't afford a seat among the select, they must still sit under the "preached word" if they had to resort to the doorstep. So they sat in the humblest seat in church. Each Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Higden marshalled in a seat full of bright, rugged children, all shining and clean. They looked like a row of red poppies ready to burst into full bloom. Hetty was the eldest and sat between restless Tom and wriggling Peter, and proved a sort of safety valve for them. She was so staid that she didn't seem to mind when Tom kicked her shins while he swung his tired legs, and made no sign when Peter crammed both hands and a foot into her tiny muff.

While keeping a vigilant eye on her charges she found time to think. She had queer ways of wondering about things, and this morning she wondered why the Murdstons swept into their pew and looked neither to the right nor left, and did not speak to the Brownells who sat just behind them; or why the Amhersts sat alone in their front pew when the old couple who could hardly hear sat in the rear of the church; or why Mrs. Fordham came so late. From her unfashionable perch Hetty saw all the great ones sweep into church and out again with merely a cold bow here and there. She had often noticed the minister looked a little sad as the great audience passed coldly out. The yearning in his face touched her. It was such a stately audience, but so well behaved that Hetty with her limited knowledge of affairs thought that every one felt as she did about it, and that all these good people wished very much to know and be helpful to each other but didn't know how, and were anxiously waiting on the brink of doubt for something to draw them closer. When Hetty told her mother of her determination she answered: "Be sure you are in earnest, child; that only succeeds."

"Oh, mother, I am; I canna bide that I dinna my duty!" said she falling easily into Scotch brogue.

"Go, then, daughter; only look na back. There'll be mony rebuffs, but they'll na hurt ye. If ye do it in the spirit of true helpfulness, the Lord will help ye!"

That Sunday morning Hetty made special preparations. She remained a little longer over her prayers and lingered over the Bible lesson and also over her toilet, for she felt much was at stake. Never were her cheeks so rosy or her eyes so bright. She heard but little of the sermon excepting the text, "Having done all, stand."

After the congregation had sung, "Blest be the tie that binds," and the benediction had been pronounced, the great organ burst out while the fashionable throng turned to hasten from the church. In the main aisle Hetty took her post, no longer timid or shrinking, but sweet and modest, with an uplifted face, she reached out to grasp the first hand that passed. It happened to be Deacon Burley's. He started a little, but as he looked over his glasses and saw brave Hetty with her honest blue eyes and bright smile he grabbed her hand like a sinking man and said heartily:

"Ahem! Why, bless you, my dear! Bless you, child!"

Before he let go of her hand with her left she had gotten hold of good but stately Mrs. Richman's and said, so pleasantly, "Here is Deacon Burley," that these two people shook hands cordially and for the first time stood talking and smiling and forgot all about Hetty. Both went away feeling that Rock Street church people were so cordial!

Of course many went by Hetty, but she succeeded in giving a friendly grasp to many who had never seen her before and introduced them here and there to the one next. Sometimes these introductions occurred between persons who had met the night before at a reception or banquet or had known each other always. It was a little amusing, but Hetty was innocent that she had disturbed the conventional! It was enough for her simple good will if they only seemed glad to meet. When the church was well emptied Hetty stood flushed for a moment, then slipped out like the modest little lass that she was.

That day at the dinner table Mr. Marvel said: "Wife, I guess your prophecy has come true. Why, somehow, people seemed to see each other a little to-day. I saw Mrs. Richman shake hands with a dozen, and the Amhersts told the usher to bring strangers to their pew. It must have been my rousing sermons."

"I never heard you preach better," said his wife. "I am sure it was!"

And so it was, but through a most unknown medium. Each Sabbath Hetty took her post. People began to look for the queer little woman with her short jacket surmounted by a rosy face. Triumph did not always perch on Hetty's banner. Sometimes her brave heart went down to her toes when the haughty Mrs. Highmind swept past her, almost over her, and looked with disdain upon the plump red hand held out in greeting, when just behind her followed Mrs. Proudfoot, who aped Mrs. Highmind—unless a greater magnet appeared; but when Mrs. Rockford, the wealthiest of "the four hundred" caught Hetty's hand, and putting her arm about her, kissed the sweet, plain face and called her "my dear," Mrs. Proudfoot wavered between the two magnets for a moment, then gave Hetty her cold finger tips and swept on, wondering what the great Mrs. Rockford found to admire in the queer little creature.

"A friendly little body, that red-haired girl is," said Deacon Burley, while General McMarch said, "Somehow people are so sociable in that church," and strangers declared it was the finest in the city as every one seemed glad to see everybody else. So Hetty's helpfulness began to make itself felt.

"Wife," said Mr. Marvel, one day, "we were both on the wrong track. It wasn't my sermons that brought about the change, but I have discovered that little Hetty Higden has organized a band of 'pastor helpers'; and every Sunday they take their places and greet everybody and introduce strangers. Wonderful, isn't it, how one little body could cause such a change!"

Rock street church was a success! Not that it had more money back of it to pay larger salaries or give to missions in greater sums; but that the men and women, whether in silk or cotton, came to know and trust one another. The church became a place where tired people went to rest and get refreshed spiritually and physically. Rock Street church was fulfilling its mission because one brave spirit dared to do what seemed right even though it was very unconventional.

THE MODIFIED GOTHENBURG SYSTEM AS TRIED IN NORWAY.

I.

BY REV. CARL F. ELTZHOLTZ.

Strong drink is raging. It is a mocker, a disturber. The governments of this world have in vain tried to control this monster evil. All these efforts have only been worthless and unavailing experiments. The liquor traffic is uncontrollable. It can be successfully prohibited, but regulated or controlled in a decent manner—never. The proud statesmen of this and former generations, who have enacted laws to regulate the drink traffic, have again and again been defeated. They have been mocked by strong drink in their efforts to control it, and yet it seems as if they have been very slow to learn wisdom from their many mortifying failures in this respect.

The law-makers in this and other countries have (with a few honorable exceptions) only been enabled to invent one method of handling the drink traffic and that is one or the other of the many shades of the license system. The statesmanship of this nineteenth century has seldom been enabled to soar higher than to a high license. The persons who hold license seem also to control many of the law-makers, and it is therefore no wonder that they are not permitted to mount much higher than to a system of high license.

Sweden is making its best out of its Gothenburg system. Norway is also experimenting with the same system in a modified form; even the unpopular English House of Lords had in March (1893) a bill presented to it by the Bishop of Chester, recommending "that legal facilities should be given for the legal adoption of the Gothenburg and Mr. Chamberlain's schemes, or some modification of them." In South Carolina the Dispensary Law has had its short day of existence. Iowa is groaning under its monstrous Mulct Law. In Massachusetts, the Norwegian system is under serious consideration, etc.

What is this Norwegian system? It is only a modification of the well-known Gothenburg system. As conflicting reports have been circulated concerning the success of this system, I shall endeavor to state the exact facts which I have received from the most reliable sources.

Norway has tried a modified form of the Gothenburg system for a number of years. If it, therefore, is a blessing for the government to be in partnership with the liquor traffic then old Norway ought to know. And perhaps no one in Norway would be better qualified to give this information than the Hon. Sven Aarrestad, president of the Norwegian Total Abstinence Society and a member of the Norwegian parliament (Storthinget) who has kindly furnished me with some interesting information from which part of the following facts are condensed:

When the modified Gothenburg system was first adopted in Norway, even temperance people looked upon it with favor, which was not to be wondered at, because the liquor traffic would, according to the laws of this system, no longer be in the hands of people who sold whisky for personal profit, and the surplus from the sale should not as formerly be used for selfish ends, but for the public good, so as to patch up some of the damage done by the drink traffic. Whisky should henceforth be sold only for cash, and in well-lighted and cozy apartments,—as vice loves darkness and hates light, this was thought to be a very good measure. And as the municipal authorities could have control over the managers of "Samlagene" (which I hereafter will call dispensaries) and prescribe rules for them—when to open and close, how to conduct the business, etc., it seemed to many good persons, who earnestly desired to have the country delivered from the curse of the degrading drink traffic, that this measure was quite a forward step, and a great improvement. In the beginning (and before the people were really acquainted with the effect of this system) it was not an uncommon occurrence that earnest temperance people bought shares in the dispensaries, and in some places they even had temperance men to manage the business.

So it was to begin with; but at the present time, when the fruits of this system have become well known in Norway the temperance people can no longer regard these government dispensaries as allies in their great combat with the drink evil, but rather as one of the most formidable obstacles in their way to success.

When, therefore, Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor, in his report prepared by Dr. Gould, of Johns Hopkins University, which was issued in 1893, states that the attitude of even the most advanced teetotalers is one of cordial approval of the system as a provisional method, leading, as they hope, to ultimate prohibition, he must be misinformed, and those who accept his statement are thereby misled. If the Commissioner of Labor had said that the attitude of the teetotalers was one of cordial approval for a time after the new system had been introduced, until they detected the cloven-footed demon of strong drink to peep through the whole system, then he would have given a true statement of the circumstances as they are. But as it is that statement is worse than worthless.

In an article published in Menneskevennen, the organ of the Norwegian Total Abstinence society, which is criticising the above ungarded statement, it is said: "When Mr. Gould proclaims to the American authorities, that we total abstainers believe that the dispensaries are leading us to ultimate prohibition, he is publishing a doctrine that is entirely new to us. We dare to say that if he would ask every one of the one hundred thirty thousand or one hundred fifty thousand total abstainers (in Norway) they would all answer: 'No, the dispensaries are not leading us to prohibition, they lead us farther away from it, and into the abominations of drunkenness.' And many others would declare the same. Of all the foolish things which foreigners say about our circumstances this seems to be the most absurd of all. We should desire to know what Norwegian could have given him such information as that because there is no foundation for such a statement whatever. That statement is absolutely incorrect."

A distiller in Denmark said some years ago in the city council of Odense, that they had prohibited some of the saloons in the city, and when the laws of the country permitted it he would be in favor of another step forward—especially the adoption of the Gothenburg system. Now, if the distillers want the Gothenburg system we don't want it; if it is a gain to them it is detrimental to the country and a curse to society. We have therefore no use for the Gothenburg system.

When Mr. Wright, the Commissioner of Labor, declares that the administration of the company monopoly has lessened the temptation to drink, his statement must be accepted with considerable reservation. In answering this assertion the Menneskevennen remarks: "Those that are acquainted with the circumstances will know that the dispensaries in Bergen, as well as in Christiania, are located in very conspicuous places where they are most likely to attract attention, near open squares, or on street corners. The dispensaries in Bergen have audaciously advertised their products in a most ostentatious manner. And when they have been compelled to close an hour earlier than usual they have advertised it with bold type in all the papers. This is a strange way of lessening the temptation to drink."

I take the following from the Temperance Record, London, organ of the National Temperance League of England: "It has often been said that the Gothenburg system, as modified in Norway, has reduced to a minimum the interest of individuals or public bodies in the profits from the sale of drink, and so has worked a great reform in the habits of the people without corrupting the motives of local authorities. The foreign office (England) has just issued a report from Consul-General Michell on this subject, as conclusive as it is interesting. The report answers this contention decisively in the negative, and would seem to sweep away many of the arguments of the Bishop of Chester and his friends: 'The associations (dispensaries) for the sale of spirits legalized under the Norwegian Act of 1871 are a success in that they have spread all over the country, three small towns alone excepted; they sell nearly half the liquor; their profits have increased from £43,875 in 1881 to £104,409 (or about $522,045), and their shares would rise to a high premium but for the right of the municipalities to buy them up at par. As an indirect relief to local burdens they are so popular that an effort is now being made to elbow out all individual license holders and give the associations a monopoly. . . At Christiania a couple of months ago the local association (dispensary) succeeded in obtaining permission to purchase premises in a quarter of the town in which a couple of large breweries, one of the principal iron and mechanical works and some other industrial establishments are concentrated. The premises were being hastily converted into an attractive "gin palace" when the owner of the iron works (an alien) protested and brought before the 'plenum' of the municipality the fact that the license had been procured by the suppression of the strong objections formally recorded against such a temptation to the large number of workmen in the vicinity, and many workmen joined in the protest. The municipality was thereupon compelled to revoke the license, and the association (dispensary) has been driven to set up its shop in a street where fewer drams are likely to be called for. The association has a shop close to the railway station, with the result of the trains being crowded with drunken men."

These statements go far to prove that the dispensary under the Gothenburg system often is as great a temptation to the poor victims of strong drink as any full-fledged high license saloon in this country.

ANSWER TO DR. LYMAN ABBOTT.

III.

BY KATE C. BUSHNELL, M. D.

(Concluded.)

It seems to me if man can see an inviting "promised land" in wifely submission, yet there remains no way of going up to possess the land except by way of the transgression of the Golden Rule. We are aware it is often said that woman's love is different in quality from man's; that when she loves she desires to be submissive. I know a thousand wives in Christendom who are starving for the same kind of love they could give, and there are tens of thousands more in the world to whom the kind of sentiment that has "final authority" back of it is the return of a stone for bread. Masterfulness between equals starves love, while mutual submission feeds it. In verse 25 the admonition, "love your wives," is emphasized by the thought, just as Christ "gave himself" for the church. This is the token of love; it is also the language of submission, if any phrase could be made to convey the thought of submission. (Phil. 2:8.) I agree with Dr. Abbott that there is a "submission of love," and where love exists the spirit of submission, of "in honor preferring one another," will show itself as surely in the husband as in the wife. God, who makes man and woman one in every true marriage, is the only "final authority" needed. Women friends and men friends can live peaceably together without constituting one the "final authority" over the other. Men can enter into business partnership and settle large business interests without one partner being "final authority" to the other. There is at present a vast amount of domestic quarreling. I wonder how much of the trouble would settle itself if God and not man were set up in Christian households as the "final authority"?

Now as to the meaning of this passage of Scripture as a whole: In verse 21 all are exhorted to submit themselves one to another; then wives who have husbands disposed to govern them are exhorted to submit in the spirit of the meaning of the phrase "as unto the Lord," that is, because the Lord says, "resist not evil," not because the husband takes the place of the Lord in her heart in a Christian marriage; but he literally does in a heathen marriage. (II. Thess. 2:4.) It was needless for Paul to have added, "husbands submit yourselves to your wives"; heathen wives do not make their husbands their slaves. Paul is addressing men and women recently converted from heathenism. Then follows the statement that Christ is the savior of the church and this figure of Christ's relation to the church is used to illustrate a profound and painful fact, namely, the husband is the savior of the wife's body (verse 23). Every Christian woman knows how true this is. For the wife cannot—simply cannot—work out the redemption of her body from the degradation of sin unless the husband wills it. Yet the end of Christian living is to present, not only the soul but the body without spot or wrinkle or any such thing (verse 27) to Christ. Now unless the husband will subdue his own flesh, the wife is dragged down by his lawlessness; and however pure her soul may be and sinless in the sight of God, bodily degradation remains. The husband is thus most literally the savior of her body—not her soul.

Verse 24 reads in the English: "Let the wives be subject to their own husbands," but all the words that put an imperative force into the passage are supplied by the English translators. Now if a portion of Scripture makes perfect sense without the insertion of words by a translator, certainly no one is in duty bound to accept the added words which alter the sense, unless convinced that the thought in the mind of the translator is more in accord with the teaching of the gospel and what was really meant. Now, leaving out that which has been supplied in the English, and translating the original, we have, "But as the church is subject to Christ, thus also are the wives to their husbands in everything," i. e. in everything that relates to the saving of the body (verse 23).

The verse read thus, simply implies a self-evident truth, i. e., that it is as impossible for the married woman to raise her own body out of degradation without the husband's coöperation, as it is for the church to raise itself without Christ's help. Therefore, I do not hesitate to say that I prefer the teaching of the verse as it stands in the original to the teaching of the English translators.

Now as to verse 33: In the last clause, "and the wife see that she reverence her husband," a word is again supplied by the English translators to give it the force of an imperative, when the sense is complete without the addition. Dropping out the supplied word we read in perfectly simple Greek without the supply of a missing link: "Nevertheless let every one of you in particular so love his wife even ashimself, moreover so that the wife may reverence her husband." When a man so loves his wife as himself, it makes reverence on her part easily attainable, and I believe this is the thought Paul wishes to express; reverence is the resultant of such love. But the assumption of authority tends to provoke strife and resentment on the part of the subjected one, and strife and resentment destroy reverence. The degradation of a pure wife's body tends to provoke disgust on her part. But if a husband will love his wife as himself, and nourish and cherish her health and freedom from physical ills, as of as much consequence as his own health and physical comfort, the wife of such a husband will find reverence for him to be almost spontaneous in growth.

Dr. Abbott says: "No woman should marry unless she can reverence as well as love her husband." As well say no woman can be a missionary unless she can talk Chinese before she learns it. No wife can possibly tell whether she can reverence her husband until after she has married him. To reverence him as a lover is one thing, to reverence him as a husband depends to a large degree upon his conduct after, not before, marriage.

Shanghai, China.

THE INTERNATIONAL TEMPERANCE CONGRESS.

EVENING SESSION, JUNE 4.—(Concluded.)

Long did the cheers last that greeted Governor Tillman at his appearance on the platform. Whatever may be said of the governor he certainly has the courage of his convictions. The set, resolute face, dogged in its expression, bespoke a relationship to the old Scotchman whom "all the world could not turn."

The governor began by saying that he had heard a good deal about "sand" and "backbone" at the congress, and that people had said that he was not without those qualities. He was going to show that evening that he dared to advance his convictions in the face of any audience; he was going to antagonize the dearest principles of Prohibitionists and it took a good deal of backbone to do that.

"Prohibition does not prohibit, cannot prohibit and will never prohibit," shouted the governor, but in South Carolina they had a plan that wiped out the saloons. He then exhibited a South Carolina whisky bottle, with the insignia of the Palmetto state on one side, a label on the other, and properly sealed with the official seal of the state. Unfortunately for the governor, the electric lights had gone out during Colonel Bacon's financial expedition into the pockets of the audience, and the semi-light shed by the hastily provided lanterns failed to bring out the good qualities of the exhibit in sufficient degree to convince the total abstainers that its sale by the state was any great improvement upon what the governor had characterized as "the curse of this age"—the saloon. And it is very doubtful if the full glare of the midday sun would have enabled them to comprehend the speaker's statement, that no one got drunk on dispensary whisky; that what the whisky people got drunk on was the "Blind Tiger" whisky, hid in holes in the ground or in the boot-legs.

Governor Tillman averred that he was one of the practical temperance men that did not drink. He took a social glass, but did not like the stuff and had not in all his life drank five gallons of whisky, all told!

The state had received a net profit of about one hundred thousand dollars from the business while in operation and drunkenness was reduced about one-half after the law went into effect.

The governor said that prohibition would never be established by votes.

"Give us a chance," some one shouted back.

"You are not ready to remove the government tax on whisky."

"Yes, we are!" came from all sides of the house.

"Then," was the governor's retort, "you are blinder than I thought you were."

He believed in "making the business responsible." "You cannot do it," came back from the audience.

"If you cannot get prohibition will you take the dispensaries?" Cries of both "yes" and "no."

There were, however, several points on which the Prohibitionists and the dispensary champion agreed, and whenever such a point was made they improved the opportunity by loudly applauding him. He said, for instance, that he was opposed to license, high or low, and that we "must stop the muddy fountain head at Washington," legislators "bought and bossed and appointed by the whisky ring."

At last the governor asked: "Shall we have dispensaries or prohibition?"

"Prohibition!" rolled in a mighty wave of sound towards the platform.

"If we cannot get it we will take the other," he asserted.

"No!" was the protest of the audience.

"How many will take dispensaries if they cannot get prohibition?" was his last question. Confused by the tumult, a number stood up.

"Ah! I got you," was the governor's parting shot as he left the platform, and a New York paper took occasion to say the next morning that "Governor Tillman captured the audience."

MORNING SESSION, JUNE 5.

Mrs. Ellen J. Phinney presided over this session. The first subject to be considered was "Preventive measures—te-to-tums—coffee houses, etc." A paper on that subject was read by Joshua L. Bailey, of Philadelphia, and contained too many practical and helpful thoughts to be passed in silence. We cull a few hints and pass them on to those who did not have the privilege of attending the congress.

Four conditions are indispensable in establishing a coffee house:

1. Location. It must be located upon one of the chief business thoroughfares. If we want to catch the fish we must go where the fish are.

2. The liquor saloon is made attractive. The coffee house must not be behind in that respect.

3. The coffee, as well as every other article offered for sale, should be of the best quality, prepared in the most skillful manner.

4. The price should not be higher than will cover the actual cost of serving.

As results of the establishment of coffee houses in Philadelphia, Mr. Bailey said that they must not be computed in dollars and cents—it must be counted another way. For instance:

The saloons in the neighborhood of the Fourth Street house had "folded their tents like the Arabs, and silently stolen away."

In regard to failures in the establishment of coffee houses Mr. Bailey mentioned two instances:

A number of ladies organized to start a coffee house. They started it in the outskirts of the town, where rent was cheap. They had all the machinery, but they had gone where there were no fish and, of course, they caught none.

A Y. M. C. A. in a large city raised four thousand dollars for the purpose, and with a fine equipment started a coffee house in an unexceptionable location. They hung out their sign: "Y. M. C. A. Coffee House," and appointed a committee to invite their expected patrons to their prayer-meetings, but no patrons came. The members of that association had failed to avail themselves of the Scriptural lesson: "In vain is the net set in the sight of any bird."

The following cablegram was received and read:

Read I Chronicles 19:31. Total abstinence. Total prohibition. Home protection. God bless Neal Dow.

(Signed) FRANCES E. WILLARD.

The second subject was, "Liquor statistics of a city parish."

Mr. Robert Graham, of New York, who said he was not a Prohibitionist and did not think he would ever become one, gave an address on the subject. He proposed two schemes for dealing with the liquor traffic. The first was, the old yet ever new plan, one saloon to every 1,000 of the population and the license $1,000. In this scheme he seemed to have one man in the audience with him. At least somebody said, "That's it!" The second scheme was the Gothenburg system.

Another telegram was received during this session. It read as follows:

Dominion W. C. T. U. of Canada in session assembled sends fraternal greeting. Psalm 31:23, 24.

(Signed) J. TILLEY, Sec.

Gen. Walter S. Payne, of Ohio, spoke next and dwelt upon the importance of getting together, for divided we can accomplish nothing. He recommended the establishment of an Advisory Board.

Col. Eli F. Ritter, of Indianapolis, was the next speaker. The title of his subject is in itself a resumé of the contents of his paper: "The Indiana Supreme Court decision that the saloon is liable for the damage it inflicts upon neighboring property; the scope of this decision and its applicability in other states." In closing Colonel Ritter said: "If the intelligent and civilized sentiments of this nation will unite and stand together so as to be counted against this universal public enemy, there will not be a licensed saloon with open doors in Indiana in two years, I pledge you, and I do not believe one in the United States."

"Three cheers for Colonel Ritter and his cause," were given with a will as well as the Chautauqua salute.

The motion to amend the address to the people of the United States and Canada in regard to the expression "saloon" was carried and the address as amended adopted by the congress.

The report of "the committee on the advantages and the practicability of the establishment of a National Advisory Board" was now read. As the establishment of such a board was the principal reason for convening the congress, the report is too important to be given fragmentary. Here it is in full:

"That the national temperance organizations in the United States and the Dominion of Canada may be brought in their respective countries into closer union, is hereby provided that the head officer or the chief secretary or scribe (unless two other persons are properly chosen) of each National temperance organization that believes in total abstinence for the individual and the suppression of the saloon, and in legislative enactment against the liquor traffic for beverage purposes, be constituted a National Temperance Advisory Board, whose function shall be,

"1. To labor for unity of action when and where, in their judgment, united effort will best further any object common to this national organization.

"2. That they advise the different organizations, national, state or other division, as may from time to time seem to them to be wise, in the struggle against the alcoholic evil; as, for example, in respect to the application to different states of the principle involved in the recent anti-nuisance decision of the Supreme Court of Indiana, or in respect to the compulsory teaching of temperance hygiene in the public schools.

"3. That they take such steps as may be necessary to help on agitation and education against the liquor traffic and in favor of total abstinence on the lines that may be agreed upon by all, as, through pulpit, platform and press, the systematic distribution of educative literature, etc., etc.

"4. To speak for the united temperance forces as a whole, as the presentation of a petition to congress for the passage of what is known as the Inquiry Bill.

"It is always to be understood that the function of this board is wholly advisory in all its relations to the national organizations which it represents.

"It is also hereby provided that a board be similarly constituted for the Dominion of Canada."

The committee was composed of the following well-known persons: I. K. Funk, D. D., New York; Mrs. E. J. Gray, Ohio; Gen. Thomas E. James, New York; Samuel W. Packard, Chicago; J. H. Southgate, North Carolina; Walter S. Payne, Ohio; Louis Albert Banks, D. D., Brooklyn; Volney B. Cushing, Maine; A. J. Kynett, D. D., Philadelphia.

After an eloquent plea by J. H. Southgate, of North Carolina, the adoption of the report was carried unanimously.

AFTERNOON SESSION—JUNE 5.

Chairman of this session was Aaron M. Powell, editor of the National Temperance Advocate.

Prayer was offered by Mr. Dixon, of Brooklyn, after which Mrs. Higgins, president Colorado W. C. T. U., spoke. "It is asked," said Mrs. Higgins, "will the women vote when they get the ballot? Yes. At the spring elections the Colorado women voted almost to a woman, and in eight towns they elected no-license officials. Perhaps the only irregularity in regard to the female vote was the forgetfulness of a woman on the ticket as candidate for alderman. On the day of election she forgot all about it, and went to the poll and voted for her opponent!" Mrs. Higgins believed that next November the women of Colorado will present a solid phalanx against the saloon. Colorado believes the time has come for prohibition.

Speaking of Governor Waite, Mrs. Higgins said that though he had been ridiculed she wished there were more such "crazy" men as he. He is honest and true and cannot be bought, and he is a true friend of woman's cause.

Judge Pierce, of Missouri, spoke next as representative of the National Keeley League. In view of the fact that there are to-day 160,000 men in the United States who have been treated by Dr. Keeley, he was surprised and disappointed that nothing had been said about this branch of the temperance work in the congress.

"What legislative enactments against the liquor traffic are most effective," now came up for discussion. The first speaker on that subject was Dr. A. A. Miner, of Boston.

"Massachusetts," said the venerable doctor, "has reaped some good from local option in the smaller towns, but at the same time drunkenness has increased in the state." Referring to the proposed introduction of the Gothenburg system, he said that system was the most dangerous buttress the saloon had.

The newspapers did not tell the truth in regard to the drink question. "They are in league with iniquity, and they are paid for it," exclaimed the doctor, and leaning over the edge of the platform, and looking right at the reporters he twice repeated the charge. (Of course the representatives of THE UNION SIGNAL, the Voice and the Lever had the satisfaction of feeling that they stood outside the league).

The speaker was loudly applauded when he said we must have prohibition, and observed that he guessed Governor Tillman did not "capture the audience" the previous night. To find out for a certainty he requested those who favored prohibition in opposition to the dispensary law to stand, and to all appearance all present stood up, with the exception of four that rose when he asked how many preferred the dispensary. This test may be taken as a refutation of the statement by the New York daily about the "capture" previously referred to.

The next speech was by Wm. H. Armstrong, Most Worthy Associate of the Sons of Temperance of North America. He said the most effective enactment against the liquor traffic was a prohibitory law based upon constitutional prohibition.

Mrs. Fessenden spoke briefly on the Gothenburg system. She read a few extracts from the so-called "Gothenburg bill," now pending before the Massachusetts legislature, and gave as her opinion that if the investigation committee had seen the other side of the Gothenburg system while in Scandinavia a different report would have been given. "The intelligent people of Massachusetts," said Mrs. Fessenden, "will not adopt the system."

Dr. Dixon, of Brooklyn, next came to the front. "The only sovereign," said he, "that we have in this country is LAW, and we ought to have a good sovereign." He believed in theocracy. It was a country where God ruled. "When you bring about a true theocracy in which Jesus is king, the millennium is here. The law that ought to be made is, that no liquor shall be sold as a beverage, and that the man who transgresses it shall be sent to the penitentiary and the mayor and governor that do not keep their oath and enforce the law shall be impeached."

Dr. Boole now "cleared away some rubbish," and when he closed Mr. E. J. Wheeler, of the Voice, was loudly called for.

He said the most rum-ruled cities are those under high license. He did not believe in the Gothenburg system, but after Governor Tillman's statement of cool facts and figures, he was inclined to think the dispensary system a good substitute for license. He said in conclusion that prohibition was the only effective legislative enactment against the liquor traffic.

Mr. Hall, the national organizer of the Christian Endeavor society, declared himself an uncompromising foe to the liquor traffic, and a third party Prohibitionist, Mr. James, of Connecticut, spoke on the bringing up of the reserves, and Mrs. Ella A. Boole told in a two minutes' speech, which a gentleman afterwards declared the best he had ever heard, what the W. C. T. U. did to bring up those reserves.

EVENING SESSION, JUNE 5.

The last session of the congress was opened with prayer by Rev. Dr. Weaver, of London. Mr. Geo. F. Elliott, of Brooklyn, occupied the chair.

The following cablegram was read:

LONDON, ENG.

Heartiest wishes for Gen. Neal Dow and for your convention. SIR BENJAMIN WARD RICHARDSON.

Rev. J. C. Fernald spoke once more on the important subject of distribution of temperance literature, and asked all who were ready to distribute at least ten cents' worth of literature every three months to stand up. A large number arose, and they were requested to hand in their names and addresses. He also proposed the appointment of a committee invested with power to carry on the work for one year, as outlined in his paper.

Dr. Dixon, of Brooklyn, eloquent as always, spoke next. Prolonged cheers broke him off, and he finished his discourse later.

Joseph A. Bogardus recommended Rev. Mr. Fernald's plan for the distribution of literature, and proposed the following executive committee for the work:

Chairman, Rev. J. C. Fernald; associates, Dr. A. A. Miner, Boston; Hon. Henry B. Metcalf, Rhode Island; Mrs. Susan Fessenden, Massachusetts; Dr. A. C. Dixon, Brooklyn.

The proposition was put before the house and carried unanimously.

Mrs. Fessenden recommended the distribution of literature among the foreigners, and after that Prof. Samuel Dickie presented his paper on, "The Prohibition Party Movement."

Mr. Dickie was greeted with the Chautauqua salute, and it need hardly be said that his interesting paper was listened to most attentively.

After reviewing the movement and the causes that led up to it, he presented the cost of the liquor traffic, and made these claims concerning the aims and purposes of the Prohibition party:

1. It is a financial reform.

2. The Prohibition party proposes to purify our politics and emancipate our entire political system from the disgraceful and humiliating condition into which it has fallen.

3. The Prohibition party occupies a position in exact harmony with the utterances of our great ecclesiastical bodies.

"The most distressing thing in all this great battle against evil," said Mr. Dickie, "is the fact that so many of the prominent ministers in our various churches continue to train politically with the rumsellers. If the license voting ministers would come out openly in favor of the saloon, they would do the prohibition movement less harm than they are doing now.

"Prohibition must be settled before other reforms can receive attention. We insist that the Prohibition party washes its hands from the continuation of the liquor traffic."

A motion that thanks be extended to Dr. Funk for his labors in connection with the congress was carried unanimously.

After a few words from Mrs. Higgins, of Colorado, Mr. Chas. A. Cale, secretary of the College Prohibition Association, gave an account of that movement.

Mr. Cale said that a permanent association of prohibition college students was formed at the Cincinnati Prohibition convention in 1892 Organizers were put into the field and as a result the association can report a membership of four thousand. At the National convention at Harvey, Ill., in June last year, delegates were present from sixteen states. One thousand two hundred and seventy-nine dollars and ninety-five cents had been raised during the year. This year's reports show that counting all the students, male and female, in the fourteen colleges reported up to date, sixteen per cent are Prohibitionists; twenty-two per cent in the eight institutions which report female prohibition students are Prohibitionists.

"The outlook," said Mr. Cale, "justified the existence of the association," and the applause of the audience showed that the veterans thought that the "reserves" were beginning to come to the front.

A collection amounting to sixty-three dollars and seventy cents was taken up for the campaign in Colorado, and after a short speech by Mr. Atkins, of South Carolina, the doxology and the benediction, the first International Temperance Congress stood adjourned.

CORRESPONDENCE

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I feel sure you will like to have, and I therefore hasten to send you, some account of what is probably Miss Willard's closing meeting in the United Kingdom during her present visit. It was held on May 23, at Dublin, the capital of Ireland, where keen anticipation on the part of very many people had long-awaited the advent of Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset—the more so as a previously intended visit to the Emerald Isle was prevented being paid. However, delay in no way damped the enthusiasm of the Hibernians; rather, the world-wide reputation of the two leaders but served to increase the desire to see and hear them.

The meeting, held in the historic Leinster Hall, was, in many senses, an imposing demonstration. In the first place, probably no temperance meeting in Ireland has ever assumed such magnitude of numbers since the days of Father Mathew; then few, if any, such meetings have displayed in their component parts such wide catholicity; and certainly it falls to the lot of few temperance audiences to listen to speeches of such tone and quality as those this meeting heard.

Of the gathering itself, one of the leading Dublin daily papers says that "not since the Father Mathew Centenary, and not for many, many years before that, has there been gathered together in Dublin an assembly of people so vast, so divided in thought on many vital subjects, but yet entirely unanimous upon the question which engaged their attention." The platform contained men and women of every shade of political and religious thought, and the meeting itself displayed the same characteristics, and showed such enthusiasm as is generally reserved for the advent of great party leaders among ardent admirers. The vast hall, densely packed by probably six thousand people, presented an animated and inspiring spectacle, and the effect was heightened by elaborate and tasteful decorations, drapery, plants and flowers, very gracefully arranged. The interval before the proceedings proper began, was filled, to the delight of the audience, by a select program of glees and choruses, admirably rendered by a choir of two hundred and fifty voices. The pent up enthusiasm found ample vent when the speakers of the evening entered, accompanied by a number of prominent temperance men—some of whom date back their connection with the movement to the days of the Irish apostle of temperance himself.

The chairman, Mr. J. R. Wigham, J. P., bears a name which is highly honored in Ireland, and not alone in the temperance world. He is chairman of the Dublin Chamber of Commerce, a merchant prince, and one of the few men who has refused the proffered honor of a baronetcy at the hands of the Queen. His warm words of cordial welcome to the ladies they had met to hear found an echo in the acclamations of the multitude. Then in brief, but telling speeches, a resolution was made giving Lady Henry and Miss Willard a hearty welcome to Ireland, expressing a grateful sense of their services to the temperance cause in many lands, and an earnest hope that health and strength may be given them "so that the great work they have already done may be continued, and, through the blessing of Almighty God, they may be permitted to see a large result from their labors in the increased happiness of mankind." This was proposed by a scientific professor, seconded by a Catholic ecclesiastic, and supported by a Protestant temperance reformer, Mr. Henry Wigham, brother of the chairman, who is the acknowledged leader of the Irish temperance forces. It was passed with real Irish warmth of feeling.

Lady Henry Somerset's speech roused the expectant throng to a high pitch. It is described in one paper as being "as different from the usual temperance lecture as chalk is from cheese"; the form of her oratory being "perfect in style, the sentences rounded, gracefully rhetorical and abounding in poetic sentiment." Many of your readers will recognize the accuracy of this description. She spoke out strongly for the local veto—a timely utterance in present circumstances—since though the Veto Bill does not include Ireland, Irish votes are essential to its passage. She drew a vivid picture of the progress of women's work for temperance reform, and appealed in most eloquent periods to all that is best in the Irishry by her reminiscences of O'Connell and of Mathew, whose statues in Dublin streets had inspired some of her finest passages, and finally she urged the women of Ireland to band themselves together that Ireland might be freed from the misery and wretchedness which oppressed so many.

Miss Willard was received with equal cordiality, and put herself on good terms with the people at once by addressing them as "brothers and sisters of a common hope and a common sorrow."

The speech need not be reported. It was full of characteristic touches, of humor, of reminiscence, of shrewd application, and will have its fitting result when the "something" of which Miss Willard spoke shall have "come of it" in Ireland as elsewhere. The speeches befitted the occasion, and it was great.

A further resolution commending the address to the earnest consideration of "all to whom the welfare of Ireland is dear" was spoken to and passed, and the meeting ended with votes of thanks and added song.

The next day a most successful conference of women, with a view to future organization, was held, and Lady Henry and Miss Willard also attended as guests a reception given by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress of Dublin.

The public demonstrations for temperance in Great Britain have filled Miss Willard with admiration. She says they far exceed both in numbers, impressiveness, and effect anything she ever saw in her own country, and has noted that while it is usually very difficult to get a single inch of space for temperance matters in the London daily papers, these great meetings are generally reported to the length of a column or more.

Of our Local Option bill Miss Willard, in a recent interview, confided to me her views. She does not think it ideal, but as Sir Wilfrid Lawson, after thirty years in Parliament, thinks it the best that can be got now, English leaders have combined to support it. It provides the possibility of local prohibition pure and simple, and differs from American local option measures because of the inclusion of women municipal voters—a large class—whose influence for temperance is feared by the drink sellers. For these reasons Miss Willard, who is "a prohibitionist first, last and all the time," has felt that it was "loyal and true" to support this bill.

"Neal Dow's Day," Miss Willard speaks of as a tremendous success. She exclaimed: "The commemoration of a foreign leader has never before packed Exeter Hall"; but I had to remind her that her coming had done so, and her going even more so, venturing the prophesy that "so it would again," given the chance.

After an absence of a year and three-quarters, Miss Willard is naturally looking eagerly toward home, though she leaves here many friends. It is satisfactory that she feels very much stronger than when she came, though she fears her "staying qualities on the track of reform" are not and may not be what they once were. Sir Benjamin Richardson has warned her against too constant application. HENRY J. OSBORN.

THE TEMPERANCE CONGRESS AT CALIFORNIA FAIR.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The recent Temperance Congress in San Francisco had wonderfully interesting sessions for five days, but I can give you only large extracts from one of the many fine papers presented. I wish you had space for every word of the entire address.

Judging from the attendance, temperance people are not in the majority as to numbers, but in quality of mind and spirit they are a host and bent on doing something that shall tell against the forces of King Alcohol. Mrs. S. M. M. Woodman's paper was entitled "Nail Driving," as follows:

"Nail driving is but a synonym for building. In nail driving three things are to be considered—the quality of the lumber used, the kinds of nails and the skill of the workman. A small deficiency in either of these will render the structure imperfect. One person hits the nail a telling first blow sidewise and sends it flying through the air; another drives it into the wood but the angle spoils the job, while another, with fine judgment, practical sense, steady nerve, keen eye and rare energy hits the nail squarely on the head and the work is complete. It has been said that 'man is not a circle with a single center, but an ellipse with two faci, ideas are one, facts the other.' The idea of the nail is a good one, but unless it is also a fact, driven straight and true, the idea fails. This is as true of nations as of individuals." After giving a sketch of some of the nail drivers of Greece and of Rome and England, the speaker said: "George III., unmindful of Pitt's warning, used great spikes where smaller nails were needed and lost his colonies. Gladstone, the grand old man, after many years of fearless nail driving, has but just laid down his liberty hammer. In our own land over a century ago, James Otis, in Massachusetts, and Patrick Henry, in Virginia, were making telling strokes for liberty; but when the bells rang out on July 4, 1776, telling thousands of anxious hearts that the foundation was begun on which the great superstructure of liberty would be reared, two weak planks were used at the very outset and the building was thereby rendered unsafe, even tottering at times. Upon this program of political principles, 'all men are endowed with certain inalienable rights, such as life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.' A gruesome shadow fell when every colony held slaves and the North stole men in Africa to sell them in Carolina. This was one rotten plank. Jefferson tried to put in a new timber and nail it firmly, but others said: 'It will stand as it is.' As the years went by and the very life of the nation seemed threatened, Parker and Phillips and Stowe uttered warning words thrilling with prophetic wisdom, but not until Abraham Lincoln was the worm eaten timber pulled out. Now behold a people who have 'triumphed over theocracy, monarchy, aristocracy,' and have become hemi-democracy! A government by half the people.

"Setting aside all claims of justice and looking at it as a mere matter of expediency, let us note a few facts. Suppose woman had a share in the municipal regulations of our cities. Do you believe there would be 5,000 licensed saloons to every 250,000 inhabitants, as there are now in many great centers? Do you believe that two-thirds of the applicants for admission to West Point and Annapolis would be rejected on account of the cigarette habit, if the mothers were equal law-makers with the fathers? Do you believe the drink bill of the United States in 1892 would have been one and one-fourth billion dollars if woman had been consulted in the law-making business? Government is political economy, national housekeeping; it is also morality and national ethics. 'For the higher development of the human race,' says an eminent writer, 'we need the harmonious action of man and woman, and they are equally needed in the family, in the church, in the state.' What is a home without a wife, a mother or a sister? It is no home at all but only a shelter, a place to stay. What is society without the refining influence of woman? It is pandemonium. The history of many sections of our own state in the early fifties fitly answers the question. What would a church be without woman? I cannot say what is a church without woman, for none exists in Christendom. What is the state without woman? It is like a home with only a father, a society with only men, a church with only brethren in the pews. It is a divided body that God made one.

"Give woman a chance to help in this national housekeeping, and as the home is made more pure and attractive by her instincts for house-cleaning so will the state become swept and garnished by her love of cleanliness and purity. Our commonwealth needs the labor of all her adult population. There are heavy blows which require the sturdy strokes of man. There are other blows which only a woman's hand impelled by her throbbing heart can give. Whose hand is so fitted for giving true and steady blows for the protection of her children as a mother's? If the home is safe the state is safe. In the present condition of things woman can build but narrow bounds for the family,—only large enough and strong enough to protect them in infancy.

"What is needed? The ballot in the hands of those fitted by birth and education to use it intelligently, and without regard to sex. With this strong hammer of power intelligently used, the banner of Prohibition may be nailed over our national capitol, and its white folds shall spread, like an angel of light, over the length and breadth of our land. Then shall peace and prosperity reign within our borders. No more cry of "hard times." No more strikes and dynamite bombs shall destroy life and property. No more "Industrial Armies" shall be hurried tremblingly from state to state and knock demandingly at the doors of our national capitol. No more pinching poverty or grinding greed. No more mourning over homes destroyed, sons ruined and daughters ravished, for the inciter and feeder of lust will be dead.

"This is not a wild, elysian dream. It is practical common sense. In Iceland woman has equal position with man in affairs of government, and to-day, Iceland with her seventy-three thousand people has not a pauper, not a prison, not a jail, not a policeman and not a person old enough who cannot read. In the United States there are thirty-six thousand more saloons than public schools. In New York alone there are one hundred and fifty thousand voters whose ballot is controlled by the liquor interest. As New York elections do more to shape the results in our national elections than those of any other state, it is easily seen that saloons control the nation.

"What can be done? Take out that rotten plank in our national Constitution,—we have found it now; it is that word male. Let each state follow the example. Let there be no male, no female in this battle for the protection of our boys and girls, but let father and mother, husband and wife, brother and sister march shoulder to shoulder, armed with the ballot of power and of victory, and win at once by one sweeping stroke this long-fought battle for 'God, Home and Humanity.'" CHARLOTTE I. COLBY.

A THRILLING SCENE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The first commencement of the American Temperance University has been held, closing last week with the graduation of ten students, equally divided between the sexes, upon whom were conferred the usual graduation degrees. The occasion was greatly enjoyed by the people of Harriman and many visitors from abroad, who thronged the W. C. T. U. temple, used as the public chapel of the university. The weather was royal, the exercises were of a high order and the enthusiasm increased from hour to hour until the close.

On Sunday all the churches united in union service, and an immense congregation listened to the first annual sermon by Rev. C. H. Mead, D.D., of New York, which made a profound impression. Rev. Dr. T. C. Carter followed in the afternoon with a memorial sermon before the G. A. R., of which organization Chancellor J. F. Spence, D.D., is chaplain for the department of Tennessee; and this service was attended by the Harriman Post and Sons of Veterans in a body, and was of a highly patriotic, religious and educational character. The baccalaureate sermon at night, by Chancellor Spence, admirably closed perhaps the most memorable Sunday in Harriman.

Tuesday was Temperance and Educational Field Day, with addresses morning, afternoon and evening, by Dr. Mead, Dr. Carter and others, closing at night with a powerful address on prohibition, by Dr. Mead, before an audience that filled the temple to its utmost.

On Wednesday came the graduating orations in the forenoon, interspersed with a fine program of music rendered by the Harriman Choral Society, a splendid band of singers under the leadership of Professor Thorndyke (formerly recognized as one of the finest singers and conductors in Boston). The address, by Chancellor Spence, to the graduating class, was one of the most finished and effective of the kind ever enjoyed. On Wednesday afternoon, as a popular and patriotic closing to these distinctively educational exercises, came a Union Memorial Service, preceded by a public procession to the temple of Union veterans and ex-Confederates, with the University cadets and the University band, all under command of Col. Wilbur Colvin, commandant of the cadets, and one of the professors in the University. Arrived at the temple, an address of welcome was given by Capt. J. W. Ayers, commander of the G. A. R. Post, which was responded to by Dr. W. C. Grace, on behalf of the ex-Confederates, both addresses being in excellent spirit and taste. They were followed by a memorial address by Rev. Dr. Mead, in closing which he called to his side one of the captains of the cadet corps, son of a Confederate veteran, and one of the lieutenants from the same corps, son of a Union veteran, both wearing the same uniform, and both representing the young manhood of to-day, which knows not the war of a generation gone by, but has its face set toward the sunrise; and then with an eloquent appeal to young and old, and especially to the young manhood that must make or mar this country's future, Dr. Mead called on these two young men to join their hands in his, requesting the Union and Confederate veterans seated in front of him to rise with the University cadets, and all join hands, the Confederates with the Union veterans, and all to unite in a solemn vow of fraternity, while all the vast audience, catching the fraternal spirit of union, did likewise, and Dr. Mead, with his magnificent voice led off in singing, "America." It was a unique, a wonderful and a most thrilling scene, and old veterans, who had not shed tears for years past, broke down and sobbed like children.

And thus ended in a glow of patriotic impulse the first year of the American Temperance University, of whose later achievements great things are expected in many directions. The highest patriotism, the broadest culture and the noblest manhood, in the hope and faith of its friends are to be its liberal fruitage. HARRY MANN.

TIRED MOTHERS.

A little elbow leans upon your knee,
Your tired knee that has so much to bear;
A child's dear eyes are looking lovingly
From underneath a thatch of tangled hair.
Perhaps you do not heed the velvet touch
Of warm, moist fingers folding yours so tight;
You do not prize this blessing over much,
You almost are too tired to pray to-night.

But it is blessedness! A year ago
I did not see it as I do to-day;
We are so dull and thankless, and too slow
To catch the sunshine till it slips away.
And now it seems surpassing strange to me,
That while I wore the badge of motherhood,
I did not kiss more oft and tenderly,
The little child that brought me only good.

And if some night when you sit down to rest,
You miss this elbow from your tired knee—
This restless, curling head from off your breast,
This lisping tongue that chatters constantly—
If from your own the dimpled hands had slipped
And ne'er would nestle in your palm again;
If the white feet into the grave had tripped,
I could not blame you for your heartache then.

I wonder so that mothers ever fret
At little children clinging at their gown,
Or that the footprints, when the days are wet,
Are ever black enough to make them frown.
If I could find a little muddy boot,
Or cap or jacket on my chamber floor;
If I could kiss a rosy, restless foot,
And hear it patter in my house once more,

If I could mend a broken cart to-day,
To-morrow make a kite to reach the sky—
There is no woman in God's world could say
She was more blissfully content than I.
But, ah! the dainty pillow next my own
Is never rumpled by a shining head;
My singing birdling from its nest is flown:
The little boy I used to kiss is dead!

AN INUNDATION.

BY EMMA S. WISE.

The Ohio river was on its annual rampage. The rain had been falling steadily for a week or more; in the mountains where the river's headwaters had their source, the snow was melting rapidly and the signal service men predicted an inundation equal to that of '84.

Already the water had "backed up" Twelve Mile creek and had overflowed the lowlands lying between the hills and the bluff on the edge of the river.

The tall white willows that thickly bordered the banks of the smaller stream, reared their denuded heads above the muddy brown water like slender guide-posts outlining its original channel.

All the houses at Blair's landing, a half mile below the village proper, were well-nigh submerged; the brick yard had been closed down for the last two weeks, and one evening when the waves came creeping up to within six inches of the school-house door, the teacher announced that the educational department of New Palestine would have to do likewise.

"You had better not drink any more to-night, Joe," the postmaster said to the little hunchback who formed one of the party that crossed from the bluff to the foot of the hills in rowboats that night for their indispensable revel. "The river's a-comin' up like sixty. We'll all have to get out to-morrow, for ever' house in the place'll be half filled in twenty-four hours. Yours'll be the first to catch it, too, for it's low, down there on the Point. You'll need all your wits about you. I tell you it ain't no fool of a job to move all your belongings in a skift. I've tried it often enough to find that out."

Joe laughed. "I guess I know what I am doin', he answered. "I ain't lived in these bottoms for twenty years for nothin'. I'll take little Sis an' pull out for the hilltops the first thing in the mornin'. Don't ketch me takin' no chances, you'd better believe."

He meant to do so. He really did not intend to take another drink that night, nor any other night; he thought he had sworn off for good, and even when he got home and brought the black bottle from the cupboard, he told himself that it would be but one swallow to take off the chill that the trip across the lowlands had given him.

"Daddy's got to brace himself up for just this once, ain't he, little Sis?" he said, kissing the yellow-haired child of three that slept in her low bed in the corner. "He'll get out o' here to-morrow, an' he'll always be a man after this. Never steal, nor drink, nor nothin' any more."

He took his one swallow that called for another and then another; at last the flask was empty.

"Got to get out o' this to-morrow," he muttered, as he threw himself on the bed and waited for the morning to come.

His drunken stupor lasted for hours. Many times was it partially broken by blurred visions of his baby stretching out her little hands to him, and crying "Papa, papa," and each time he made maudlin attempts to answer her, but the power of the liquor was stronger than that of his will, and he slept on.

In his dreams he grew cold, very cold, and it seemed that he could hear the waves lapping slowly, regularly, up among the willows. At last, with a mighty effort, he sat upright. The river had, indeed, arisen; the bluff was submerged; the house was rapidly filling, and the bed itself was covered with water a half-inch deep or more.

He stared around him in bewilderment for a time, and then he thought of his child. "Daisy," he called, but she did not answer him. He leaned forward and looked for the low bed where the baby slept. There was nothing there but the muddy water, and on its surface a yellow curl.

The dreams of the outstretched hands and pleading voice still floated before his mind, and with a cry of terror he bounded out into the cold water and tried to snatch her to him.

He remembered then. Always before making his nightly visit to the postoffice, he would rock her to sleep and then, that she might not harm herself in any way, should she awaken, he would tie a cord round her waist and secure it to both sides of the bed. She had ever slept so until his return. The night before he had forgotten to loosen her bonds and the rising river had found her fastened there.

He reached down and broke the cord, and gathering her in his arms, he waded to the ladder that led to the loft and mounted it. All day long he sat there. His brain was benumbed, and the thought of trying to devise some means of escape never came to him. He only wanted to get beyond the reach of the water for the time with his dead child. By and by the light that came through the one attic window, began to fade away, and he knew that night was coming on. The last faint rays revealed some moving object oozing up through the cracks in the floor.

He stooped and felt of it. It was the water.

Early that morning the well-to-do dwellers on the hilltops had thrown open their homes to the deluged villagers, and by noon the one-story frame houses of the lower town were deserted.

It was night before they thought of Hunchback Joe. "I guess he's all right," said the postmaster. "He was fairly sober last night, and he said he was goin' to take his baby and pull out for the back country the first thing this morning. I expect he was the first to get away. Somebody ought to see to that man's child, though, when this flood excitement's over again. He thinks a heap of her, I suppose, and means to do the right thing by her, but he can't let liquor alone long enough to take decent care of her. She's a bonny little thing, too."

In spite of this reassuring account of Hunchback Joe's welfare, they could not dismiss him from their minds, and about eight o'clock three of the men took a rowboat and started toward his cabin.

Through the attic window, to whose ledge the water had crept, one of them thrust a lighted lantern. "Joe," he called, peering in, "are you here?"

Yes, Joe was there. In the highest part of the sloping room, he stood, holding his baby above the touch of the current that reached to his waist.

"I drowned 'er," he said, when the men had placed them in the boat and commenced to row back to the shore. "I guess I was drunk. I tied 'er in bed. She called, an' called, an' called—" He finished with a sob.

The men did not speak. The only sounds were the long, low, steady roar of the rising river and the plashing of the oars.

A Bad Place for Boys.

BY AMBER.

Often as I pass along the streets of this town I notice certain places which I do not burn down, nor tear down, nor otherwise demolish, merely because of inherent cowardice and inadequate strength. If I had a wide-awake, growing boy I would no more turn him loose in your town, Mr. Mayor, than I would cut his throat with my own hand. Not, certainly, if there was a spark of human nature within him, and a boy without such a spark is hardly worth raising. And more than that, I will say this, that what with your saloons and your wide-open gambling resorts and your doorways of hell, wherein sit spiders luring flies, it has come to pass that every mother whose boy encounters harm thereby should be entitled to damages at least as great as juries award a careless pedestrian who gets his legs cut off at a railway crossing. You say that laws are inadequate to cope with evils of this kind; if that is so, then an outraged citizenhood should rise superior to law and enter upon a crusade to destroy the infamous dens that decoy our boys. On a certain downtown street there is a newly-opened resort, the windows of which are closely draped, and before the door of which a placard is suspended which invites only men to enter within. Now and then a hideously ugly man, with a yellow beard, comes to the ticket window and looks out like a tarantula from its hole, but in the main the place seems absolutely unfrequented.

Take your stand and watch for awhile, though, and you will see young men and small boys, old men and slouching reprobates of all conditions and colors going in and coming out by dozens. Why doesn't some good citizen enter a complaint of that place and break it up? We would pounce upon a small-pox case soon enough wherever it might lurk, but we are strangely indifferent where the menace is only to the soul.

How can we expect to keep our boys pure, and raise them to lives of usefulness when such iniquitous places are run wide open on public streets at noonday, granting admission to all masculinity between the ages of seven and seventy?

A well guarded youth is supposed to be at home in the night time and not to be frequenting shy neighborhoods at any hour; so that we might feel comparatively safe about the boy we send out into the world at an early age, to begin his career as errand boy or messenger, if these pernicious decoys were maintained only at night and in low vicinities. When the trap is set, however, right in the business center of the town by daylight, what safety have we? Whenever I look into the face of an eager, bright, curious, thoroughly alive boy I feel like shaking every other duty of life and going forth to do battle with the devil for that lad's soul.

Why should evil have so much greater chance than good? For one reason I don't believe we make the good attractive enough. The devil has stolen the trademark of light for half his wares. Why not have more fun and frolic in the home and filter some of the world's innocent sunshine inside the Sunday-school walls? Why may not the eager, active heart of youth find its good cheer and jollity somewhere else than in forbidden places and among smooth and unscrupulous knaves? If we made our churches less austere, and their gatherings more alluring to the young, these low and vicious resorts might close for lack of patronage.

God bless the boys! I love them next best to girls and sometimes even a little better when they are especially frank and brave and true. I am not going to see them harmed without a protest, either, and I would be one of a crowd this very day to march upon the resorts of evil that lie in wait all over town to destroy the bonnie fellows. If I had my way every man or woman who makes money by pandering to the curiosity of a boy's nature, inciting to unworthy passion by means of lewd pictures and the like, should be consigned to instant perdition. The earth is too hallowed to receive their vile dust!—Chicago Herald.

IS STRENGTH UNWOMANLY?

BY MRS. FENWICK MILLER.

There is no doubt that women have a great deal more stamina and strength than we have been led to suppose. Indeed, the contrast is great between the girl of to-day and the old idea of a woman as a fragile, helpless creature; and the notion that once held ground that health, strength, a good appetite, and the capacity to bear fatigue were unwomanly, and amongst the many pleasant prerogatives of the other sex, has been more signally overthrown by the women of to-day than even the other ancient standing idea of their sex's hopeless intellectual inferiority. Good Dr. Gregory, in the last century, when he wrote a manual of "Advice to his Daughters" that was so much approved as to become a text-book of conduct for our great-grandmothers as girls, told them that they should carefully conceal the possession of good health, and never talk before men about their strength and capacity to bear fatigue, for if they were thought to be well and strong, "we recoil from them in a way they are little aware of." Dear me! how very silly those recoiling great-grandpapas of ours appear to us to-day! Our far more sensible young men have learned that good health and strength of physique amongst women mean good temper, good company, and a capacity to bear up the woman's end of the log of life without murmuring at the hardship, and without a final lapse into invalidism. So they do not recoil from the strong and healthy girl any more, and she, on her part, has taken full advantage of the change of sentiment, and has set herself successfully to prove that health and strength really mean increased refinement and grace, instead of a loss of those precious feminine attributes.

LOVELINESS.

"Beautiful thoughts make a beautiful soul, and a beautiful soul makes a beautiful face."

Once I knew a little girl,
Very plain;
You might try her hair to curl,
All in vain;
On her cheek no tints of rose
Paled and blushed or sought repose:
She was plain.

But the thoughts that through her brain
Came and went,
As a recompense for pain,
Angels sent:
So full of many a bounteous thing,
In her young soul blossoming
Gave content.

Every thought was full of grace,
Pure and true;
And in time the homely face
Lovelier grew;
With a heavenly radiance bright,
From the soul's reflected light
Shining through.

So I tell you, little child,
Plain or poor,
If your thoughts are undefiled,
You are sure
Of the loveliness of worth;
And this beauty, not of earth,
Will endure.

WEBS AND FLIES.

Whisky spiders, great and greedy,
Weave their webs from sea to sea;
They grow fat and men grow needy—
Shall our robbers rulers be?

"Sweep the webs away!" the nation,
In its wrath and wisdom, cries;
Say the fools, with hesitation,
"No; but educate the flies!"

We do both, twin wings who sunder;
Let the school fill out their sphere;
Let the church sound seven thunders—
But the webs must disappear.

Up! the webs are full of slaughter,
Sweep away the spider's lair;
Up! wife, husband, son or daughter,
Make the vexed earth clean and fair!

WANTED—A BOY.

A jolly boy.
A boy full of vim.
A boy who is square.
A boy who can say No.
A boy who scorns a lie.
A boy who hates deceit.
A boy who despises slang.
A boy who is above board.
A boy who will never smoke.
A boy who saves his pennies.
A boy with some "stick to it."
A boy with shoes always black.
A boy who takes to the bath-tub.
A boy who is proud of his big sister.
A boy who has forgotten how to whine.
A boy who thinks hard work no disgrace.
A boy who stands at the head of his class.
A boy who does chores without grumbling.
A boy who believes that an education is worth while.
A boy who is a stranger to the street corners at night.
A boy who plays with all his might—during play hours.
A boy who listens not to unclean stories from any one.
A boy who thinks his mother above all mothers is the model.
A boy who does not know more than all the rest of the house.
A boy who does not think it inconsistent to mix playing and praying.
A boy who does not wait to be called a second time in the morning.
A boy whose absence from Sunday-school sets everybody wondering what has happened.—The Christian Guardian.

WHAT TO DRINK.

Miss Ruth Hays was the leader of a temperance band of ten little girls. They met at her house each week, read temperance news and stories, sang songs, spoke pieces, recited temperance lessons and talked freely on all that concerned temperance.

One day Lizzie Noyes said: "My Aunt Louise in the city says if we can't have any wine, egg-nog or punch at parties and dinners it is just impossible to entertain company, and one cannot be in society at all."

It was evident that all the girls who belonged to well-to-do families thought that this would be a dreadful state of affairs.

"Are there no temperance drinks?" asked Anna.

"Mrs. G——says that there are none fit for anything." replied Fanny.

"Now, girls," cried Miss Ruth, "I will invite you all to a lunch party here for Thursday at three o'clock. There are ten of you, and I make eleven, and I will engage to give you only temperance drinks and each one a different drink."

When the girls were seated at table on Thursday Nora handed about the drinks, and here is the list, which Miss Ruth declared to be better than any wine list ever published:

1. Anna—Lemonade.
2. Laura—Iced tea.
3. Mary—Chocolate.
4. Kate—Coffee with whipped cream.
5. Susan—Currant sherbet.
6. Ada—Raspberry vinegar with ice water and sugar.
7. Belle—Milk.
8. Jane—Shaved ice, pineapple and sugar, with water.
9. Sara—Milkshake.
10. Nell—Fruit-ade; the juice of many fruits with sugar and water.
11. Miss Ruth—Water.

"Don't think I have used up all the temperance drinks," said Miss Ruth. "Nora shall have some hot tea with cream; that will be the twelfth drink. I could serve you a lovely drink, made of the strained juice of berries in water, sweetened to taste, and served with the white of an egg beaten in each glass. I think a cup of clear beef tea, or bullion, is a delightful drink; that is fourteen; and hot milk, which is wholesome and delicious, will count fifteen. In the country we could have buttermilk for sixteen, and a drink made of cold water, ginger and molasses, beaten together, which is very refreshing on a hot day, that counts seventeen. A glass with cream or new milk, an egg, beaten, the white and yolk separately, a little sugar and a little vanilla or fruit flavor, makes a fine drinkable lunch for a feeble person; count it eighteen. The Scotch make a very nice drink of oatmeal stirred in water, with a little salt, nineteen; and barley, boiled to a jelly, strained, flavored with sugar and lemon and reduced with pure cold water, is an admirable drink to rank as number twenty. Now what do you think of temperance people who have nothing to drink?"—Julia McNair Wright in The National Temperance Almanac.

TOBACCO AND LIQUOR ARITHMETIC.

"Boy at head of the class, what are we paying for liquor as a nation?"

"$900,000,000 annually."

"Step to the blackboard, my boy. First, take a rule and measure this silver dollar. How thick is it?"

"Nearly an eighth of an inch."

"Well, sir, how many of them can you pile in an inch?"

"Between eight and nine."

"Give it the benefit of the doubt and call it nine. How many inches would it require to pile up these $900,000,000?"

"100,000,000 inches."

"How many feet would that be?"

"8,333,333 feet."

"How many rods is that?"

"505,050 rods."

"How many miles is that?"

"1,578 miles."

"Miles of what?"

"1,578 miles of silver dollars laid down, packed closely together, our national liquor bill would make."

Now add the $600,000,000 we are paying for tobacco annually to the liquor miles of silver dollars, which is two-thirds as much, or 1,052, and we have 2,632 miles of silver dollars packed closely together for our nation's one year's grog and tobacco bill. Let these same silver dollars be laid flat, touching edge to edge, and they would make a continuous ring around the earth.

Reader, if you need facts about this question, nail that to a post and read it occasionally. It would take a small army of men with scoop shovels to throw away money as fast as we are wasting it for grog and tobacco.—Anti-Tobacco Gem.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—We celebrated Children's Day at our Sabbath-school. Did you? It has become so general a custom now that nearly every one of you can answer, Yes.

It began in the morning. The birds sang so joyously that I knew it must be a different Sunday from usual. Long before church time the boys and girls were hurrying along the walks to church. The pastor talked directly to the children, and many little ones were baptized and consecrated to God by their parents.

In the evening the Sunday-school took possession of the church pews, and even the choir loft. Older folks were crowded back, and all the exercises were given by the children, who sang appropriate songs and recited pieces. Did they do that in your Sunday-school? I imagine so.

There was a fluttering of fans and a good deal of rustling toward the close, for the crowded church became very warm, but everybody listened to the five-minute talks by the grown-ups. One was about the boyhood of Christ. The pastor told of the Sunday-school of the future, which he said will be sure to have picnics, at which everybody laughed. Although the future Sabbath-school won't be like a day school, as the first ones were, he thinks there will be more study than we now have in a single hour once a week. The good old superintendent told what he would do if he were a boy again. Can you guess? He'd have a bicycle, first thing! He told a good many other things, too. Then another song, and the benediction was pronounced, ending a very happy day—the children's own Sunday.

A New Jersey niece sends a good plant puzzle a part of which you find below in our Soft-Shelled Nuts. She doesn't say that she wrote it herself. I hope she did. Each line has an answer. I wonder who will send in the longest list.

PLANT PUZZLE.

What is the blacksmith's plant,
The shoemaker's plant,
And one that is never still;
The sailor's plant,
The smoker's plant,
And one we wave with a will?

Tell me the dryest plant,
And the wettest plant,
And one the pride of the morning;
The hottest plant,
And the coldest plant,
And one for royal adorning?

Now the surgeon's plant,
The schoolmaster's plant,
And one we fear to offend;
The jockey's plant,
The gunner's plant,
And one for our absent friend?

Then the swiftest plant,
And the slowest plant,
And one the small boy's delight;
The aeronaut's plant,
The shepherd's plant,
And one that comes in the night?

What is the oldest plant,
The youngest plant,
And one we hold in our hands;
The chronologist's plant,
The geologist's plant,
And one that so straightly stands?

Now the patriarch's plant,
And the wise man's plant,
And one that is never alone;
The richest plant,
The poorest plant,
And one bad for a vessel is shown?

This, then, is the message which we have heard of Him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all.—I. John 1:5.

A NATIONAL BUREAU OF TEMPERANCE LITERATURE.

The exceptionally fine report given in our pages of the great Prohibition Congress has made it possible for the many readers of THE UNION SIGNAL who were present in spirit, though widely separated in bodily form, to catch the thrill of that great gathering's inspiration, and to feel as if they too had been among the hosts of the Lord camped by the far sea.

From the first moment to the last the days were full of vital interest. Their outcome is destined to affect the temperance work of the future. Father Murphy's suggestion of a congress of Catholic and Protestant clergymen, to be held in Chicago two years hence, with a view to more decisive measures on the attitude of the church towards intemperance and the liquor traffic has immense possibilities.

But nothing has impressed us as being of such vital import as the suggestion of Rev. J. C. Fernald on a National bureau for temperance literature.

"All things come to him who waits," and this suggestion, or something akin to it, is the thing for which we have been long waiting.

Ever since the magnitude of our work began, even dimly, to dawn upon us, it has seemed to us that the one thing absolutely essential to its successful prosecution is a forceful, systematic propaganda of literature.

Whatever may have been true of other epochs in the world's history, it is unquestionably true to-day that the greatest force extant is the printing press, and the most effective missionary the printed page.

"As a man thinketh in his heart so is he," and as a man readeth so will he think.

The enemies of our work recognize this. Vile literature serves only one of the ends for which it was created when it brings in an immediate income. It is also intended as a feeder to the saloon, the brothel, the gambling den and whatever else makes for unrighteousness. Right well does it fulfill its mission. Our prisons and our reform schools are filled with youthful criminals made such by the literature of hell which is flooding our land.

"The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light," was not truer in the Master's day than it has been through all the ages since. In nothing has this lack of practical wisdom been more apparent than the slowness with which we have availed ourselves of our enemies' methods and weapons of warfare.

The homeopathic formula, similia similibus curantur, has a divine forcefulness when applied to the realm of reform. Like can be cured only by like. Bad habits must be overcome by good habits. Bad reading can be conquered only by good reading. The truths of temperance and prohibition can win their way into the hearts and lives of men only through the eye.

Neal Dow was wise enough to recognize this fact. "When we would obtain prohibition in Maine," he has said a thousand times, "we first sowed the state knee-deep with temperance literature." No wonder there came a harvest from such a sowing. The Maine law would have been long since a National law if Maine methods had but been carried out through the Nation.

Now this is exactly what Mr. Fernald proposes to do through his bureau, and we congratulate both himself and the cause upon the thought. Ten, twenty, fifty, one hundred thousand persons pledged to distribute ten cents' worth of literature every three months means a grand aggregate of moral force put into effective action, the results of which are beyond computation. There is no reason why the number pledged to this work should not be one hundred thousand before the year is over, with the hope of limitless expansion in the years to come. The work has been put into the hands of the strongest possible committee; its growth may be expected to be phenomenal.

Mr. Fernald well says that we have the subject matter already at hand. The W. T. P. A. alone has a stock-room, the shelves of which are literally groaning with a wealth of thought and argument along reform lines which should be out in the world doing valiant service for God, instead of being "cabined, cribbed, confined" to that narrow space.

We never enter the door of that room that we do not sigh for the power to let loose these messengers of light and life. But alas, to do that means to control the silver and gold to a degree not as yet possible for us.

The W. T. P. A. is not only a great reform agency; it is also a business house which must look to the interests of its stockholders, and can by no means ignore its pay-roll. Therefore, gladly as it would scatter its literature throughout the land, "without money and without price," it cannot do so in justice and honesty. There must be a secondary power of causation in its work, and that power must consist of temperance men and women who shall take of its output and give to the people.

This power has been more than usually "conspicuous for its absence" during the past year, and our work has been by just so much the more lessened. If temperance people have economized in nothing else during these hard times we are sure they have economized in respect to the purchase of literature.

This economy acts in two ways; it not only hinders the work out in the field, but it makes it impossible for the W. T. P. A. to put out constantly the new fresh leaflets it would gladly do if their purchase justified their publication. How dare we, in these perilous times, lock up more money in leaflets, when there is so marked a falling off in the demand for those already in stock?

And yet we are constantly receiving suggestions for the leafleting of this or that to which we should most willingly respond if experience had not taught us caution.

With such a bureau in active operation we see a solution to the problem of how to bring the supply already at hand to the need, and how to use the supply in such a way as through it to create a larger demand. Therefore we hasten to express our unqualified approval, and to offer, not alone the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL to this work, but the entire list of W. T. P. A. publications. Without doubt we shall be able to offer exceptionally low rates to the members of this bureau when assured that their numbers will warrant such an offer.

First upon our list must stand the great official organ of the W. C. T. U., THE UNION SIGNAL. There is small need that we should speak for it, since it speaks so powerfully for itself each week in thousands of homes. Its entrance into each home the world round, means the entrance of a light which must speedily cast out darkness; and we are sure if its potency could but be raised to its highest power by giving it admission to all the homes of our land, the coming of the good day would be at hand.

Next, in order of regular publications, stands the Oak and Ivy Leaf, the bright, official organ of the Y. W. C. T. U. The Advance Guard falls into line as senior L. T. L. organ, while The Young Crusader is the bravest and breeziest of juvenile papers.

Our catalogue gives entire the list of our leaflet publications. Our forty Signal Lights and thirty Timely Talks are practical, strong, common sense talks on the fundamental principles of prohibition. Our fourteen Total Abstinence leaflets give cogent reasons for total abstinence per se as opposed to moderation. Our twelve Busy Day leaflets on miscellaneous topics are just the things to catch the eye of a busy man.

Our eight Voter's and twenty-eight Department leaflets are what their names indicate, while our ninety odd National leaflets comprise the whole field of reform and are unequalled as effective medium for work. Our output along the lines of purity work is one in which we feel just pride, while our juvenile publications have their own place in the work which they fill without a peer.

These, together with our book publications, are at hand today, ready to be used as they have not been used in the past; while in addition to all these, our pigeon holes are filled with new "copy" and our brains fairly teeming with thoughts and plans for future publications.

Is it any wonder that the W. T. P. A. hails the organization of this bureau, or that THE UNION SIGNAL earnestly hopes each white-ribboner may become a member of the same? We see in it an opportunity to widen the scope of our power for usefulness. We see in it the power through which our own "leaves of healing" may be applied to the cure of this world's sore hurt. Let its beneficent work be at once begun; so shall we hasten the day of God.

"Sow in the morn thy seed;
At eve hold not thy hand;
To doubt and fear give thou no heed,
Broad-cast it o'er the land."

AN UNWISE ADVOCATE.

Ida B. Wells, a young colored woman, who has been speaking in England recently in behalf of her race, and particularly against lynching in the South, has greatly injured her cause by impulsive and untrue statements. In both public utterances and printed articles she has declared that "there is no movement being made by American white Christians towards educating public sentiment against lynch law in the United States," and that "not only was this true, but the action and utterances of certain well-known Christian workers had served to give encouragement to the practices of the Southern States towards the negro. I mention both the Rev. Dwight L. Moody and Miss Frances E. Willard in this connection."

While some of the English papers have espoused her as well as her cause, many have readily seen the absurdity of her charge against Mr. Moody and Miss Willard. The Christian Commonwealth, one of the most influential religious weeklies in England, says:

If Miss Wells is not careful she will kill her cause by imprudent speeches. She has been talking wildly about Mr. D. L. Moody and Miss Frances E. Willard. Miss Wells is not the first of her race who has come to this country and misrepresented both American life and American citizens. It is simply absurd to suppose that the Christians of America are indifferent to the reign of lynch law. They are just as much opposed to lynching people, whether white or black, as Miss Wells is, but there are considerations in connection with this whole matter which are studiously suppressed in some of the statements we have seen. At any rate the churches must not be regarded as approving lynch law simply because they do not believe in Miss Wells methods of getting rid of it. She represents a noble plea, if she will candidly state the whole facts of the case, but any attack upon such persons as Miss Willard and Mr. Moody will certainly react unfavorably for her cause.

This charge against Miss Willard, as doubtless against Mr. Moody, is wholly without ground. Indeed, in the light of her sisterly helpfulness and good-will towards the colored race, it is absurdly preposterous. Lady Henry Somerset has held an "interview" with Miss Willard on this subject, under the trees of her garden at Reigate, and being confident that our readers will enjoy the quaint humor and the excellent spirit with which Miss Willard makes her replies, we herewith give the interview in full, as printed in the Westminster Gazette of London:

"You have often told me?" I said, "that your family for generations back were all Abolitionists; that your father and mother were educated in the famous Abolition College, founded by the Congregationalists in Oberlin, Ohio; that you yourself learned to read out of a little book called 'The Slave's Friend.' How does it seem to you to be made now to appear as one of the prime causes of the terrible lynchings and burnings of the colored people of the South?"

"Oh," Miss Willard laughingly replied, "I am like the eel of whom the legend is that he was skinned so often that he learned to like it."

"But is it true," I asked, "that Christian workers in America are indifferent to these outrages upon the colored people?"

"I wondered a little," said Miss Willard, "that Miss Wells did not mention the fact that, two years ago at its quadrennial conference, the Methodist church, the largest in America, numbering over two millions, passed a strong resolution expressive of the profound horror which everybody must feel in the presence of such cruelty. I am not informed as to the official action of other denominations than my own in the well-nigh two years that I have been absent from home, during which the outrages have been greatly multiplied; but I know that the concurrent opinion of all good people, North and South, white and black, is practically united against the taking of any human life without due process of law."

"Are these barbarities confined to the Southern States?" was my natural question.

"No; I do not think they originated there, but rather 'on the borders,' as we called it, between civilization and savagery in the far West; nor do I think these methods are by any means confined to my own country. It is well known that in the early history of Australia and in the gold fields of Africa, as in the gold and silver mines of the Rockies and Sierras, the people constituted themselves both judge and jury, and woe betide the offender who violated the rough standards of conduct which were the outcome of the selfishness of a majority."

"From the manner in which the subject is being presented to British audiences, and conveyed to us by cablegram, I think the impression might naturally enough be given that negroes are being burned or butchered to make a New York or Chicago holiday."

"Well," replied Miss Willard, "it is difficult for those who hear these things to understand that they are dealing with sixty-five millions of people scattered over a continent. State rights prevail with us, and prevent action by the national government, and it is really much the same as though London had been held responsible for atrocities in Bulgaria. It is needless for me to say," continued Miss Willard, "that neither by voice nor pen have I ever condoned, much less defended, any injustice toward the colored people. To do so would violate every instinct of my nature and habit of my thought, and I am simply one representative of the nation to which I belong and of whose record as a whole every one of its children has reason to be proud."

"Miss Wells," I observed, "quotes an interview with you that appeared in 1890 in a New York temperance paper called The Voice, and which she has caused to be reprinted in a little London periodical called Fraternity. In her comments in the same paper on this interview Miss Wells has said you have 'condoned fraud, violence, murder at the ballot-box, rapine, shooting, hanging and burning; for all these things are done and being done now by the Southern white people.' What do you think of that for the record of a philanthropist?"

Miss Willard paused a moment and then replied: "I am sorry that she has made such a statement for I fear it may injure her mission. You see," she continued, "the interview that Miss Wells has quoted did not in any wise relate to what our papers at home call the 'Southern outrages,' but on my return from a temperance tour through the South four years ago I was interviewed as to the situation in respect to the colored vote, and I frankly said that I thought 'we had irreparably wronged ourselves by putting no safeguard on the ballot box at the North that would sift out alien illiterates who rule our cities to-day with the saloon as their palace and the toddy stick their sceptre. It is not fair that they should vote, nor is it fair that a plantation negro who can neither read nor write, whose ideas are bounded by the fence of his own field and the price of his own mule, should be entrusted with the ballot. We ought to have put an educational test upon that ballot from the first.' That is what I said."

"I suppose you believe," I continued, "that you would be justified in withholding the vote from alien illiterates and illiterate colored people on the same ground that the English refuse practically all participation in the government to the native races in India, only there we make no distinctions between ignorance and knowledge. In short, we draw far more distinctly the color line."

"Yes," replied Miss Willard, "that which I had been told by the best people I knew in the South—and I knew a great many ministers, editors and home people—that 'the safety of women, of children, is menaced in a thousand localities, so that the men dare not go beyond their own roof-tree.' If this be not true, then the well-nigh universal testimony of white people in the South is unworthy of credence; but even if all that they say and ten-fold more be true, I hold, and have held always, that no crime, however heinous, can by any possibility excuse the commission of any act of cruelty, or the taking of any human life, without due course of law."

In our leading editorial of May 17, on "Jiners and Specialists," occurs the serious grammatical error of substituting Latin for Greek in referring to the study of the definite article. Our remembrance of the Latin language is not so wholly effaced that we had forgotten that it contains no definite or indefinite articles, but the illustration got confused in our mind on a particularly busy day and we proved ourselves once more fallible.

PLEDGE.—"I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquor, as a beverage, including Wine, Beer and Cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same."

QUESTION.—Dr. Bushnell, in her article on "State Regulation of Vice" in THE UNION SIGNAL of April 12, speaks of the "C. D. Acts." Would you explain the meaning of this expression?

ANSWER.—C. D. in this connection stands for Contagious Diseases. These Acts were passed in 1865, 1867 and 1868 by the British Parliament, and authorized a justice of the peace to detain a woman suspected of being a prostitute for examination and treatment. The claim of its advocates was that it prevented the spread of contagious diseases, but in reality it was for the protection of the men who visited the houses of ill-fame. Largely as a result of W. T. Stead's crusade against social impurity in 1882, the House of Commons appointed a committee to examine into the effects of these Acts. Mr. Stansfeld headed the opposition in the prolonged debate that followed the report of the committee, which was in substance that these Acts had neither checked disease nor promoted morality. The administration of the Acts was suspended in 1883, and the Acts themselves were repealed in 1886. Dr. Bushnell's and Mrs. Andrew's mission in India was to gather proof that these Acts were still in vogue in that British province contrary to the orders of Parliament. How well they succeeded and how effective their testimony has been frequently told THE UNION SIGNAL readers.

Q.—Can a temperance man raise hops, or a W. C. T. U. woman pick them, without breaking their pledges, as hops are so extensively used for beer?

A.—If hops were used only for beer we should answer most emphatically, NO. But they have other uses; they are used in the manufacture of yeast; they are used for medicinal purposes, and very largely in the process of dyeing cloth. If temperance men or W. C. T. U. women know that the hops they are picking or selling are to be sent to a brewery then they are violating the spirit, if not the letter, of their pledge; but if they are raised and picked for the general market we cannot see how they are breaking their pledge any more than by husking corn or picking grapes. Corn is largely made into whisky, and grapes into wine, but each has its beneficent function, and if we are to examine thus microscopically all the good things of life there will be little room for anything else. Sometimes it seems to us that there is need in our temperance zeal of the old caution, "Be not righteous over much."

Q.—How does Mr. W. Jennings Demorest pronounce his name?

A.—Mr. Demorest pronounces his name just as it is spelled—Dem-o-rest, accent on the last syllable.

Q.—Is it in accordance with the spirit of the Demorest medal contests to appropriate the money received from them for private use?

A.—To this question we will let Mr. Demorest's own words reply: "Regarding the money received from the contests, they were organized to promote prohibition sentiment in the minds of youth and through them to the people at large, and the money obtained from these contests should be devoted entirely to some prohibition work and not appropriated for personal gain, and any persons doing this do it entirely without our sanction."

Q.—Who is John G. Woolley? This question was asked of me by a gentleman after reading Mr. Woolley's eloquent Neal Dow speech in THE UNION SIGNAL of April 5.

A.—Mr. Woolley is a temperance orator of almost unmatched eloquence. Even the complimentary title of "The Second Gough" does not always seem sufficiently strong. Mr. Woolley was for many years a leading lawyer of Minneapolis, but the power of drink enchained him until five years ago he came into the Light and has since devoted himself most effectively to the temperance cause. Mr. Woolley now resides in Chicago, or rather his family does; he is almost constantly in the lecture field but brightens up the home circle with occasional brief visits. The "White Ribbon Portfolio" says: "The life of John G. Woolley reads like a modern exposition of the Apostles creed. There was first the birth in natural innocence, the suffering under the Pontias Pilate of sinful appetite, and the descent into the hell of a burned out life; then came the glad rising into a newness of thought and power, the glorious ascension to fellowship with God and man, the communion with the saints and martyrs of all ages, a forgiveness of sins which carried with it the blotting out of the old, and a resurrection of the body into a life in which it became henceforth a 'temple of the Holy Ghost.' The days of miracles are not yet passed, and this man with tongue of fire, called of God as truly as was ever prophet of old, is a living proof of the fact."

Good people leave off their good works in the summer and go away to have a good time, but bad people take no vacations, and their headquarters of temptation have doors that swing wide and easily in one season as much as another, and perhaps in summer most of all.

The temperance reform seems to me to have so lengthened its cords and strengthened its stakes that it is becoming as much a settled and established institution in the most distant parts of the world as it is in the two great English speaking nations; and the best feature is that we are coming more and more to a spirit of solidarity, as a universal temperance army—men and women together forming an irresistible host. It was never before so clearly shown by science and held by the intelligent that total abstinence is the key and core of the movement; there was never so strong a determination to be rid of the domination of the liquor traffic in politics; never so clear an understanding that legislation is as important as personal abstinence, and that the watch cries of the future must be "Prohibition by law, prohibition by politics, and prohibition by woman's ballot."

It ought to be known as an indication of the influence that woman's entrance upon the government will be likely to deepen and extend, that the request of Queen Victoria, made to the men of her realm shortly after she came to the throne, that they would put a stop to dueling, was so persuasive that the curse of what less civilized nations are pleased to call an "affair of honor" is unknown in England, and has been for well-nigh two generations.

Another action of the good queen may also be taken as a proof of the high-minded purpose of a woman in power: Victoria's life has been repeatedly assailed by madmen and fanatics, but instead of showing a spirit of fear she has in every case forbidden the taking of the slightest revenge, and the criminals who sought to kill her have merely been placed where they could not attempt it again. This is said to be the only instance in which a great ruler has exercised such clemency in cases where the taking of his or her life has been attempted.

"My heredity is against me" is the common excuse of inebriates. It was a good reply given by a white-ribboner, "If you had lived up to your best heredity instead of down to your worst you might have had cause to extol your heredity."

Why are certain things unfit for women's ears and not for men's? is a query which a clergyman's wife finds it difficult to answer, after being excluded from the court in which three young girls gave their revolting testimony in the presence of a mingled audience of men onlookers. In her mind and in that of every sensible thinker the court might better have been cleared of the men, and the girls supported by the presence of elder women of their own sex. Certainly there is need for more judges of the Bradley type to administer stinging rebukes to the carrion-seekers at these nauseating trials, who go to gratify a prurient curiosity.

A "long felt want" is tersely indicated in the following letter by the Rev. Sam Small: "Could you not editorially and kindly suggest to the officials of the W. C. T. U. throughout the country that it would be a great assistance to gentlemen, who desire to be chivalric and conventionally courteous, if they would indicate in the signatures to their correspondence whether they are 'Mrs.' or 'Miss,' or any other form of feminity? It would relieve some of us of great embarrassment ofttimes in answering their favors of correspondence." On Duty is often at a loss over this little matter in her own correspondence, and would like to have it settled as much as our chivalric and courteous brothers. How would it do to always take for granted that a woman's signature without the prefix is "Miss," and thus oblige a married woman to sign "Mrs.," in a parenthesis, if she prefers. I am sure the most of them would gladly do this for the high honor that is supposed to belong to the title! Let us hear from a hundred or so UNION SIGNAL readers about this really important question, and not only "relieve the embarrassment" of the Rev. Small, but of hosts of correspondents everywhere.

ON DUTY.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

MISSOURI.

A NEWSY LETTER.

From almost every part of our state hopeful reports have been received. While temperance work is being kept prominently before the people through lecturers and gospel temperance meetings, chiefly through the quiet, unwearying manipulations of the active and thoughtful workers of the unions, a great deal of W. C. T. U. work in other departments is also being done which the public hardly realizes.

Mrs. Hoffman has recently returned from Louisiana and Mississippi, where she has gained new laurels by her unanswerable and masterly addresses on Prohibition and woman suffrage. Southern manhood and the spirit engendered by the old traditions of the past, yielded to her brilliant yet forcible arguments, and they could not do her too much honor. Her trip through these states was an ovation. She is now in Missouri meeting her many appointments, but with afflicted and almost worn out body, needing much rest, which she feels she cannot take when so much has to be done.

St. Louis has been quite active during the past few weeks, and for a time it was hoped that an anti-saloon state convention, which appears to have originated with some connected with the ministers' alliance of that city, would have produced great results. It was held in Sedalia, April 26, but notwithstanding the grand motive which prompted it, namely "to unite all the temperance forces of every creed and society for the overthrow of the saloon," it can only be reported as a failure. How or why need not here be said. But it was not through want of cöoperation on the part of the W. C. T. U. or of the temperance forces of Sedalia.

The Y's of St. Louis are interesting themselves in noble work. The president of the South Side Y writes that their evangelistic meetings continue each week at Bethesda Home, and that she found an unfortunate inmate there who was one of our own girls, a Missouri Y. She has no parents and no home to go to. The tender-hearted president naturally asks, "Will not some big hearted Missouri W, who needs some one to help her with her work, shelter this poor unfortunate sister and her little one?" Any information can be obtained by writing to the Directress, Bethesda Home, St. Louis.

Sedalia is attempting to do much. There is a warm feeling of sisterly helpfulness and unity apparent between the Sedalia W. C. T. U., the East Sedalia union and the Catholic Woman's Temperance Union. Mrs. Laura Lake, the eloquent Catholic National organizer, held a meeting at the court-house a few nights since, and all the unions turned out in good force. Rescue work is now actively stirring the hearts of the Sedalia W. C. T. U., and an effort is being made to obtain a house for a shelter and industrial home.

Clinton has been having for months a revival of active temperance work. Much of the honor may be given to the leaders of the Anti-Saloon Army for this awakening. A very successful and interesting temperance mass-meeting was held by all the Sunday-schools one Sunday night a short time ago. Each school was entitled to ten minutes of time on the program. Mrs. Julia B. Nelson, of Red Wing, lectured to a full house on "Equal Suffrage" a few nights after. On May 15 the W. C. T. U. held a very successful meeting at the court-house, assisted by the pastors. Mrs. Nelson also lectured at Fair Play, Bolivar and at Springfield, giving three addresses at the last-named place.

Medal contests are doing much to interest and educate along all lines of temperance work. A gold medal contest was held lately at Warrensburg, and the medal was won by Miss Nannie Tevis, of Holden. Receipts, fourteen dollars and sixty cents.

Clarksville sends a bright report, and their union evidently appreciates THE UNION SIGNAL. They had a literary and musical entertainment and embodied suggestions found in its columns and cleared about thirteen dollars.

McDonald county was to have held a temperance convention May 1 and 2, but changed the date to May 22 and 23 to secure the presence of Mrs. Hoffman. "McDonald county for temperance" is their motto.

The W. C. T. U. at Pineville is full of energy and doing much to disseminate temperance literature, etc. The president of the union at her own cost sends one hundred monthly papers to leading men in the different townships. The ministers and the press help in every way. A report comes in from Lancaster which is not encouraging. A W. C. T. U. was organized in 1884, but it has gradually dwindled down until one dear woman writes: "My mother and self are the only white-ribboners in this little city, and it grieves me to admit the fact."

Good work is being done in St. Clair county, that county whose judges have been imprisoned so long for contempt of the higher court in not ordering a levy upon the people to pay for a railroad that was never built, but the bonds for which were issued. Osceola, the county seat, while a saloon and drug-store town, contains a veritable Home Guard of some of the most earnest workers in the state. The curse and blight of drink has been so apparent in that beautiful and picturesque little city on the hills, with the broad Osage at its feet sweeping onward to the Missouri, that temperance work is regarded as a large part of their religion. It is a hopeful sign that the young girls are also most earnest in the work and meet with the W's.

Appleton City, in the same county, has been equally as earnest, and has just had a most successful Demorest medal contest, as well as a Sunday-school mass-meeting. The children enacted "The Fairy Folk," and the "Response of the Earth Children" with beautiful effect, and while the closing recitation was being given about "Spinning and weaving the ribbon white" a large globe underwent the process of being festooned by children, who were supplied with the white-ribbon by the good fairies.

The Y's of St. Charles have been giving much of their time and energy to Demorest contest work, and their honorary members have been a great help to them.

Marionville has not been heard from for a long time, but during the past year it has had a re-awakening of true W. C. T. U. spirit and is full of courage, planning for effective work in many departments. Some excellent lectures and evangelistic meetings have been held, also two Demorest medal contests, and three of their members attended the county conference at Verona. One of them took part in the Old Folks' concert and won the prize, "Glimpses of Fifty Years." THE UNION SIGNAL is sent to the three resident pastors by the Marionville union.

A very fine report comes in from Cole Camp, where they appear to make good use of their honoraries, one of whom edits a type-written paper called The Temperance Banner. Besides having frequent meetings, occasional socials and lectures, they keep the depot, the barber-shop and the hotel well supplied with literature. The members are all willing workers.

Bolivar is also active; has had a temperance mass meeting, an interesting mothers' meeting, Neal Dow anniversary and a fine address by Mrs. Nelson, of Minnesota, on equal suffrage.

Ten unions in Lawrence county, twenty-third district, held their semi-annual conference at Verona, April 19, and the day seemed all too short for the women to say all they wished. Many gentlemen took part in the discussions and an "Old Folks' Contest" in the evening closed a well spent day.

Kirkwood reports a fine lecture from Col. George Bain, a Demorest medal contest and two interesting parliamentary drills by Mrs. Grubb, besides mothers' meetings and much general interest.

It is with regret that we have also to report the illness of our state reporter, Miss Eva Jones, of Clinton. Her physicians have forbidden her to attempt any literary effort for the present, hence some delay has been occasioned in obtaining the data and reports necessary for the above. Any correspondents who asked for replies by mail to any matter mailed to Miss Eva Jones will now understand why they may not have received them.

NEW YORK NEWS.

Probably at no time in the history of our state has there been a more general "stirring up" on the questions of the day, viz.: "The Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic" and the "Full Enfranchisement of Women," than during the past few months. What the result will be cannot be told as yet. Our state constitutional convention, which convenes this year, and then not again for twenty years, will help or hinder just as it sees fit, but this we know, that the work done in securing names to the petitions for the above, has not been done in vain, for it has helped to bring many to a better understanding of these questions.

Westchester county reports a fine school of methods held in Willard Hall, Mt. Vernon. All the general officers, fifteen vice-presidents, thirty delegates and seventy-five visitors being present. After the usual routine, Mrs. Bryant, of Mt. Vernon, gave a practical address on narcotics, and Mrs. Griffin, of Mamaroneck, read a paper on peace and arbitration, which was afterward published in the local paper. A Bible reading by Mrs. E. L. Niven, of Dobbs Ferry, was especially good. Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, National secretary of Y branch, gave a most interesting address, and Miss Julia Colman talked upon the scientific side of the temperance question.

Dutchess county held its sixteenth annual convention at Poughkeepsie in April, and it was a time of special rejoicing, in that their beloved county president was with them again after a five months' absence in Europe. Just previous to the opening of the convention a little impromptu reception was given her in the parlors of their headquarters. Your reporter was present, and to her was accorded the honor of presenting to Mrs. Nelson a beautiful basket of flowers which the ladies had in readiness, singing one verse of "Home, sweet home," instead of making a presentation speech. A beautiful bouquet of roses was also presented to Mrs. Nelson by Mrs. Hoag, first vice-president.

The annual address of the president was earnest, thoughtful and impressive. A beautiful memorial service was conducted by Mrs. Carver, and fitting words were spoken in memory of the fifteen who have "dropped from the ranks" during the past year. And while we were yet mourning the loss of these valued members our hearts were gladdened by the sight of the "on coming" workers, the children, and in listening to the exercises by the Loyal Temperance Legion hope for the future filled all hearts—a future when rum shall cease to reign.

The officers were all reëlected with the exception of treasurer, who, having removed to New York City, could no longer fill the position. Reports of officers and superintendents proved that there were few drones in this hive.

In the evening Anthony Comstock delivered a telling address on the "Foes of Society, Church and State." Music was furnished by Mrs. Graham, state corresponding secretary, who sang, "If I were a voice," and "My Native Land," the latter in honor of Mrs. Nelson's return, and Mr. T. H. McPherson, of Poughkeepsie, who sang with fine effect, "Come unto Me all ye that labor." The convention from beginning to end was interesting, instructive and enjoyable, as I can testify, having been present "in the body."

Rockland county reports work done along various lines. The county organization is small—only one hundred and seventy-two members, yet they have taken up fifteen departments of work, with an efficient superintendent at the head of each, and all trying to do their best. The vice-president says, "It seems as if the Lord was sending so many willing hands to help along His work. A meeting was held in the jail at which time Mrs. Lucy H. Washington, of Port Jervis, spoke to the inmates. She also gave an address before the convention in the evening, which was greatly enjoyed. Following the address eighteen young men from Spring Valley entertained the convention with fine music.

Meetings are held frequently in the jail and with good effect. The different pastors have preached several temperance sermons, the W. C. T. U. attending church in a body. At Haverstraw there is a temperance Sunday-school and several flourishing L. T. L's throughout the county.

Genesee county held a convention at Batavia. The county president, Mrs. Rice, was unavoidably absent, much to the regret of all. A loving greeting was sent by her to the convention. In her absence, Mrs. Whitney, first vice-president, occupied the chair.

Local unions were well represented, and at roll call each one responded by giving a temperance quotation from Shakespeare. Excellent reports were given. One very encouraging report came from the North Byron union, where the L. T. L. has raised twenty-four dollars and given it to the Sunday-school for a library. The superintendent of scientific temperance instruction reported a case of insubordination in one of the schools in which a pupil refused to receive instruction, having been commanded by his father not to do so. The school commissioner upheld the teacher in enforcing the law and the trustees suspended the boy. Excellent papers were read and the franchise question came in for a goodly share of attention. The pastors present spoke encouraging words and all did their best for the success of the meeting.

Y WORK.

A state conference of the Y's, the first one ever held in our state, was held in the Janes M. E. church, at Brooklyn, N. Y. An "April shower," in the form of a severe snow-storm, came just at the same time, but in spite of the weather the sessions were well attended and great interest was manifested. Mrs. Jump, state secretary of Y branch, presided. Welcomes and greetings from both Y's and W's were given and responded to. [Lack of space prevents the publication of the full account of this unusually important and successful conference, which was well reported in the May Oak and Ivy Leaf.—EDS.]

L. T. L. NOTES.

Cattaraugus county seems to be bearing off most of the honors in the state in regard to graduates. Since 1890 Limestone has had twenty-six graduates and twenty-three seals affixed to their diplomas.

Through the kindness of Miss Kendall, a lady in New York, a gold medal will be given for the best essay on "The Attitude of the Bible toward Man's Treatment of Dumb Animals."

A convention of L. T. L's will be held at Cortland but arrangements are not yet completed. Mrs. Burt, our beloved state president, will be present, also Mrs. Ellen D. Blair, National chalk-talker.

HERE AND THERE.

The Central union of New York city, at its recent annual meeting in the chapel of Broadway Tabernacle, rejoiced over various indications of progress, such as a large accession of new members, the Sunday-school lessons, tracts and specimen papers sent to more than two hundred Sunday-school superintendents, and the use of unfermented wine at communion adopted by some very prominent city churches. A thank-offering of ten dollars was devoted to the state fair building (a part of it to go through sister unions), ten dollars more to Miss De Broen's Paris Mission, while still another ten dollars has been spent for temperance literature, and given by the members to special cases, and an earnest canvass has been made for subscriptions to our state paper.

I would like to say a word right here for our state fair building, and urge upon the workers in our state the necessity of immediate action in the matter. Can we not make a grand rally and raise the amount needed without further urging? For years past Mrs. Burt has gone on to the state fair grounds under the most trying circumstances, and "held the fort" there. The need of a building is imperative, and if we would only make a united effort, the few hundred dollars necessary would be forthcoming at once. Let us do this without further appeal. Mrs. Tenney, our state treasurer, will gladly welcome all donations.

Mrs. Gardenier is anxious to dispose of more copies of our last state report. Can this matter not be brought before the conventions soon to be held, and a number be ordered for sale at these meetings? Nothing helps the work more than intelligence in regard to it.

Our state paper, Woman's Temperance Work, is growing, and the subscription price, only twenty-five cents a year, places it within reach of every one, and, while urging the claims of other matters upon our attention, I would not forget to say that every woman who wears a white ribbon, or ought to wear one, should be a subscriber to our state and National papers.

RANDOM NOTES.

The past two months mark an era of conventions. That of Pueblo county was held in the Mesa Baptist church, Mrs. M. A. Patterson presiding. Reports were given of local unions, showing good work and a steady increase in interest and membership. All along the line is the ring of triumph. The noon hour was marked by a spirit of consecration to the Master's work and an uplifting, that continued throughout the day. Of the superintendent's reports, the jail and prison was especially interesting. Truly, the good wrought by our self-sacrificing women will not be without its reward. Mrs. M. J. Telford was present during the day and was very helpful. A paper on narcotics, compiled from the best authorities, was well received, and requests were made for its repetition for local unions. Mrs. E. K. Reynolds gave a paper on "Our Boys and Girls" in her own happy manner, followed by a parliamentary drill by Mrs. Telford.

The evening address was by Rev. N. S. Reynolds, pastor of the Baptist church, when he said "when the testing time came there would be a majority in favor of no-license in Colorado," followed by Mrs. Telford on Christian patriotism, who raised a high standard for the patriots of America. The whole convention was one of unusual interest owing to the new responsibilities of the women of our state. A resolution was unanimously adopted "That we, the women of Colorado, having received the franchise, believe it to be our solemn duty at the fall election to see to it, that no man gets office who is not unconditionally committed to the annihilation of the liquor traffic."

At the annual convention of Arapahoe county, a pleasing episode was the presentation to the president, Mrs. M. A. Cassell, of Denver, of a handsome silver tray for cake or bread, highly embossed and engraved with her monogram and the letters, "Co. W. C. T. U.," also, to the vice-president, Mrs. W. H. Wrigley, a silver berry spoon. Both ladies were greatly surprised, and responded in feeling terms of appreciation. In the evening a most thrilling and inspiring address was given by Rev. Kerr B. Tupper, pastor of the First Baptist church, on "Shall the Church Conquer or be Conquered by the Liquor Traffic?"

The southwestern district union held its biennial convention in the pleasant town of Delta, and the hospitality of its denizens was unbounded from the time the delegates were welcomed at the train until their departure. Mrs. S. B. R. Pickett, of White Water, conducted the proceedings of the convention. The opening hymn was "Jesus, Lover of my Soul," and prayer was the theme and prelude of the work prepared and business to be considered. There were sixteen delegates and several visitors in attendance. Rev. Ella F. Leonard, pastor of the Congregational church at Rice, was an inspiration by her kindly words of advice and encouragement on the varied lines of work. The president of the district, Mrs. Pickett, is wholly consecrated to the cause of God and Home and Native Land, for her every duty is performed by prayer and continued therein to its completion. One hour's communion with her, by those who are so favored, is marked with gentleness and an abiding influence for better things. Her home, nine miles distant from the center of civilization, is no barrier to her every undertaking, and although compelled to use crutches, the result of a sprain, her motto is "Press on and waver not."

From the corresponding secretary's report, Grand Junction is the banner union, having the largest membership, forty, and the greatest amount of money raised for their needs, $300.

At the meeting in the evening addresses of welcome were given by the mayor and pastors. The mayor urged us to remember the old Crusaders in the days of chivalry, applying the same to the W. C. T. U., but advised us to keep out of politics. We were, however, welcome to every sidewalk and avenue, (except that of free thinking and independent action). Rev. J. H. Gill, of the Methodist church, indorsed all the methods and aims of our organization and advised us to enter politics in our own way, which will be the right way, and thus exert a purifying influence. A fitting response was given in a graceful manner by Mrs. N. E. Hoyt, wife of the pastor of the Baptist church, welcoming all "In His name." It was a disappointment to many that Mrs. Eva C. Higgins, our state president, was absent owing to her lecture engagements elsewhere. Many able papers were presented during the session, notably, "What shall we do with our citizenship?" by Mrs. Ray Simpson, of Delta. Others on "Moral force in politics" and "The work of to-day."

The northern district annual, held at Idaho Springs, was replete with pleasant incidents from its incipiency until its close. There were thirty-five delegates besides several visitors in attendance, and the program was carried out with but few exceptions. Members of the reception and entertainment committees were waiting at the depot to welcome the friends with glad hearts, after the exhilarating ride through the beautiful canyon and noble, towering peaks, whose summits seemed to reach the blue dome of heaven, and we were made to feel at once the loveliness of nature and the magnificence of God. Mrs. M. A. Cassell, of Denver, vice-president of the district, presided in her own graceful, equable manner, and the verdict of all was, it was the most delightful conference that had been held in many months. The Presbyterian church was most tastefully decorated with blooming plants and appropriate mottoes on the walls; the pastor, Rev. J. H. Grace and wife, seeming to vie with the others in giving cordial greeting. After devotional exercises, conducted by Mrs. S. J. Corbin, of Fort Collins, and the appointment of committees, the business was taken up, the first being the discussion on the question, "Shall the district work be continued?" This was decided by a resolution that the state union in annual convention in September next, consider the dividing of the work into smaller districts or carry on more county work.

The corresponding secretary reported total membership, 710; cash receipts of local unions, $6,552.81; expended, $5,475.15; paid to Cottage Home in Denver, for unfortunate girls, $93; number of UNION SIGNALS taken, 126. Memorial service for Mrs. T. M. Wallace and C. D. H. Thompson, who have passed to the home beyond during the year, was conducted by Mrs. Kate McFarland, of Longmont.

The evening meeting was addressed by Rev. E. J. Wilcox, of Denver, who is fearless in his advocacy of prohibition, and was greeted with hearty applause. Fine music was rendered by the choir, and an original poem by Mrs. Antoinette Hawley, formerly of Missouri, but now a resident of Denver. We give her a cordial welcome to our ranks as an efficient co-worker.

The second day's proceedings were marked by the election of officers, and a highly instructive paper on "Scientific Temperance Instruction," by Mrs. E. M. Wiley, of Colorado Springs, that was full of helpful hints and statistics. Convention adjourned with the hymn, "God be with you till we meet again."

NOTES.

Loveland abolished the open saloon more than a year ago, and recently closed its billiard room.

Mrs. Higgins in her trip through the interior of the state has been received with the most generous hospitality and a hopeful feeling prevails everywhere and the outlook is most encouraging.

Canon City has made a determined fight against gambling, and Longmont voted "no saloons" by one hundred and eighty-seven majority, through the woman's influence.

The Colorado W. C. T. U. passed the following resolution:

Inasmuch as gambling is a great evil, and has been allowed to run rampant in our city and state in opposition to the law of the state and the will of the people: Therefore, be it

Resolved, By the members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Colorado that we commend the action of our governor, Hon. Davis H. Waite, for the manly determination and statesmanlike bearing he has shown in appointing officials who will enforce the law and relieve our city of at least one of its evils. Also for the enforcement of law in controlling the saloons, and all other evils.

At Fruita a prohibition league of twenty-four members has been formed, and the entire state has received an impetus in this direction since hearing the noted orator, Col. Geo. W. Bain. Despite the stormy weather he has received hearty welcome and had crowded audiences. It is our purpose to have him with us at our annual state convention this fall.

A new union was organized at Breckenridge, by the state recording secretary, Mrs. Sarah L. Teetor. This is a trying field, as they have seven saloons and a population of but 1,200. The workers are in earnest, and the obstacles will soon be overcome by patient, persistent effort, that is in every undertaking. They will carry on the departments of "Loyal Legion," "Y," and "Work among Miners," until their numbers are increased.

The Trinidad union has been called to mourn the loss by death of their corresponding secretary, Mrs. Lottie Bowlden. "She hath done what she could," was the text at her funeral in the Baptist church, that was filled with the sympathizing friends and members of the union.

"We all must sleep
Nor wake again to life and love,
Sad, silent and mysterious sleep."

CONVENTIONS AND LOCALS.

The Chittenden county W. C. T. U. held its annual convention with school of methods, in Burlington, May 11 and 12. Mrs. E. B. Lund called the convention to order; beautiful words of welcome by Mrs. Hammond were responded to by delegates from several unions. Mrs. G. E. Davidson conducted a school of methods, after which Mr. W. Kensett, a missionary from Singapore, addressed the convention on the opium habit; a Bible reading was conducted by Mrs. L. D. Dyer.

The afternoon session was opened with a service of song. Mrs. J. E. Moulton read an excellent paper on "The Franchise." A parliamentary drill followed in which Mrs. G. E. Davidson proved herself fully capable. Mrs. M. E. Bell presented the comparatively new work of the home for friendless girls. She stated that the home was not entirely paid for, and no means of support assured except voluntary contributions.

Saturday morning Mrs. Ida H. Reed, state president, gave an address on the Temperance Temple. Evangelistic, jail and almshouse, railroad and other work were discussed.

Mrs. Davidson conducted a school of methods on scientific temperance instruction. Miss Helen Wellman spoke of such teaching in the Sunday-school, and Miss Carrie Loggins in the common schools.

After a short recess Miss Grace Hull read a paper on young women's work. A pleasant feature of the session was the singing of the Loyal Temperance Legion. Jericho Legion exercises consisted of an excellent paper on "Humane Teaching," by Mrs. S. V. V. Booth, recitations by young ladies, a very acceptable solo by Miss Eva Hunt, an exercise by twenty-one children, and parting words of cheer and encouragement by Mrs. Ida H. Reed.

Rutland county held its convention in Poultney. A fine program was given. Miss Alice Guernsey, well known to temperance workers, has come to Rutland to make her home there for the future. The Rutland union has opened a coffee and lunch room on Central street. It is in the business part of the city, and in close proximity to the saloons that still exist. On one of the large plate glass windows are the words, "For God and Home and Native Land." It was opened to the public in April, and it is hoped much good may be done in this way. An intoxicated man came in three times the first day and called for coffee. He said he saw the sign W. C. T. U., and knew he would receive good from his visits. The lady in charge gave him some good advice which he appeared to appreciate. May it prove to be seed sown in good ground.

The union in West Randolph is doing good work. Mr. Wm. Lord, of Montpelier, lectured for them in the early spring. They have raised a fund of forty dollars to assist those who wish to take the drink cure. They have also sent two barrels of clothing and food to the home in Burlington. Mrs. Kenyon was with them ten days. She gave two chalk talks and they had two medal contests which were well attended.

Dr. Minnie G. Leavitt, of East Hatley, P. Q., lectured at Derby Center recently. A large audience was present, and for an hour and a half she highly interested the people by her easy manner and gifted eloquence. Miss Leavitt has fine qualifications for this work, and it is to be hoped she may be long spared for her chosen profession until she becomes the Canadian Gatling gun of temperance reform.

New unions have been formed in West Burke, Lyndon and East Hardwick.

The summer W. C. T. U. camp-meeting will be held at Spring Grove, in New Haven, August 7-10. This is a lovely place for an "outing," and it is hoped that many white ribbon sisters far and near will attend. In my next letter I will tell you what speakers will be there.

Will not every sister that wears the white ribbon subscribe now for our state paper, the Home Guard, and thus keep in touch with temperance work in Vermont?

I will close with the poem written by Mrs. Esther T. Housh, honorary president of Vermont W. C. T. U., and sent with the names of Vermont officers to Gen. Neal Dow, as a birthday greeting:

"Oh, hero of the 'Pine-tree' state!
Vermonters send thee greeting;
Our mountains green in silence wait
The sunrise Old Katahdin meeting—
That hails thy birth, morn's glad fruition,
To send thee cheers for ninety years
Well spent for Prohibition.

"Two thousand nested homes in valleys fair
This day do reverently call thy name!
The ribbon white does twine the pine branch there,
Dear honored bearer of the Maine Law fame!

OKLAHOMA.

HERE AND THERE.

In the closing hours of this beautiful springtime the reporter is able to glean from faithful correspondents, items that will prove that the W. C. T. U. is keeping the "fires burning upon the altar" in these parts.

Our territorial president, Mrs. M. H. Switzer, has removed from Kingfisher to Enid, one of the thriving towns in the strip. She reports a flourishing union of thirty-two members in her new home, also a Y that holds a social every two weeks, and sustains a reading room and gospel meetings every Sunday, under the leadership of Mrs. Wampler.

The Watonga union is doing its best work among the young folks, about forty of the boys and girls have signed the pledge, and still a younger class of forty-nine have taken the triple pledge.

Mrs. Kate B. Jewett and her husband are engaged in the county in which Watonga is situated, organizing Sunday-schools, and they, believing the temperance work must go hand in hand with Sunday-school work, are doing much to forward our cause.

During the revival season the past winter, in Guthrie, the W. C. T. U. was often referred to by the leaders as examples of true workers for the Master. The M. E. minister took Miss Willard as the central figure for his lenten sermon, describing her personal appearance, as he said he had once traveled four hundred miles with her and ever since then he had had more exalted ideas of womanhood; he was proud to be one of her followers, and could not understand why his whole congregation were not in the procession.

One of the Baptist association meetings in Guthrie sent an invitation to the union of that city, to take part in a temperance mass-meeting Sunday afternoon. A greeting was sent them, also a physician to talk on the effects of alcohol on the brain. The result, the W. C. T. U. was strongly endorsed in the resolutions, and requested to be present at their next meeting, in which the evil effects of tobacco will be discussed.

The Guthrie union appointed committees in each ward to make house to house visitation in order to get the women to improve their privilege of voting for school officials.

The territorial Christian mission held at Kingfisher, resolved that we support no man at the polls friendly to the liquor traffic.

The following resolutions of the Oklahoma City union were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The liquor traffic is the enemy of our homes and all else that is dear to our hearts, and

WHEREAS, The object of the W. C. T. U. is to overthrow this monster, and the quickest and surest way to effect its overthrow is to educate the people on the subject of temperance, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we earnestly urge ministers of our city to inaugurate a union temperance service to be held once a month on Sunday evening, taking the place of the regular evening service; be it further

Resolved, That we withhold our moral and financial support from any and all pastors in this city who refuse to coöperate in this work. Be it further

Resolved, That the members of the different churches represented in this union present to their several pastors a copy of these resolutions, and that they be presented to the press of the city with a request for publication.

The result of this resolution was the organization of a law and order league at the next ministerial meeting. We cannot believe all these resolutions "are but idle tales;" it means that the thoughtful people are being aroused to the encroachment of their arch fiend, and also lets the white-ribboner know where to find their helpers.

Miss Netta Haworth, one of the teachers of the Kickapoo mission, writes that she talks temperance to the people a great deal, and there is a strong sentiment among the Indians against drinking. She says: "It is terrible the way whisky is brought in by white men. The more white men that come about the Indians the more whisky they have in their camps. We just dread the time when this land must be opened for settlement on this account."

We have found Points for Press Workers by our National superintendent of press work so helpful that we wish to ask every union in the territory to furnish their local superintendent of press work with a copy. Send five cents to Lodie E. Reed, 66½ North Penn St., Indianapolis, Ind.

"The middle of the road—keep off the grass"—party of Oklahoma county, met in convention in Oklahoma City, and indorsed without a dissenting voice equal suffrage, nominating a woman for superintendent of public instruction.

MINNESOTA.

DISTRICT AND LOCAL EVENTS.

Willmar union, in the eighth district, has twenty members and worked hard for no-license this spring, holding gospel meetings and distributing literature. Students at the seminary celebrated Neal Dow's birthday with a silver medal contest. On the Sabbath before election, Rev. Mr. Wright addressed large audiences afternoon and evening on gospel truths respecting the liquor traffic, and urged the voters to stand by the right. On election day two prayer-meetings were held, one at six o'clock in the morning and one at three in the afternoon. And yet no-license was defeated. But the union, though defeated, is not discouraged. They have rented a hall for holding gospel temperance meetings and are hoping for a year of more earnest, aggressive work.

One of the most interesting recent events in the ninth district was the seventeenth anniversary meeting of the Minneapolis Central union, the "mother union" of the city, and probably of the state. Several charter members were present and gave reminiscences of the early work; also, persons present gave a brief outline of the temperance work in the city prior to that time, as far back as 1858. The work of the union has been varied, and its influence widely felt. It has brought prominent lecturers to the city, conducted gospel meetings, and latterly, through its influence, the board of education was induced to give cooking a place in the schools; the outing work among the children is another special feature resulting in great good, not only to the children but to wornout mothers and weary shop girls. The Helping Hand union, in the northeast part of this city, sends a good report of work done by its twenty members. Sabbath observance, work among woodmen, White-Ribboner and Temple work being the departments carried on. The superintendent of Sabbath observance being unable to act, the union as a whole took it up, and "found themselves none too many." They stopped Sabbath ball playing by boys who were disturbing sacred services and reported and "worried" a blind pig drugstore, and if it is not effectually routed the mayor and police are to blame. The union has raised over eighteen dollars for temperance work. Three copies of the White Ribboner and two of THE UNION SIGNAL are taken.

The North union of the city reports the temperance Sabbath generally observed by the churches in that part of town, several schools using the triple pledge, and temperance singing and addresses being given. Two enthusiastic temperance sermons have been given this year, one each in a Presbyterian and Congregational church.

Lucy Hayes union lately held an owl social which proved so enjoyable it was repeated. Time and space fail me to tell of its program, but any union wishing for it can have it by sending, with postage stamp enclosed, to Mrs. Frances Neal, 3610 10th Ave., this city.

Richfield union meets monthly, with nearly all members present at each meeting. Having no saloons to fight and being an orderly town, the union has turned its attention to helping others, and sent a large box of clothing and bedding to a frontier minister, and have sent literature to the woods; have held a temperance tea, and are planning a mothers' meeting. Howard Lake union is in good working order, and planning for a series of meetings by Rev. E. O. Taylor, of Chicago. This village holds a temperance mass-meeting bimonthly, given under the auspices of the Howard Temperance Union, organized over twenty years ago by Rev. W. W. Satterlee. No-license was voted again this year, as for the past twenty years, except one twelve months. But alas! a restaurant-keeper has just received a consignment of beer from St. Paul and will sell it by the keg or case.

Maine Prairie union in the eleventh district, is in a country place, yet has twenty-five or thirty members and new ones joining at nearly every meeting. There is a large I. O. G. T. lodge of young people here, and it is a noticeable fact that the best members of the lodge are children of W. C. T. U. mothers. An account of Royalton's energetic work for no-license was given in my last letter, and now the good news comes that the election (no-license) stands in spite of the efforts of the saloon element to break it.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MISS ELIZABETH U. YATES has gone to Kansas to engage in the equal suffrage campaign in that state. The Sun Flower commonwealth is to be congratulated.

THE L. T. L. of Co. 17 regiment of Missouri passed an earnest resolution of sympathy upon the death of Mrs. E. W. Beach, of St. Louis, Mo., who with her husband, had long been associated with the Legion.

THE sixth annual convention of the fifth district of South Dakota, was held in Salem, May 24 to 26, with thirty delegates. The most notable result of the convention was the organization of a promising Y. W. C. T. U.

REV. JAMES A. WOOD, of Vernon, B. C., writes that the conversion of Lizzie Hansel, of Vancouver, is due not to the Salvation Army but to the efforts of Mrs. E. M. Barrett, a white-ribboner, who won her heart to Christ while on a bed of sickness in her life of shame.

DR. CLARA SHAW, superintendent of scientific temperance instruction in the Central union of Chicago, and professor in Herring medical college, is to read a paper on scientific temperance before the international convention of the societies of Christian Endeavor in Cleveland, July 10–15.

DR. C. H. ST. JOHN lectures for the W. C. T. U. upon Heredity at the Ottawa assembly, June 26, and at the Chautauqua assembly, Winfield, Kan., June 22. Dr. St. John is open for a few engagements in August in Illinois, New York and Pennsylvania. His home address is Kansas City, Kan.

THE converging of lines of Christian work has again been shown in the meeting of the Congregational association at Montrose, Col. Mrs. S. R. Pickett, president of the Woman's State Home Missionary Society, of that Church, gave an address on "A New Departure in Missions." As long time president of the southwestern district of the W. C. T. U., and now its corresponding secretary, she was in a position to give a conclusive argument, which she did, for every social and political, as well as religious help toward bringing Christ's kingdom into Colorado.

THE local temperance union of Champaign, Ill., has taken up the work of sending a petition next fall to the legislature at Springfield, asking it to abolish the saloons within a circumference of the University of Illinois. It is intended to have the petition signed by one hundred thousand voters and a large number of non-voters. Here the W. C. T. U. and Y's have a chance to help along the cause by increasing the number of signers. Whether the petition gains the point which it is intended for, or not, ought at this time not to be taken into consideration. It will, at any rate, stir up the state of Illinois, and show the people that the little as well as big folks of Champaign are on the right side.

MRS. JULIA A. CHASE, superintendent of work among soldiers in Kansas, writes: "I accepted Chaplain Robinson's invitation to go to Ft. Leavenworth and talk temperance to the soldiers, and spoke in the Post Chapel, organizing a 'union' among the soldiers. I organized one there some years ago, but the Leavenworth Y. M. C. A. took up the work, afterward letting it go—so I had to do it over again. Oh! I do wish the people at large, especially those in cities near 'Armory Posts' would think more kindly of our soldier boys. Many are rough and dissolute, it is true, so are many college students, but many, very many of our soldiers are as fine young men as there are, coming from good homes, gentlemen, and mothers' boys, and they feel the social ostracism keenly. Really, it is no wonder that some become discouraged and think there is no use in a soldier trying to keep his manhood, as no one gives him credit for being a man anyway. There are social distinctions in the army, the men expect that, it is the outside ostracism which hurts. The union in the United States military prison is still doing grand work, although not holding meetings as regularly as formerly. There were one hundred and fifty-one members before the dozen or more who joined last Sunday. I spoke in the prison chapel in the afternoon and had a long talk with as many as chose to tarry afterward. Oh! the homesick, heartsick boys,—some not yet twenty-one years old—who unburdened their hearts to me on that day. Good magazines and papers are still thankfully received. Those intended for the soldiers in the 'garrison' may be addressed to Chaplain Geo. Robinson, Ft. Leavenworth, those for the 'prison' to Chaplain Charles C. Pierce, military prison, Ft. Leavenworth."

Cor. Secy's Notes.

We are pleased to record that much honor has come to the National W. C. T. U. through the presentation of our interests at the International Temperance Congress at Staten Island by Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden, of whose address and committee work we hear much praise.

Two official changes have transpired in the late conventions. Mrs. Hughes, president of Arizona, has retired, and given place to Mrs. Jos. Watrous, of Troupe, and our old friend, Narcissa White, of Pennsylvania, now Mrs. Narcissa White Kinney, of Oregon, follows Mrs. Riggs, of that state. We welcome those friends known and unknown, loved and to be loved, to our official circles, and trust the retiring presidents, realizing, as no others can, the conditions and wants of the state organizations, will be the strong right hand supporters of the new officers.

A delightful letter from Mrs. Maud L. Green enables us to tell you a little of her work during the winter. After our last National Convention she, with Miss Clothier and Miss Dickson, state superintendent of Y work, went through the state of Indiana, a meeting being held with the children in the afternoon, at which a fee of five cents was charged. The admission fee for the evening was ten, fifteen or twenty-five cents, as seemed well. Chalk talks were given at both, and the money raised by which a Y conference and lectures could follow later. From Indiana they went to New York, where they labored for a time with Mr. and Mrs. Barnes. The ring of the true messenger is heard in Mrs. Green's words: "I have striven to enter every open door, speaking in churches, halls, missions and parlors; sometimes to the very rich and cultured, sometimes in the mission of the slums and sometimes to the city's neglected babyhood on the streets, with a saloon for a background. It has been a wonderful winter to me, rich in God's gold of experience, but poor, often, in man's silver." For some time she has been in Wisconsin, but of her peculiar experience in that state I give you her own words:

"I was out driving with my hostess about two weeks ago and had a forcible illustration of the need of our work. A drunken man on a beer wagon belonging to one of the breweries, came running his horses down the street, and although given all the road it was not enough for his muddled brain, and his wagon crashed into our carriage, throwing me out violently upon the wheels and horse. It is needless to say that I did not speak the next day! I have suffered much from it, there being some slight concussion about the chest, but I have met all my appointments and feel more strongly than ever before the need of removing the 'accursed thing in our midst.'"

We feel called upon to reprint the temperance resolution of the Southern General Conference upon which we made comment a few weeks since. Miss Nellie N. Somerville, corresponding secretary of Mississippi, calls our attention to the fact that only the New Orleans Advocate printed the resolutions correctly, and asks the correction which we are glad to make, praying the baptism of the Holy Ghost upon the church north and south, for as Gen. Neal Dow said at Staten Island, "the settlement of the liquor question is with the church," and consequently the building of the kingdom of God upon the earth.

GENERAL CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That we urge upon all our members a perpetual memory of the solemn vow that rests upon them to abstain wholly from the use of intoxicating liquors, except in cases of necessity.

Resolved, That we lay upon the consciences of our preachers the duty of instructing our people concerning the moral turpitude of the liquor traffic and concerning the evils of even the most moderate use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

Resolved, That our book editor and book agent be requested to provide, and to do what may be in their power toward circulating among our people tracts, pamphlets and books bearing upon the various phases of the temperance question.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

Treasurer's Corner.

While the women are seeking the seaside and other health resorts to escape the heat and toil of town and city, we are glad to report that the National, state and local work is not neglected. Many speakers are in the field and the treasurer is pleased to note that on many of the programs the question of finance finds a place, and as we have all confidence in the good judgment and fidelity of the women along any line that enlists thought, we are hopeful of great improvement in financial methods in union work.

Crete, Neb., W. C. T. U., has just sent ten cents per member; Haverhill, Mass., sends seventy cents for National fund, so also does Mary P Whitney, Toledo, send contributions to same fund; Geneva, O., W. C. T. U., sends fifty cents through its treasurer; Sycamore, Ill., sends ten cents for each of twelve ladies of their union.

From Harriman, Tenn., comes one dollar, sent by Mrs. Thayer, the fourth district president. She writes: "I inclose as a thank-offering ten cents for each organization in our district. Six local, three county and one district, making one dollar." This is a novel idea. She also expresses great interest in plans of finance, and adds: "Tennessee has less than five hundred members. Local dues are fixed at one dollar, and of this, fifty cents goes to the state. At present we make an assessment on each union of one dollar, and take district members where no local organization exists, and this, with collections at conventions, are all the funds we can command for our district work at present."

A cheering letter comes from Oregon with $25, first installment of dues for 1894. The treasurer writes: "Times have been very hard in our state, and we have found it almost impossible to keep our work going at all, but we are prayerful and hopeful to come out all right, and hope, with God's blessing, that under our new president, Mrs. Kinney, new life and energy may be diffused throughout our state."

This "Cornerer" took a run into Ohio for the ninth district convention at Beallsville, at the call of their gifted president, Miss Belle Brown. At Barnesville our train was stopped by a blockade caused by a coal train, which was held by strikers on the main track. An accumulation of trains filled all side tracks, and after waiting an hour we found the train load of state militia were held at Cambridge to look after strikers there, and that the probability was that our train would not move for several hours. This meant failure to reach convention in time to speak that night. A livery carriage was ordered and a ride over the hills of eighteen miles brought us to the convention, where we found a goodly number of delegates and listened to some excellent papers, notably the address of the president. Tracks were cleared next day and we reached Cambridge to find to our surprise an old friend in Mrs. Rev. Moore, where we enjoyed a pleasant home. We had a good time in the opera house and found the women in earnest and doing good work. Saturday we held a pleasant service at the jail, it being flower mission day.

At Newark I found another dear old friend, Mrs. J. M. Graham, who has raised nearly seven hundred dollars for the Temple and is aiming at $1,000. She is a fine elocutionist, with a good voice, and has several excellent lectures; any union that wishes to arrange for an entertainment upon generous terms should write to Mrs. Graham. The ladies of Newark know how to care for a speaker. Flowers, drives and many other courtesies testified to this.

The women were a unit in their words of confidence and love for their faithful president, Mrs. Monroe.

Our Library Table.

The current issue of THE FORUM devotes some of its space to the woman-suffrage question in two articles. The first, by Matthew Hale, will without doubt arouse animated discussions in THE FORUM'S wide circle of readers and not a little sharp criticism, as the title of Mr. Hale's article reads, "The Useless Risk of the Ballot for Women." He spends a good deal of time explaining the common-law disabilities under which women have been in some states regarding property rights, and how these disabilities have been gradually removed, and then goes on to say: "Women, whether married or single, have the same rights before the law as men. In no respect are they inferior or at a disadvantage. It may be said that these changes have been accomplished by means of agitation and by woman's influence. If this be conceded, does it not show that woman's influence is just as powerful and effective without the ballot as it could be with it? Does it not show that the appeal by women to men's sense of justice and fairness has been as effectual in securing their rights as if women had actually participated in the excitement and labor of running elections or making laws as legislators?" No, it does not! What has woman's "influence" done to protect herself, her home and her country from the onslaughts of the liquor fiend compared with what her ballot would have done? True, by her tears and her prayers, by her "powerful and effective" influence she has created and nurtured such a sentiment against the open saloon and the law-covered brothel as never would have existed had she refused to hear God's call to make war on them; had she been permitted to share in "the excitement and labor of running elections or making laws as legislators," the elections would not be such farces on justice and right as they are to-day, and the laws would make it safe for the boys and girls to come and go in the cities of our land. Mr. Hale expresses himself as afraid of the "prostitute vote" if woman is given the ballot. Let him look at home. Who makes "the prostitute"? Who was it thought of the "age of consent," and by an iron hand holds that age down as low as possible? If the present "prostitute vote" (for that crime includes male as well as female) could be exposed and counted, the pure manhood and womanhood of the country would turn away in sorrow and shame to see what soiled hands have written the laws and handled the ballots of this free America. His last sentence is complacent, but he knows not whereof he speaks: "There is little doubt, I apprehend, that the intelligent and patriotic men and women of New York, after weighing well all that can be said on either side of the question, will come to the conclusion that the general welfare of the state will not be promoted by imposing upon women the burden of participating in practical politics, by conferring upon them the suffrage." It is the intelligence, the patriotism and the purity of thought of the nineteenth century that everywhere advocates the suffrage of women, clearly recognizing, as must any intelligent, patriotic, pure and fair-minded citizen, that when it refuses to womanhood the share in the making of laws and administration of government it imposes on her burdens greater than she can well bear, since a one-sided vote has thus far meant danger to herself and her children, danger to country and the breaking of the laws of God. A one-sided vote accompanies the double standard of morals that has cursed the race long enough, and when the mother's ballot drops in beside the father's there will be a fair chance of seeing the day when "our sons may be as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be as corner-stones, polished after the similitude of a palace," and then will we cry out with the psalmist, "happy is that people that is in such a case!"

THE POLITICAL ECONOMY OF NATURAL LAW. By Henry Wood. This author's writings command attention by the strength of their quiet logic and judicial clearness. Just now, when newspapers are clamoring over "the situation" as regards this and that economic problem, when party-bound thinkers are sending out through the press their would-be solutions of the difficulties, it is refreshing to sit down with Henry Wood and study causes and results without heat or haste. He recognizes law not alone in the natural world but in the world of business action and his endeavor is to outline "a political economy which is natural and practical, rather than artificial and theoretical." Of all the books that have come to our Library Table touching this so severely and too often uselessly agitated theme, the one in question certainly contains more of helpfulness, practical sound sense and righteous principle than any other.

Bicycle Truths.

It is a settled, fixed truth, about the certain quality of which there can be no doubt, that American skill and enterprise have carried bicycle design and construction far ahead of that of any country on the globe, and that the first in the field, have been principally responsible for this result. The same enterprise that started and made a place for this great industry in America has kept these peerless wheels at the head of every improvement in design and method of construction, and has given them a rating as the standard bicycles of the world. In every essential bicycle quality, they are not only unequalled, but unapproached.

Columbias,

THE CROWN LAVENDER SALTS.

The following letter, written by a patient in St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, to The Crown Perfumery Co., of 177 New Bond St., speaks for itself:

"About two years ago a lady gave me, whilst I was an inmate of King's College Hospital, a half full bottle of The Crown Lavender Salts, and it proved a Godsend to me through many a weary day and night, but it is empty at last. It has been borrowed, and half emptied, and fallen, and the salts have been spilt, and I am completely lost without it.

"Hundreds of people have asked me where it came from and how I came by it, and I showed them the Crown on the stopper, and the address blown in the bottle. I want to know if you can put me a little in if I send the bottle, only a little, until I am better and buy a fresh one, as I am lost without it. If you can do it for a few pence, I will send the bottle and the stamps. I need scarcely say I am very poor.

"Signed, J. A. CONWAY."

The great popularity of These Famous Lavender Salts has led certain unprincipled dealers to get up inferior imitations for the sole purpose of making more money out of you, and which only disappoint the purchaser. Be not deceived! Be sure you get the genuine! Sold only in crown stoppered bottles, as shown above.

A GREAT MOTHER

THE INDEPENDENT, MAY 24.

A Great Mother: Sketches of Madam Willard. By her daughter, Frances E. Willard, and her kinswoman, Minerva Brace Norton. With an introduction by Lady Henry Somerset. Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. Chicago. $1.50.

This volume, delightful in itself and delightful in the biographic incidents it has collected in its pages, is a tribute to a noble woman and an ideal American mother. So long as biographies of this character can be written of persons who have lived out their lives in our American homes in the simple strength and dignity which characterized Madam Willard, we cannot say that the dignity or simplicity of American life has fled from it.

Madam Willard was descended, in the sixth generation, from Theophilus Eaton, first Governor of New Haven. The story of her childhood and family is a fascinating one, which, in this volume, has fallen to hands well able to tell it with the graces of an affluent literary style. It begins at Churchville, N. Y., varies into the romantic scenery of the Lake Winnepesaakee, to Danville and Middlebury, Vt., thence into the Genesee in Central New York; thence, by another long jump, to Oberlin, O., soon to be followed by a yet longer one to Beloit, Wis., and back to the final and more permanent home at Evanston, in the suburbs of Chicago. In all these varied relations her life was full of spring, of happy resource, and of noble superiority to circumstances. Her home was, in its strength, simplicity and Christian ideals, just the school for Miss Frances E. Willard to develop in. The daughter and mother are in one line and (with differences) surprisingly alike. The story of the "great mother" is told fully, with much incident and with much pleasing delay on the other members of the family. It is a noble illustration of that in our American home life which makes us feel that they are the best homes to have been born in, homes with moral energy enough in them for the redemption of the country from all its present afflictions, and with a good surplus remaining over to expend on the redemption of the world. The volume is richly illustrated with family portraits and heliotypes of the family homes.

WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, JUNE 2, 1894.

A Great Mother. By Frances E. Willard and Minerva Brace Norton. Cloth; 297 pages; 6x9: $1.50; Chicago, Woman's Temperance Pub. Association; Detroit, Hunt & Eaton.

Lady Henry Somerset in her graceful introduction says that "Madam Willard was one of the best products of New England nature and nurture." That noble mother is the subject of this beautiful sketch. The volume will reveal the origin of the high moral and spiritual characteristics, as well as intellectual clearness and calmness of her brilliant daughter. The traits of her daughter which have made her so eminent will be seen also in her "great mother." As a simple revelation of the inner life of Mrs. Willard it is a valuable contribution to the literature of womanhood and home. The sparkling rhetorical style of the writer lends charm to the materials embodied. As biography, and instruction in matters domestic, religion and education it will take high rank. We hope it will reach a sale of half a million.

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE ADVOCATE.

"A Great Mother" is the title given to a volume of sketches of Madam Willard by her daughter, Frances E. Willard, and her kinswoman, Minerva Brace Norton, with an introduction by Lady Henry Somerset. The account of Madam Willard's childhood, youth and early training; of her early religious experience and married life; of her children and widowhood; of her sympathetic relations with the young; of her love for the Bible; of her prayers; of her literary favorites; of her correspondence; of her triumphant death—all these and many more particulars, given with loving appreciation and fidelity, will possess great interest for the many friends of the truly "great mother," and for the world-wide constituency of her gifted and eloquent daughter. The handsome volume, which contains 297 pages, is dedicated to "the white-ribbon women of the world, their husbands and their children." It is published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, Chicago. Price, $1.50.

CAMPAIGN ECHOES

A well-printed book, neatly and strongly bound, is "Campaign Echoes." It is the autobiography of Mrs. Letitia Youmans, the pioneer of the white-ribbon movement in Canada. It is written by the request of the Provincial Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Ontario, with an introduction by Miss Frances E. Willard, indorsed by Lady Henry Somerset. Though an invalid, Mrs. Youmans has written an interesting history of her life, and the movement in which she was engaged. This substantial and entertaining volume is worthy of a wide circulation.—Boston Star.

"LADY GAY AND HER SISTER," by Mrs. George Archibald, is a sequel to "Lady Gay," published as a serial in Our Little Men and Women. The two little maids, quaint, wise and bubbling over with fun, will remind more than one mother of the children in her home. They are live children, with whom any other little man or woman will be glad to be acquainted.

Price 75 cents.

Signal Notes.

In the province of Canterbury, Eng., there are one thousand parishes in which liquor saloons have been voted out, the voter being the landlord.

Count Tolstoi never drinks wines nor smokes. He lives entirely on bread, vegetables, fruit and grain, and uses a beverage made from hot water and raisins.

The United Kingdom Alliance for the legislative suppression of the liquor traffic in the British Isles, organized forty-one years ago, was the direct outcome of the Maine law.

During his remarks at the May meeting of the Salvation Army in London, General Booth reported that the army was in forty-two countries and colonies; with 1,997 corps and 6,443 officers, a gain of almost a hundred in each over last year.

Nearly all the official evidence given to English opium commission in India was to the effect that opium is not harmful. The unofficial and impartial evidence was decidedly the reverse. The opium smokers themselves are living witnesses of the truth of the latter.

The fact that three Canadian provinces have given decisive votes for prohibition has not yet had any decided effect in decreasing the drink bill. The revenue received from liquor last year exceeds that of the year before by nearly half a million dollars, being a total of $8,444,502. Perhaps this may be accounted for by the fact that the exports have greatly increased.

At the recent commencement exercises in Hampton Institute the valedictory address was given by a colored student from Bermuda who, though married, had worked his way through the school. The work at the Institute has not deteriorated since the death of its founder, General Armstrong, but goes "marching on" with increased power for good as shown by the year's record.

A convention composed of the representatives of the rulers of Great Britain, Germany, Belgium, Denmark, France and the Netherlands, first gathered at The Hague November 16, 1887, to consider the means of remedying the evils of the drink traffic among the fishermen in the North Sea. As a result the liquor traffic among the fishermen has been forbidden, and later conventions in February, 1893, and April, 1894, ratified the orders.

Comparing church revenues in Scotland with the sum spent in liquor in that country, the Scottish Reformer finds that while the three leading churches received 14,000,000 pounds, the wealth of Scotland was depleted 129,000,000 pounds by the drink traffic in the same period—ten years. It calls for leaders with the courage of a Knox to concentrate their efforts for the removal of the debasing, depleting traffic, which would bring about an increase in the revenues of the church and happier conditions for the home and country.

The compulsory education law of New York just passed goes into effect January, 1895. Its main provisions are that children between eight and twelve years must attend a public, private or parochial school or be instructed at home during the whole school year; between twelve and fourteen years, during eighty days, one-half of the legal school year; between fourteen and sixteen, they must attend school when not lawfully employed. Children not in proper mental or physical condition are excepted. Fines are imposed on parents or guardians for violation of the law.

A writer in The Congregationalist, commenting on the decline of religious interest among the hitherto docile and kindly natives of the Hawaiian Islands, owing to the political troubles, says that it will require many years of faithful labor by self-sacrificing white men and women to restore the religious condition to what it was even twenty years ago. The natives have become indifferent, more indolent, and resent foreign interference in politics and religion. But he finds many hopeful signs in the continued devotion of the faithful ones in the fifty-seven native churches with their native pastors, and church rolls numbering four thousand names, with three thousand in Sunday-schools. The Hawaiian Evangelical Association has strong reason to hope that under the new and settled form of government Christianity will receive a new impetus.

"Dirt defies the king."—

If the old proverb be true, SAPOLIO is greater than royalty itself: Try it in your next house-cleaning: Grocers keep it.

DO YOU LIVE IN GREASE?

As a true patriot and citizen you should naturalize yourself by using the best inventions of the day for removing such a charge. To live in Grease is utterly unnecessary when SAPOLIO is sold in all the stores, and abolishes grease and dirt.

EVERY LADY OR AGENT who sends us 10 cts. and the names and addresses of five good housekeepers will receive one of our $9.60 package of ELECTRIC SOLDERING PLATE, FREE. Don't miss this rare chance but send 10 cts. and names and addresses at once as this Special Offer is made to introduce it into thousands of new homes. The regular price of same is 25 cts. ELECTRIC SOLDERING PLATE is the greatest discovery of the age. It mends Copper, Lead, Brass Pipe, Tinware, Electric Wires, and in fact every article that solder will mend. If your Boiler, Dish Pan, Tea Kettle, Coffee or Tea Pot or Pail leaks you can mend it at home without any tools, rosin or acid, and it makes no difference if the article to be mended is greasy or dirty. It makes a neat and thorough patch, and any man, woman and child can use it. Each plate contains 132 quarter-inch squares, equal to $9.60 worth for 25 cts. as any tin-smith would charge you 5 cts. (often 10 cts.) for mending a small hole or break, so that 192 holes that this plate will mend would save you $9.60. Don't fail to send for a sample, give it a thorough trial and you will order more. We wish every one to understand that the soldering plate is an entirely new article, different in every respect from anything ever offered to the public, being the result of a large amount of study and experiment on the part of the inventor. It is something that will sell again and again over the same territory, as those who buy will be sure to recommend it to their neighbors. Men, women, boys and girls are making $45 to $75 per week clear, without any capital. Send for a package at once as per above special offer.

This 10ct. offer is good till July 12, 1894, ONLY. After that 25cts.

PATENTS

FOR INVENTIONS.

Equal with the interest of those having claims against the government is that of INVENTORS, who often lose the benefit of valuable inventions because of the incompetency or inattention of the attorneys employed to obtain their patents. Too much care cannot be exercised in employing competent and reliable solicitors to procure patents, for the value of a patent depends greatly, if not entirely, upon the care and skill of the attorney.

With the view of protecting inventors from worthless or careless attorneys, and of seeing that inventions are well protected by valid patents, we have retained counsel expert in patent practice, and therefore are prepared to Obtain Patents in the United States and all Foreign Countries, Conduct Interferences, Make Special Examinations, Prosecute Rejected Cases, Register Trade-Marks and Copyrights, Render Opinions as to Scope and Validity of Patents, Prosecute and Defend Infringement Suits, Etc., Etc.

If you have an invention on hand send a sketch or photograph thereof, together with a brief description of the important features, and you will be at once advised as to the best course to pursue. Models are seldom necessary. If others are infringing on your rights, or if you are charged with infringement by others, submit the matter to us for a reliable OPINION before acting on the matter.

Publisher's Notes.

"The FELLOWSHIP of SUFFERING." Bible Reading for June.

Who is not touched tenderly by the suggestive title of the June Bible Reading—a fitting theme for these days of burden bearing. Read it amid your tears, and you will learn that "though tribulation may be a means, it is never an end. The key-note of life is joy, never sorrow nor pain. Every human heart has proved or will one day prove this. Yet how can pain be a means towards this end?" The answer you will find in the June Bible Reading, by Celia Richmond. Read her sweet, comforting words, and it will help you set a truer estimate upon "the spiritual growth which comes through pain and struggle."

"MY PAPER OF PAPERS."

"The Union Signal is my paper of papers. I read it from top to bottom, from cover to cover, and find in it the embodiment of everything that is 'true and lovely and of good report.'"

"There is nothing else that is making sentiment for our cause as The Union Signal is."

"The Union Signal is such a help to me, and my husband says, 'We must try and pay for The Union Signal; so many new ideas are given us just from the stories; the truths are given in such a form as they would not be if given in another way.'"

"THE CROWNING RECOMMENDATION."

A journal commanding the talent and moral power massed in Our Day is what ministers, teachers, thinking people ought to avail themselves of, and the astonishingly low price at which this publication is offered, places it in reach of all who really desire to take it. The crowning recommendation in favor of this periodical is that Joseph Cook is its editor.—From the Free Methodist.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The tariff bill has passed its twelfth week of debate in the Senate.

The United States gold reserve has reached the lowest point, a fact which gives the treasury officials no alarm.

The American Railway Union have threatened a general boycott of Pullman palace and dining cars in behalf of the strikers.

The anti-option bill, which would lessen grain speculation by providing for actual delivery of sales, has passed the lower House of Congress.

At the Anti-lords' Conference in Leeds, England, a resolution was passed calling for a government measure to abolish the lord's veto power.

A dispatch announces the arrival of Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell in San Francisco last week, a fortnight earlier than expected.

Three hundred members of the House of Commons have just signed an address in favor of a treaty of arbitration between Great Britain and the United States.

Many of the leading colleges and universities have held their graduating exercises the past week. The largest classes ever graduated are reported in many instances.

An Arctic expedition, for the relief of Lieutenant Peary, numbering six and headed by Mr. Henry G. Bryant, of the Philadelphia Geographical Society, has started for the far north.

The death of Prof. Herbert Tuttle, of the chair of modern European history in the Cornell university, June 21, is announced. Professor Tuttle was the son-in-law of Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, of Hillsboro.

Mr. Allison's Senate bill, providing that for twenty-five years all disputes between Great Britain and the United States shall be settled by arbitration, has received the endorsement of leading members of the British Parliament.

Suit has been brought by Charles Norton, of Cedar Rapids, Ia., against Brown & Co., druggists, for selling liquor to Mrs. Norton, who, while under its influence, almost murdered her ten-year-old adopted boy, for which she is under indictment.

President Carnot, of France, was assassinated Sunday night at Lyons, France, by a knife in the hands of a young Italian named Santo, an anarchist. The dastardly act is supposed to be in revenge for the death of the anarchists recently executed.

Abdul Aziz is the recognized successor to the late Sultan of Morocco. The Spanish ship which visited Morocco for the purpose of securing a payment of the indemnity was obliged to return without it. The new Sultan, however, announces his intention of meeting the claim.

The Senate bribery investigation committee has closed its examination of witnesses. Those who refused to testify have been indicted for disobedience, which practically amounts to nothing, and aside from the information gained by the public no direct result has been attained.

It seems that in Illinois a rule different from other states prevails regarding the interpretation of the Sunday law. Worldly labor and business are only prohibited in case they disturb the peace and good order of society, and this has been assigned as the reason for the veto by Mayor Hopkins last week of the Sunday closing law just passed by the Chicago council.

With the investigations made by the state senate committee in regard to police bribery in New York, the heart of corruption in municipal politics has been laid bare. Dock owners, produce merchants and others who block sidewalks, as well as the darkest violators of law, have found immunity from arrest by systematic contributions to the law enforcers.

ON page 13 will be found the form for the order of the full report of the recent temperance congress, held at Prohibition Park, Staten Island. So representative and eloquent a body of temperance workers has seldom been brought together, and the report of their speeches will make a highly interesting volume.

ANOTHER great mass-meeting was held in Queen's Hall, London, June 9, which was more enthusiastic, if possible, than the farewell meeting to Miss Willard a month previous. The subject was woman's suffrage. The five leading societies of women in England coöperated, including the temperance association, and Lady Henry Somerset presided. Among the score of eloquent speakers was our own Miss Willard, who seems to delight an English audience as much as an American. Miss Willard playfully called her speech a "postscript to her farewell meeting." Space alone forbids a fuller mention of this great meeting, which seems to presage the day when women will have the full franchise in England. Would that the United States were equally aroused on this vital point.

JULY 4, 1887, just seven years ago, the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association put forth a new publication—the Oak and Ivy Leaf. It was cordially received from the first, and soon became indispensable to the working force of the temperance young women. The name was selected because the oak and the ivy were two of the symbols of the Y. W. C. T. U., indicating strength and tenacity; but objections to the title have always prevailed and various efforts have been made to find just the right name to take its place. Now it has been found, at least every one consulted so far seems to think so, and next month the Oak and Ivy Leaf will be superseded by the Young Women, which is in many respects almost a new paper. It will be a larger, handsomer sheet, with a specially designed cover. The subscription price will be fifty cents instead of twenty-five, which has never covered the cost of publication. We believe the Y's and their friends will be very proud of the new and enlarged official organ. Miss Jennie A. Stewart, the editor, has spared no effort to make the initial number of Young Women popular and attractive. Many new departments, such as College Corner, Kindred Societies, Girls at Home, What to Read and News of the Month, have been introduced, and the best of the old features of the Oak and Ivy Leaf have been retained. All success to the new Y paper!

WE are indebted to our good friend, Josiah W. Leeds, for information concerning a very important judicial condemnation in Philadelphia a month ago. This was nothing less than the banishment of the atrocious Police Gazette and other immoral sheets from the news-stands and all public places of the city. Mr. Leeds was the prosecutor in the case, which has been before the courts a year. He says: "A good deal of care seems to have been taken to avoid spreading the information of this result. Only the Ledger, of the Philadelphia dailies, gave a fair report; the other papers generally ignoring it, or making very inconspicuous mention of it. The knowledge of the formal outlawry of those sheets in a city of over a million inhabitants, if sent out by the Associated Press, as it should have been, would, I believe, have helped the cause of good morals in a hundred towns and cities." Mr. Leeds truly adds: "It is such papers as the Police Gazette that are the favorite reading in the houses of ill-fame, and this reading does a great deal to keep up the supply of inmates and patrons." Would that every city had a Josiah Leeds to sweep away this crime-breeding and mind polluting literature from the news-stands and free reading-rooms! It is fitting that the city of Brotherly Love should lead off in this crusade for clean reading matter, which we hope is the initial movement of a universal purification.

WE are greatly encouraged by the pronounced action on temperance taken by all the great church organizations through their representative councils. We have already noticed the favorable position of the two Presbyterian assemblies and the Southern Methodist Conference in their recent sessions, and now comes the good news of advanced position on the part of the Cumberland Presbyterian Assembly, which convened last week in Eugene City, Ore. A sentence in the preamble of the temperance resolutions is so strong and pointed that we give it just as it reads: "While emphasizing total abstinence as the obvious duty of all, we believe that intemperance finds its chief encouragement and strength in the sanctions of law. The policy of legalizing and protecting sin and receiving revenue therefrom is so clearly opposed to the plain teaching of God's word, and so repugnant to the enlightened Christian conscience of this age, as to merit the unqualified condemnation of every follower of Christ." The three strong resolutions which were earnestly discussed and almost unanimously adopted, protested against the federal tax of liquors, thereby making not only the government, but every citizen a partner in the iniquitous traffic; they also urged the greater dissemination of temperance literature and commended the W. C. T. U.

"OUR Chieftain is home!" Countless happy hearts have sung that ringing refrain the past week. Every leading paper in the land has printed long interviews or sketches headed, "Miss Willard has returned," but none other than the great white-ribbon host can say, "OUR CHIEFTAIN has returned." Yet we would not be selfish because our leader is broad enough to lead every great cause and to be loved and honored by all good people, as has been demonstrated by the memorable meetings that have welcomed her already in New York and Boston, and that are yet to welcome her in Portland, Montreal and Chicago. Indeed, if it had not been for the fear that her strength was not sufficient for the strain, every large city in the land would delight to extend an ovation. Just as we go to press, Monday morning, comes a charming report from the pen of John Lloyd Thomas of the great meeting in New York city, Thursday evening, June 21. To our great regret we shall be obliged to hold this over to next weeks' paper, but it is so good that it will keep. In that issue we will also give an account of the Boston Breakfast, served at high noon, Saturday, June 23, in Miss Willard's honor. Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, a moving spirit in the New York celebration, writes: "It was a grand ovation—the men said, 'An ideal meeting.'" Another brief correspondent writes: "Among the many beautiful bouquets presented none was more attractive than that sent by Dr. Wagnalls and Dr. Funk, of The Voice, whose gifted editor, Mr. E. J. Wheeler was present. Among other distinguished guests were Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Charles A. Briggs, and the charming vocalist Miss Emma Thursby, also Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Louis A. Banks, of Brooklyn, Rev. Dr. Boole, and many other distinguished ministers. A party of white-ribboners, headed by Dr. and Mrs. La Fetra, came over from Washington, D. C., and Philadelphia was well represented. As the train for Boston stopped at Meriden, Conn., the platform was crowded with men and women of the W. C. T. U.; bouquets were presented to Misses Willard and Gordon, the cornet played 'America,' and the chorus of voices rose above the roar of the train." THE UNION SIGNAL editors and National officers at Chicago are awaiting Miss Willard's arrival, July 7, as patiently as possible, but their honest sentiment was expressed in the welcome salute which they sent last Wednesday on learning of the vessel's landing: "Westward, ho! our watchword." One single item in the New York meeting will not "keep," as it has been already generously spread by the press, and that is that our beloved leader is now Frances E. Willard, L.L. D. that deserved and dignified title having been bestowed by Ohio Wesleyan University, Dr. J. W. Bashford, president.

THE TRUE LIBERTY.

BY KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

ALL o'er the land the bells ring out
In joy of Freedom's dawn;
All o'er our land glad voices shout
To hail this festal morn;
The cannon booms its jubilee,
Our flag floats on the air;
Glad praise of glorious liberty
Is blended with glad prayer.

But hark! What means that undertone
Which echoes on our ear;
A wailing, sobbing, dreary moan,
A voice of woe and fear?
It pulses 'neath our gladsome mirth
Like ocean's deep-toned swell,
It rises o'er the broad, green earth,
It sinks to lowest hell.

Discordant jangling, full of woe,
Of heart-break and of tears,
A sullen murmur, high or low,
Which tells of anguished fears;
It tells of wrongs long ages old,
Wrongs which are ripening fast;
It tells of misery made bold;
It speaks from out the past:—

"Oh, nation, called of God to life,
Boast not that power is thine;
The very air with doom is rife,
Blood stains thy hands like wine;
Unmindful of thy heritage,
Oppressor of the weak,
Thy doom through every by-gone age
The world's sad voices speak.

"Why boast thyself of Freedom's grace
When slavery fills the land,
A sorer bondage of disgrace
Than binds a shackled hand;
Thy sons have sold themselves for naught,
Thy daughters captive be;
The tyranny of wrong has bought
Thy God-giv'n liberty.

"Thy capitol looks down upon
The struggle mad for place,
Thy ballot-box has but become
The symbol of disgrace;
Bribes fill the hands pledged to uphold
The nation's glorious fame;
Might maketh right, wrong waxeth bold,
While 'patriot' means—a name.

"Up! purge thee from thy cherished sin,
Cast down thy calves of gold;
A nation's wealth lies all within;
Its prowess must be told
In hearts that beat for truth and right
Regardless of the cost;
Its mission is to vanquish sin;
Its aim—to save the lost.

"Yet there is hope; God hath not left
Thy land to darkness drear;
Still, through the night of sorrow cleft,
Rays of His dawn appear;
Arise, then, in His strength alone
'Land of the larger Hope'—
Bind thy fair shores to Justice's throne
And, bold, with evil cope."

So speak the voices of the past,
So speaks Hope's voice of cheer;
Our souls take courage from the last
To battle with our fear;
Our land shall yet its glory don,
Our nation shall be free;
The stately dome at Washington
Shall stand for—Liberty.

Chicago, Ill.

A NEW DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

BY MRS. O. W. SCOTT.

A span of sleek horses came trotting along the dusty country road which led past "the old Whitney place" one morning late in June. Mr. Whitney himself was in the field, and paused, pushing back his straw hat and wiping the sweat from his forehead as he watched the spirited creatures driven by a coachman in livery.

Mr. Still,—the Hon. Mr. Still, if you please—occupied the carriage, and leaned forward, beckoning with one pudgy white hand as the horses suddenly stopped.

"Drive a little nearer, Pat," said he, and as the wheels paused in a clump of daisies near the fence over which the farmer leaned in neighborly attitude, he exchanged salutations with impressive cordiality.

After inquiries concerning hay and crops he said: "I came on business this morning, Mr. Whitney. I hear you have a son just through college. He's a fine reader, I suppose?"

"Why, yes, John's a pretty fair reader I guess. Had plenty of practice these four years back," replied the farmer.

"Ah, yes, exactly. I understand he goes ahead of the professors. Well, tell him I have him down to read the Declaration of Independence at our little celebration here in Hopedale."

The adjective "little" impressed Mr. Whitney, for the whole country side had been discussing Mr. Still's plans for observing the "Glorious Fourth," and knew that fine speakers, bands, decorations and fire-works were to be imported at his expense.

"Yes," continued the honorable gentleman, "no such occasion is quite complete without the grand old Declaration. Let him shorten it if he chooses—unimportant passages, you know—but give us the main thing.

"Shall be glad to know your son, Mr. Whitney. Hope he won't be a preacher or teacher—mere scramble for a living—put him into business! Be glad to give him my—my advice, any time. Good morning! Drive on, Pat!"

Mr. Whitney took up his scythe again to finish mowing among the loose stones, nature's "rockery," on a New England farm, and with the pungent incense from fallen buttercups and golden-rod the farmer's thoughts mingled agreeably.

"He might help John, that's a fact. Hard times don't seem to touch him, and it's quite likely he could find a situation for John by just turning his hand over. It'll seem good to be gettin' back some o' the money we've laid out on his schoolin'. If mother, now"—— By "mother" he meant his wife.

John had been away during the forenoon, but was at the dinner table when Mr. Still's invitation was repeated.

His father gave it with his usual moderation, making long pauses for eating and drinking, so that when he finished John had a clear view of horses, carriage, coachman and portly owner, as well as of the honor proffered him. But he only laughed.

"That old hypocrite!" he exclaimed. "Why, father, he just wants to use us. Dick Ainsworth has told me all about this wonderful celebration, and he says it is a clever political scheme. Still wants the votes of the 'rural district' and takes this method instead of buying them outright. He's a 'boss' politician in the city, but out here he poses as a patriot. No, thanks; I wouldn't read the Declaration, knowing what I do, for fifty dollars."

Mrs. Whitney sent a triumphant glance across the table.

"John's right, father," said she. "I told you there was pitch on that man's hands."

Mr. Whitney had expected some such verdict from "mother," and turned half impatiently toward his graduated son, saying, "Pitch! O, well, you may think so, but he's a man of influence, I tell you, and it's handy to have such a man 'round when a fellow starts out for himself."

"I know it," assented John more gravely. "Perhaps I am wrong; but Professor Crary says that politics will never be purified as long as men come out of schools and colleges, where they have learned the principles of real statesmanship, and join right in with these ringleaders who don't care two cents for the nation. The air is full of differences that ought to be settled. Do you think an old bummer like Still is going to do it? Why, Dick Ainsworth says if he were a poor man he would be in state's prison. I tell you, father, I can't follow such a leader; I cannot!"

Mr. Whitney cleared his throat. "I wouldn't have you do what ain't right, John, by no means; and I don't say Still's a good man, but he's as good as t'other candidate, I reckon. He heads our party, and when we come into power again I guess the country'll kinder settle down."

John laughed again. "It is 'tweedle dee and tweedle dum' so far as parties go. The fact is the political 'teeter board' is cracked at its pivotal point; that is, just where it touches the fence. Don't you think we've got too much party and too few men, father?"

"I can't stop to argufy," replied Mr. Whitney, "for that hay must be in the barn before it rains; but if you don't take part in that ere program, I don't know what your Uncle Ben'll say."

John shrugged his shoulders. "I hadn't thought of Uncle Ben, but the next thing is to help you get in that hay," said he.

Uncle Ben Whitney was a "country-store politician," a man mighty in argument and one of Still's supporters. When he learned John's incendiary sentiments he was filled with wrath and hastened over to the farm the following day, sure that he could convince him of his folly.

As he was childless there were certain pecuniary interests in the remote future which had been held over John's head as sure rewards "if he pleased Uncle Ben." So with an influence which had been thus carefully cultivated for years, the old gentleman appeared, and, with his right forefinger tapping his left palm, unfolded to his nephew the modern political gospel.

After tracing the history of the country "since the war," he closed by saying: "Now, my boy, if all your fine sentiment"—and John had not failed to use his most conclusive logic—"would do any good, we might encourage it, but as it is, you only gain a little notoriety as a 'kicker.' The first thing to do is to get the country out of its present ruinous condition. Then, when the All-wise Ruler of the universe sees fit to give us a better public sentiment, we will take up the great moral questions you mention. Just now, all you can do is to fit your gearing to the wheels that are in motion. Try to stop the wheels and you lose your fingers; even your learned Professor Crary would see that. So you may as well change your mind," and Uncle Ben patted John's shoulder as though a case of infantile colic had been happily disposed of.

Following Uncle Ben came Dick Ainsworth to tell John that pretty Flora Billings, who had been selected to recite a patriotic poem, declared she would refuse if he did not take his assignment.

"And folks are taking sides" continued Dick, gleefully. "Some of 'em think you're standing out just because you've gone through college and want to show how smart you are, and some think Still is trying to run things a little too much and they wish you'd show him what's what. Most too bad about Flora, though, for she's got her Goddess-of-Liberty dress made."

That night John was weary, disgusted and confused. He did not want notoriety, nor did he expect a following. No one appeared to recognize his real motive. He got no credit for conscientious scruples.

"Well, mother," said he, joining her in the sitting-room, "I might as well give in first as last. It is a little thing to read the old Declaration anyhow, and I can't stand all this fuss. They think all I do is put on for effect, and what's the use. I see now what Professor Crary meant when he said he once thought he was educating future statesmen, but he had found out the country has no use for them. I guess the old fellow has seen some disappointments in that direction."

"I can sympathize with him," said Mrs. Whitney.

John understood. "Oh, dear! we're a bad lot—we men, I mean — disappointing our mothers and the Prof's. But what's a fellow to do? I wish I knew—if it makes any difference—" and then he took a lamp, and a United States history from the bookcase, said good-night and went up to his room.

John had a very bad habit of reading and studying in bed until he grew sleepy, and his present intention was to look over the Declaration of Independence, and try to decide what he ought to do before yielding to Morpheus. But while reviewing the old, familiar words, he suddenly lost sight of them, and found himself upon a platform facing a large audience in "Still's Park."

The great "leader of the people" was chairman, and had just announced John's number on the program as next in order. He rose, book in hand, when a tall, stately figure glided upon the stage, whom he at once recognized as the Goddess of Liberty, instinct with life and power.

Hon. Mr. Still shrank before her steadfast gaze until he disappeared from view, and she calmly took his place. In great perplexity John stood waiting while she surveyed the crowd with sad, questioning eyes. Then, without speaking, she pointed to an immense canvas suspended from two tall elms, upon which he recognized a familiar heading. He began to read in a loud, clear tone: "Declaration of Independence: When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for a people to dissolve the political organizations which have separated them into great, contending parties, and to resume, under better conditions, a national life in which the laws of nature and of nature's God may be observed, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to such reconstruction. We hold these truths to be self-evident—that all men and women are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

"Pause there!" The majestic chairman stood beside him, and even as she spoke the canvas was covered by a motley crowd. In the foreground were thousands of men —staggering, reeling, desperate men, all in the ranks of the Drunkard's Army. Just behind them, rank on rank, came young men and school-boys, marching eagerly forward. Behind these—a fearful perspective—were wretched homes, heartbroken women and helpless children. At the right a well-dressed crowd of men stood, a part of the great scene, and yet John wondered to see them there, especially as his father and Uncle Ben were among them.

In the center of the awful picture was an immense door over which was one word, "Saloon."

"These are American slaves," exclaimed the chairman. "Some are every hour giving up life, many the pursuit of happiness, and all their liberty. They are all chained to that doorway, but some of them are not aware of it. If they go too far in any direction, however, they find it out."

Even as she spoke John heard a portly, aristocratic man shout the warning: "Let us be careful now. Don't go too far!"

And now the scene changed, and John saw men, women and children in garrets and cellars, bending over garments of every description. Pallid faces, hunger, disease, hatred, death—all of these he saw and turned his eyes away.

"Have these 'life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness'? Look again!" commanded the imperious chairman.

The canvas was now covered with a motley company, which John soon recognized as the "Army of the Commonweal." It was not simply the few who marched to Washington, but hundreds and thousands of sober, thoughtful workingmen, who stood watching the eastern horizon as though to catch the first glimpse of a new day.

Looking with breathless interest, John heard the words of a congressman repeated with peculiar emphasis: "Perhaps the Lord knows what to do with the Coxeyites, but I don't.

"One vision more," said she who stood beside him, and now John saw the assembled Congress. In mute astonishment he gazed, for it was for the most part a company of dwarfs! Men in age, but mere boys in stature, strode back and forth, gesticulating and talking in mighty but unmeaning sentences.

As they now and then raised a right hand, John saw that some were black inside as though covered with pitch. And a voice explained: "In whose hands is mischief, and their right hand is full of bribes. They take a bribe, and they turn aside the poor in the gate from their right."

And there were other voices outside, which were faintly heard saying: "We asked for bread, and you gave us a stone."

"But why do you show these things to me?" John asked, half angrily. "I can do nothing to prevent them."

For answer the Goddess of Liberty pointed again to the canvas where the Declaration of Independence was once more visible. But instead of the long familiar list of indictments against King George—turned to dust these scores of years—was one quite as long against the crowned tyrants of the living present—King Alcohol, Monopoly, Political Corruption, Licensed Evil—in fact, every form of oppression and injustice—these bore the charge of "repeated injuries and usurpations," and facts in proof were there submitted to "a candid world."

"This is the new Declaration of Independence," said the Goddess of Liberty. "It waits for the signatures of true patriots who declare their independence of these real foes, and pledge, 'under Divine protection,' their 'lives, fortunes and sacred honor' to each other.

"Once every year the citizens of these United States read the old Declaration and rejoice in what their forefathers did. They unfurl flags on mountain top and in valley; they celebrate with music, oration and fireworks the birthday of their 'nation strong and free'; but underneath it all I hear the murmur of sorrow and discontent, and I see the haunts of sin protected by the same flag that tells the world of our victories.

"Is it not time for a new era and a new Declaration? Do we not need an infusion of patriotism suited to present exigencies to make our anniversary worthy its name? You ask why I show you these things. Because in this nation the unit has an individuality and a conscience. Revive these, and political corruption will find its sepulchre."

"I am but one, but I am one," said John reverently, "and I pledge my life, my fortune and my sacred honor to the new Declaration of Independence."

The chirp of crickets alone broke the perfect stillness of the summer night when John awoke. "But it was not all a dream," he said, "I have had the vision of a free man."

John Whitney took no part in the great Still celebration at Hopedale.

In this country 2,500 women are practicing medicine, 275 preaching the gospel, more than 6,000 managing post-offices, and over 3,000,000 earning independent incomes. Since 1880 the patent office has granted over 2,500 patents to women, and in New York City 27,000 women support their husbands.

THE CHARTIST MOVEMENT IN ENGLAND AND THE COMMONWEAL COMPARED.

BY CHARLES O. BORING.

Nothing is more sure than that history will repeat itself. Not that any event is actually duplicated but that events similar must always arise when the same cause makes itself manifest.

We have already passed through many phases of development in the brief years of our national existence which have taken older nations centuries to evolve. We are in the hot-bed of ferments now, and new and wondrous plants never before seen among us must spring up and pass through their life history, in a span of time, which would be ordinarily impossible.

When we come to match our industrial history with that of our mother country, we have heretofore found it utterly impossible to produce the parallel of that marvelous period of fermentation which marked the rise and decline of the Chartist party in England; but now, suddenly, unexpectedly, like a nation awaking from a dream, we find ourselves in the midst of parallel conditions and consequently parallel events. A large share of our industrial population is now, as it was then, idle. Suddenly our streams of commerce have frozen over or gone dry. The people who a few months since were happy in their snug homes, with little fear that the mortgage would be met or that the children would need bread, are sitting in idleness with want approaching or at hand. The roof is no longer theirs or will soon cease to be.

Such was the condition in England from 1835 to 1850. It was a time of trouble, turmoil and disturbance—of extraordinary discontent; of dire want and idleness. The nation was about to begin a new development; it was in the birth-pangs of a new history. Events ripened more slowly than apparently now they are ripening with us. God forbid that we should pass so many years in the struggle as England then did. The great Reform bill in England had been passed, but it only created new and greater discontent.

The vast mass of workingmen were still unfranchised. To part of their members, a favored few, whom prosperity had honored, was stretched out the hand of citizenship, but England had feared to do the righteous and the Christian deed of giving freedom to all and she must now suffer for her lack of courage.

How sadly and wonderfully strange it is, and must always be, that the innocent shall suffer for the guilty. The victims now were still the destitute and needy, and those who most needed the right of suffrage to raise them to manhood and to make it possible for them to expand into the condition of free men were those to whom this right was denied.

In 1838 this discontent took shape in the rise of the Chartist party representing the people's charter, the six points of which were as follows:

1. Annual parliaments.
2. Universal suffrage.
3. Vote by ballot.
4. Abolition of property qualification for member of House of Parliament.
5. Payment of members of parliament.
6. Equal electoral districts.

It seems very strange to us in this country that such a battle was necessary, and nothing marks the rise of the cause of freedom more than a comparison of the development which finally came out of these demands. I am aware that many historians deem this movement a total failure, and such are wont to speak in harsh terms of the leaders and to make light of the cause. In nothing is made more manifest a real lack of knowledge of psychology than to look lightly upon great movements of the masses, those who are of the lower strata of mankind as regards wealth and culture. These natural, simple and needy people know their own wants even better than philosophers can tell them.

How ridiculed this movement was in its day and generation; how little understood at that time by those most in sympathy with the common people. Even Charles Kingsley, the sainted leader of one of the most valuable movements ever carried on for mankind, little dreamed when he entered the arena as a champion of the Chartist party that there was any real basis for discontent, and saw at first only the baser side. This is not to be marveled at when we note the great difference in the conduct of those industrial armies and these we have now among us.

Mark it, reader, the fundamental principle of all of these armies now marching through the country is that no liquor shall be used by any member, and that it shall be absolutely prohibited from the camps. As far as my knowledge goes this is a universal practice in all of these industrial armies. Not so those in England. Those men seemed often more inspired to obtain the means for intoxication than to secure greater liberty. It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that Charles Kingsley, in his first letter to the workingmen, should endeavor to show them that such liberty meant only disaster.

The cause of the Chartists, however, grew into importance and power. The petition was finally prepared, and it was proposed that five million men should assemble in London and demonstrate the power and rights of the masses. The cause was plead by such men as O'Connell with intense earnestness. Feargus O'Conner of the Northern Star was the foremost leader as regards assumption of position.

When the final testing day came on the 10th of April, 1848, it was a dark and stormy time in England. Fear was prevalent everywhere; never was seen such fear unless in Washington when Coxey's insignificant army marched in! No wonder, then, that there was danger, real danger of collision between the militia and the tramping armies.

To make the matter more perilous, millions of men were unemployed and were absolutely suffering for the necessities of life. To make the parallel with our times still more apparent it must be understood that the rise and development of the great party was just at the time when Cobden and Bright and others were endeavoring to introduce that great reform which has since placed England in the foremost rank of nations in commerce.

The Chartist leaders little favored this other reform, as, in their fanatical zeal for these principles they could see no other needs. To these poor, struggling souls there seemed no reform possible, however, except these six points enumerated in their charter, and they ever bitterly opposed the other movement.

The final day came, but only fifty thousand men assembled in London, and their leaders were cowed by the tremendous preparation made for war upon them. The petition was presented, upon which were placed one million two hundred and eighty thousand and odd signatures, as officially announced.

The movement came apparently only to grief. The leaders were thrown into prison, and between ridicule and use of force the tramping armies were disbanded. Then London and all England set themselves to laugh at their great scare and to talk of the wild delusions of these fanatics.

But the cause was far from dead, even when its death seemed most apparent.

There were three noble, powerful, sympathetic young men in England who consecrated themselves to the cause of the people and who set themselves to study their real wants in order to help them to help themselves, namely, Charles Kingsley, Frederick D. Maurice and Thomas Hughes. The Christian Socialist movements, which they inaugurated and carried forward, have been sublime and far-reaching in their results. The Chartist movement was turned by these men into something nobler and better than was planned by its founders.

An ice boat sails best, not before the wind, or, of course, against it, but when the wind is taken on the quarter, and then and then only does the boat outstrip the wind which propels it! So this great storm was used by these wise leaders, and the goal reached was vastly in advance of that which would have been accomplished by sailing directly before it.

Times soon improved under the better conditions from the reform legislation, but especially under the bettered condition from the new principle of coöperation put in practice. The lower classes gradually got their rights, and the principles of the charter were justified.

The points of comparison then of the Chartist movement with our "Commonweal" may be stated as follows:

1. Intense industrial depression, making it impossible to secure work at any price, or at starvation prices only.
2. Vast numbers of unemployed made idle and kept idle against their wish, and thus made dangerous to society.
3. Armies marching through the land dependent upon the bounty of the workers who are employed, thus reducing the little store which such as are employed possess.
4. Universal discontent among the laboring population, a growing discontent against capitalists and large employers of labor.
5. Universal feeling on the part of the laboring classes that they have not equal opportunities with what they please to call "the favored classes."
6. All of this is at a time when the greatest struggle for an idea ever took place in this country, and quite similar to that which was then engaging the greatest minds of England, when the Chartist movement was in progress, namely, a movement toward freer commercial conditions and wider opportunities for labor.

I do not wish in this article to draw any conclusion as to the real meaning and final probable outcome of the great movement which is now attracting such wide attention, but will be pleased to do so in another one.

In conclusion allow me to state that I have hopes that this so-called "Commonweal" movement may eventuate in grander results than ever came out of the Chartist movement, vast and beautiful as these were. To understand these results one has but to study the coöperative institutions which I referred to in another place in this article, the literature of which is easily accessible and intensely interesting.

RAILROAD TIES.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

That reminds me, I promised long ago to resume the "Railroad Ties" in THE UNION SIGNAL, but I didn't, partly because I had gotten out of the way of it, partly because I was working another lead, whose product will appear in due time, and partly because nothing has happened. Did you ever notice how the streams swarm with fish when you have no tackle, and how perfectly free from animal matter they seem when you "go a-fishing"? But now something has happened, or rather happens, and as before stated, that reminds me.

I am away down on the "Frisco" route, in the heart of the Ozark mountains, and what is happening is a committee of the legislature going on an official visit to one of the state hospitals.

Their mere presence in the car excites intellectuality. Their very grip-sacks seem instinct with a certain stimulant-property. One rarely comes so intimately near men in the actual travail of making history. . . .

I have been reflecting upon the cold indifference with which we common people treat the care that is taken of us by our statesmen.

These good men, for instance, and there are many such, have torn themselves away from their own business and voluntarily accepted the responsibilities and labors of public office, and are on their way, in this beautiful June weather, when their hearts yearn so for their own homes, to consider the poor, without any remuneration but the blessing of God—and mileage.

They have passes, but these have been thrust upon them by the railroad company for its own convenience, and a per diem and "expenses," the merest bagatelles compared to what such men might get if they got their deserts.

It is extraordinary how these high-strung and large-minded men descend in their tender anxiety to the consideration of the smallest details, and even anticipate events that are unlikely to happen.

Each one of them has a large plug of tobacco in case moths may have broken out in the institution and several have bottles of whisky to have ready in the event of the sudden illness of any of the inmates. Their solicitude is not relaxed even in the minutest particulars; very often they "examine" the whisky and tobacco, for the weather is warm and there is doubtless reason to fear that they may not "keep."

And then again one sees them practicing generous and long-range expectoration—in case of fire, you know; and last night after all the private citizens in this car had gone to bed in their selfish indifference, these men were playing cards to keep themselves awake to think of state affairs; occasionally one of them, overpowered by fatigue, would strike his clenched hand upon his stomach—thinking of the altar of his country—and swear eternal enmity to kings and queens.

It was plain that they had no such thought as mere amusement in their playing, for they were all the time preoccupied with things of mighty moment, far removed from any game or even any trivial earthly things; it was actually painful to see one of these great, vicarious, overburdened souls throw down a paltry card, with an impassioned appeal to the Deity; now and again they seemed oblivious of immediate surroundings and communing with themselves, thinking aloud, as it were, of election and eternal punishment, and other precious old doctrines that cropped out from time to time in the unguarded, but unostentatious, grandeur of their characters.

And I can see this morning from their faces that while you and I, dear fellow citizens—and women—were sleeping, these lofty, inclusive and included spirits bivouacked on Fame's eternal camping-ground without undressing.

"Republics are ungrateful,"—but I, for one, shall not withhold my recognition of the men who have enabled us to keep "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean"—in pawn to the saloon.

NOON MEETINGS AT WILLARD HALL.

The Precious Letter Bag.

BY JANE EGGLESTON ZIMMERMAN.

The following is an extract from a letter recently received: "I have been thinking for several days about our W. C. T. U. organization, and how much in advance it is, even of our church systems, as a universal helper. Think of it! a request dropped into THE UNION SIGNAL by our superintendent of the noon meetings, in a few days is being read by our white-ribboners the world over, and they respond by lifting up heart and voice in earnest supplication that the request be granted. If, as Jesus said, the prayers of two or three who are agreed as touching one thing shall be answered, how much more, when the Christian women of the world unite in the saving of a soul. . . . We might, through THE UNION SIGNAL, organize a Temple praying band, names enrolled under a pledge to spend at least fifteen minutes, (this length of time would shut out many busy women.—EDS.) of the noon hour in prayer for the noon meeting and the special cases reported there. It will unite our faith more closely, and cause many more to seek sympathy and help through this channel." Just before receiving the letter containing these words, Mrs. Carse had said to me, "Why do you not mention all these requests for prayer which you present at the noon meeting, in your report in THE UNION SIGNAL? I did not dream you had so many."

The difficulty has been because I had so many. I will endeavor to give them all, if possible, in the future, although I fear I shall not be able to keep this promise to the letter since space is limited.

One mother writes: "I have a dear boy in your city. He is twenty-one years of age, has been in the city six months. I do not know that he has a lady acquaintance in the place. I wrote him I should send his address to you."

A wife writes: "Your prayers are again begged for the same poor husband. He is drinking and cannot resist it. Do help him, I beg you. Pray that God will relieve him of this dreadful curse, and lift him up. My heart aches. I started to leave my home, almost insane, yesterday."

Another wife: "Please present the name of my husband each day for prayers until he is converted and saved from the power of the demon drink, for we believe that the grace of God is the only cure for the inebriate, and if there is any place where prayers are more effectual than another, it must be at the noon-day prayer-meetings in Willard Hall."

A white-ribboner writes: "I remember reading your invitation to mothers who have sons or daughters in Chicago, that you would look after and pray for them at your noon meetings. In reading my last paper, I thought, 'Oh, that my boys could be prayed for at those noon meetings, though they are not in Chicago. I have such faith in the prayers that go up to God by those devoted W. C. T. U. women who have charge at that meeting.' Why can't there be each week a special meeting of prayer for the sons and daughters of white-ribboners all over the land? Pray for my three boys. One has seen much trouble, and I feel is reaching out for God's help."

Another: "I have a young boy in Chicago who is the cause of great anxiety lest he will be led astray. I ask your special prayers in his behalf, that he may be kept from evil and be led to give himself to the Lord. He is sixteen years old and is a well meaning boy, but there are so many temptations, and it is so easy to be led astray by the persevering evil ones, that I am burdened with fear, and, from what I have read of your work, you are one of the Master's channels for 'fishers of men.'"

A lady writes from an Eastern state: "Truly said our dear poet, Mrs. Browning:

> "'Never was a lament begun
> By any mourner under the sun,
> Which, e'er it finished,
> Voiced but one.'

I have two sons in Chicago, my eldest and my youngest. . . . . I believe my boys will come back to their father's house some time, for, like Jacob, I have said, 'I will not let thee go.' But the sorest grief is the waste they are making of the precious strength of their early manhood, which belongs to Christ."

Another mother asks prayers for her son, who has lost his early faith through Robert Ingersoll's teachings. Also for her daughter, who is influenced by her brother.

Miss Emma M. Hall, president of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Rome, Italy, writes: "I wish I might hope for a special and individual mention of us and our needs when you pray for the world-wide interests of the cause, and trust the noon prayer-meeting will often remember in prayer this forlorn hope." Later, Miss Hall writes quite fully of the discouragements against which they are working, and desires the prayers of all temperance people in their behalf.

The last letter in my budget will rouse a full tide of sympathy:

DEAR SISTERS OF THE W. C. T. U.:—One of your number has lost all faith and hope. No need to particularize causes or effects; the fact is enough, I trust, to stir your hearts to pity and sympathy. Put yourselves in my place if you can, find yourselves cut off from God and from your fellow creatures, unable to help those for whom your heart aches because you have nothing of hope or love to say to them. Have pity upon me, oh, my friends, and pray God to bring me out of the prison house in which I sit. INFELICE.

While writing the above extracts I have been impressed as never before with this bitter cry of motherhood, whose children are made to pass through the fire to Moloch. In pain and peril of life they bring forth children whom the dragon stands ready to devour. It is this desperate mother's need which has built up and which maintains the marvelous organization of the W. C. T. U. which will yet slay the dragon, red with the blood of her children.

OUR THIRD AND FOURTH ROUND-THE-WORLD MISSIONARIES IN THE ORIENT.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL FRIENDS:—The soft breezes of Japan blow about me as I write to-day, and its beauty fills every sense with pleasure; but I realize, by the long distances traversed since we left the home land in November, as well as by the labor wrought, that the silence of months has fallen between your great, kindly circle and myself, for which I am sorry, and can only plead the pressure of work and travel.

We crossed the Atlantic last autumn, on starting out for the last year of our round-the-world journey, and after a few happy days in dear England we crossed the continent, sailed from Brindisi December 3, and, after a good voyage, reached Bombay December 17. The South India M. E. Conference was then in annual session, and Bishop Thoburn presented us to this body in the most cordial and felicitous manner. After we had addressed the conference briefly, the strongest resolutions of thanks and confidence in regard to our India work were unanimously passed.

We went to Poona for a glimpse of our honored Pundita Ramabai and her school, and rejoiced to see her established in her beautiful new home and to witness the progress made by her happy band of pupils since our last visit. Miss Soonderbai Powar was with her, the eloquent India woman, who went to England a year before to plead against the opium traffic. She is Ramabai's dear friend. Our visit was crowded with satisfaction from the first to the last moment of our stay. We always find Ramabai the same—large-minded, brave, loyal, tender—a royal woman! She returned with us to Bombay, where we were all the guests of Alfred Dyer, editor of the Bombay Guardian, that fearless defender of all good workers and causes, the white-ribbon army included.

Then across India to Calcutta, where we were welcomed into Bishop Thoburn's home, and had an inspiring meeting with the W. C. T. U., arranged by Mrs. Thoburn, the president, in her own drawing-room. Mrs. Hauser, India's energetic president, was also present, and we had a blessed time of prayer, counsel, testimony and rejoicing together. The Calcutta union is one to delight the hearts of round-the-world missionaries, so consecrated, so uncompromising with evil, so true to the right. A movement had recently been inaugurated against impurity in this great, sinful city, in which our white-ribboners had borne an honorable part. There were then twenty unions in India, and Mrs. Hauser was pressing the work forward by all possible means, enduring difficult journeys, and meeting sore perplexities arising out of the social conditions and other surroundings peculiar to the country, yet constantly making advance. She publishes a monthly letter to the unions called "The India White Ribbon," a four-page sheet which is an interesting résumé of the work and a real band of union and means of communicating intelligence among all the workers. We thank God for all the work accomplished in this difficult field during the few months since she became president.

From Calcutta we sailed for Rangoon, Burma, beginning the new year on shipboard in the Bay of Bengal. On our arrival we were met by Miss Ruth Ranney, president of the Rangoon W. C. T. U.—formerly president of the work throughout Burma—and her friend, Miss Phinney, and were taken to their delightful home. We had met Miss Ranney and her aunt, Mrs. Wells, who is at the head of their little household, three years before in England, and it seemed like a bit of home to be with them again. Miss Ranney's mother is a member of our Chicago Central W. C. T. U., and the missionary daughter is an ardent white-ribbon worker. Burma owes much to her clear, energetic plans. Our stay in this lovely land was full of satisfaction. God gave us much blessing in our work. We had the evidence of the Holy Spirit's power in the salvation of souls, in the deepened spiritual life of Christians, in adding members to the unions and in moving many to abandon the drink.

This is sacred ground. Here Dr. Judson and his devoted co-laborers began a work which has grown to mighty proportions. Our association with these dear Baptist missionaries was most delightful, and we rejoiced in seeing the precious results of their toil. We also had great joy in greeting the president of the Burma W. C. T. U., Mrs. Julius Smith; she and her husband were formerly residents of our own Evanston, and they are in the forefront of the battle against evil in this far-off country. Mr. Smith is the presiding elder of the Methodist Episcopal work in Burma, and fearlessly uses his influence in favor of all good causes, and in upholding woman's work and opportunities. His pulpit was open to us for Sunday services, and we had his outspoken help throughout the whole of our work in Rangoon. A noble band of workers stood by us, and our hearts are knit to this company "like minded," so true to God and to His demands upon them, in that needy city.

We also visited Moulmein, by boat, and Mandalay, by rail; both unusually beautiful and interesting places. At Moulmein it was delightful to see our large band of Burmese white-ribboners. At our evening meeting for the native people, the W. C. T. U. sat in a group together, presenting a most attractive appearance, with their graceful dress and adornments of lovely flowers, but most of all their intelligent faces lighted up by sympathy with our world-wide sisterhood and its noble activities. They carry on hospital, flower-mission, literature and Band of Hope work, and are regular in holding their meetings. Eighty-five signers to the pledge were obtained last year, and twenty-five signed at our evening meeting; the union is now six years old. There is also an English W. C. T. U., organized April 16, 1892, by the ladies themselves—mostly missionaries—which is doing good work.

The Mandalay union carries on hospital, literature, press, evangelistic and Band of Hope work. A good W. C. T. U. library has also been gathered together, which, under the careful oversight of one of the devoted members, is a great help in the work, and is doing good among the community outside of the union. Mrs. W. R. Winston is president of this faithful, intelligent band of workers.

We left Burma the latter part of January for the Straits Settlements, filled with gratitude to God who has established our organization in that land on such a thorough basis, and has caused it to increase in strength, spirituality and influence under the guidance of such brave and consecrated leaders.

We were met at Singapore by Mrs. Kelso, president of the W. C. T. U., and other friends, and received a true and hearty welcome to that lovely city, only seventy-five miles from the equator. Its fresh verdure charmed our eyes, and, as we recall it now, the city and its surroundings seem one shifting panorama of increasing beauty. Yet the enervating climate would not seem conducive to earnest activities, and the fluctuating population of this great seaport adds another element of discouragement to the efforts of our comrades. Not a trace of "wearying in well doing" appears, however, in that dauntless band. Never have we met workers in any land more heroic or humble in spirit, seeking only to know God's will and striving to fulfill it.

It was a time of special interest, as the Singapore M. E. Conference was in session, and we had the pleasure of meeting Bishop Thoburn again, and of seeing missionaries from other parts of the Straits Settlements. Our work was received most cordially, and a very strong resolution of appreciation concerning our India work and of good-will for the future was passed unanimously by the conference, a copy of which was conveyed to us by the secretary.

Our hearts were saddened there, as in every seaport city we have visited, by the blackness of darkness in sin's under-world; the defiance of God; the worship of sensual pleasures; the degradation and enslavement of women. Alas! how low a price is set upon the heads of poor, native women throughout the Orient!

Sisters beloved, pray for our white-ribbon workers in these far lands. They have such terrible perplexities to meet; their faith and courage are tested to the utmost; they need to feel your warm heart-throbs against theirs, at the blessed noon-tide, when we are all gathered into the One Presence. ELIZABETH WHEELER ANDREW.

FALSE ECONOMY OF THE SUFFRAGE.

"There is that scattereth and increaseth yet more; and there is that withholdeth what is justly due, but it tendeth only to want."—Prov. 11:24. Rev. Vers.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In its issue of May 26 The Epworth Herald, organ of the great Epworth League of the Methodist Episcopal church, contains an editorial, which, because of its possible influence among young people of that denomination, demands consideration and deserves animadversion. It is entitled "Scatters too Much," and is intended to be a final arraignment of the omnibus policy of the Prohibition party, and a vindication of the attitude of those Christian voters who remain in political organizations which do not array themselves against the liquor traffic.

Says the editor: "A political party which honestly and openly antagonizes the saloon ought to succeed." In the opinion of the order of the white ribbon and the party of the white rose this initial proposition is cogent enough to demand free and prompt assent, although it is summarily controverted by positive persons, who affirm that the liquor traffic is not a subject of party action, and that the drink question is to be solved according to the principles of ethics and religion, and not according to the program and pronunciamento of a political organization. However, the editor of the Herald believes in the possibilities of the party, and thinks that an anti-saloon party ought to exist and that it ought to succeed, and proceeds to declare that the Prohibition party, as an honest and open enemy of the business which curses humanity, ought to elect its candidates and consummate its policy; which position, from the standpoint of the "third party," seems invulnerable, and the editorial syllogism appears so free from fallacy to the minds of the fanatics and cranks who are accustomed to be denounced as dishonest, crafty and hypocritical allies of one or the other great parties, and ignorant enemies of "true" temperance reform, that they justly anticipate from the acute pen of the editor a plea for the prohibition movement? Instead, there follows a statement of reasons why prohibitionism, as now organized, cannot and ought not to succeed.

The Prohibition "organizatian does not grow notably, and success seems to be a long way off," says the editor, Dr. Berry, and he asks, "Why is that?" That is what Chairman Dickie would like to know, in the name and for the sake of the 264,133 men who cast ballots in 1892 for Gen. John Bidwell. If the editor can answer his own question as easily as he asks it, he will demonstrate himself the possessor of a high order of political acumen, and if his answer is as satisfactory as his logic, he ought to be appointed leader of the anti-saloon forces in the United States.

Well, he says, "It scatters too much!" That is his charge—his reason for the failure of party Prohibition to grow or win: "It scatters too much!" More than that:—"Concerning the utter and awful badness of the liquor traffic and kindred evils there is perfect accord among hundreds of thousands of Christian voters. They would gladly hurl their ballots against this old devil if they had a chance. But the platform upon which they must stand to cast their anti-saloon vote contains so many planks in which they do not believe that they do not believe they can consistently step upon it."

And that is the dual reason why the Prohibition party cannot succeed:—it "scatters too much" and it proposes a complex political program which many Christian citizens cannot consistently support. The first charge may be considered, according to the intention of the editor, as a reflection upon the wisdom and not upon the morals of Prohibition leaders; but the second is a very serious arraignment of the Christian integrity and intelligence of such representative men as Joseph Cook, Josiah Strong, Neal Dow and John Bidwell, who think it not inconsistent with their Christian faith and principles to step upon the Prohibition platform with all its fifteen planks and hurl their ballots against the "old saloon devil." Dr. Berry, however, does not desire to accuse Prohibitionists of infidelity to fundamental and inherent canons of Christian conduct, and he is prompt to say, lest his censure seem supercilious, that there may exist "honest differences of opinion" concerning the coördinate or subordinate political doctrines combined with pure prohibitionism in their platform. Granting this, for the sake of courtesy, let us ask, if the liquor traffic may be prohibited; and if the triumph of a party can secure that end, why do not the "hundreds of thousands of Christian voters, who are in perfect accord concerning the badness of the liquor traffic," unite in constituting a new party with only one plank in its platform? If, with Dr. Berry, they believe that the liquor question ought to be divorced from all other questions, and the whisky devil killed quickly and thoroughly, why don't they immediately organize and fire their ballots at the abomination?

If they are possessed of such sensitive political consciences that they cannot support a prohibitionism which advocates woman's suffrage, how can they consistently remain in parties which afford them no chance whatever to utter their protest against that business which is prosecuted against law, and by connivance of officials elected by their own acts? This editor assumes that they do not have a fair chance! Let him proceed to mobilize the "hundreds of thousands" of anti-saloon citizens and lead them against the enemy. Let him build up a "great and powerful anti-saloon organization" upon one plank! Perhaps he will discover what Prohibition organizers have already discovered, that Christian voters are not yet a unit in believing that there exists a criminal complicity between the United States government and the dealers in intoxicating drink—and that a "single issue prohibitionism" is just as impotent to set Christian men voting to its music as is a "broad gauge prohibitionism." It is just as difficult to convince Republicans, Democrats and Populists that it is their duty to abandon their parties at this crisis and join an "anti-saloon party" as to induce them to accept the leadership of men who are capable of formulating opinions on woman's suffrage, tariff, finance, immigration, trusts, public schools and civil service.

In 1857 the Republican party announced its belief in the authority of Congress to prohibit polygamy and slavery in the territories, and, also, in its right to render immediate aid in the construction of a railway to the Pacific ocean. Was a Christian then justified in withholding his vote from Fremont because he did not believe that Congress ought to aid in the building of a railroad? Were his scruples honorable if he continued to vote with a party content to "broadly rest upon the Constitution of the United States," or remain silent upon the crucial question of human slavery?

In 1892 the Prohibition party announced its belief in the power and duty of the citizenship of the United States to suppress the "manufacture, sale, importation, exportation and transportation of alcoholic liquors as a beverage, by federal and state legislation." The supreme court has pronounced this position constitutional. Now, are the scruples of Christian voters worthy of consideration and respect, if, because the Prohibition party has proposed a tariff for defense system, they refuse their allegiance to a party which honestly and openly antagonizes the saloon, and continue to act with parties which advocate license or tax?

It would appear that if any body of voters in the United States fails to destroy the liquor power because it "scatters too much," it is that great company of compromisers who, in the name of consistency (?) and economy of the suffrage (?) are willing to sustain party platforms that say something about everything under the political heavens except that fruitful source of crime and misery, the traffic in intoxicating drinks.

GEORGE MILTON HAMMELL.

Cincinnati, O.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works; show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works. . . . . But wilt thou know, O vain man, faith without works is dead.—James 2:18, 20.

The following white-ribboners are showing their faith by their works: Mrs. Ida M. Peyton, Salt Lake City, Utah, sends stamp for mite-box and says: "My two eldest children and I collected $5 in our box last year, and this year baby is old enough to help, so we will try to do as well, at least. I think it a good object lesson in temperance, and reminds one of the cause every day. We not only desire to assist the Temple, but want to secure one of the beautiful souvenir spoons." Mrs. Ella Rouse, Northville, O., in sending for a mite-box, says: "I am asking the dear Father to put it into the hearts of many who have means to help pay for our 'House Beautiful,' and I am sure if I do not give of my little He will not trust me with much. Thanks for the Columbian souvenir; what a beauty it is! and how very much I prize it." Mrs. Clara S. Harza, Temple superintendent for the W. C. T. U., Brookings, So. Dak., says: "I have had great faith in the Temple since first I read there was to be such a building. I desire to help all I can towards paying for it. I am glad to say there are enough members in our union interested to pledge $100; $50 of this was sent last summer, and we are planning to send the remainder soon. I shall fill a mite-box this year, and hope to receive a souvenir spoon."

Mrs. M. L. Stratton, Pecatonica, Ill., writes a long letter about the glory of the Israelitish Temple. In closing she says: "My dear sister, you have got the Scriptures and God on your side. I hope the blessed God of the Israelites will move on the hearts of white-ribboners so that they may bring their free-will offerings for our twentieth century Temple. We are told that the Israelites brought so much that the custodians cried out to Moses, 'The people bring much more than enough for the service of the work which the Lord commanded to make.' Was not this a loyal test of his subjects, and how nobly they responded? The Israelitish women brought their jewels. I don't think there are many W. C. T. U. women but what could at least sell a dollar's worth of jewelry and send as a thank-offering. At any rate every woman among us can earn a dollar and send to the House Beautiful." Hard as the times are many hearts are responding. The West Side W. C. T. U., Chicago, Ill., have paid $33, the last installment on their one hundred dollar pledge. Mrs. L. S. Johnson sends $15.25, which completes the hundred dollar pledge of Cortland, N. Y., W. C. T. U. She also sends $4.75 on Cortland county W. C. T. U. pledge. Eighty-one dollars comes from Mrs. N. L. Caminade, treasurer New Jersey W. C. T. U.; of this amount $55.43 is to be credited to Bergen county on their pledge. Burlington county, $7; Hunderton county, $10; Mercer county, $2.67; Huron county, from Plainfield Veteran Band, $6, on hundred dollar pledge. Twenty-five dollars has been forwarded by Mrs. Lizzie I. Pierson, treasurer W. C. T. U., Savill, N. Y. This amount was raised by holding a bazaar. We hope this union won't stop their good work until they send sufficient to have their name placed on the New York tablet. Every live union in the Empire state should have its name there, and we have no doubt they all will in time.

Mrs. M. A. Hardy, treasurer W. C. T. U., Port Townsend, Wash., sends $13.50; $8.10 of this amount is for a Baby Band. Why don't all our unions raise Baby Bands? As we have often said before, no better temperance work than this can be done. In order to revive this work, we will give one of our beautiful silver souvenir Temple spoons to any individual who will raise a full Baby Band of one hundred names. Send to us for Baby Band documents; they will be sent free to all who desire to raise a band. Mrs. Mary H. Christy, secretary W. C. T. U., Kinsman, Ohio, sends $15 on the union's pledge. Mrs. J. W. Storey, Castalia, Ohio, sends $15, the proceeds of a Demorest gold medal contest. Mrs. Amelia W. Wilson, Black River, N. Y., sends a most kind letter, accompanied by a check for $6.60 from the union; the money was raised through a Baby Band; some lady in the union had better complete the full band, and get the souvenir spoon.

We learn that our good friend, Mrs. A. J. Winship, Providence, R. I., who raised $100 some time ago to place the name of the Providence, R. I., union on the Rhode Island tablet, is soon to send another $100 to the Temple from the firemen of Providence. Mrs. Winship is superintendent of temperance work among the firemen, and is greatly beloved by them. It is quite remarkable, of one hundred and fifty meetings she has held on Sunday in the various fire stations in Providence, not one of them has ever been broken up by an alarm of fire. In the items of May 3, Mrs. Addie B. Edsall, Plainfield, N. Y., should have read Plainfield, N. J. Mrs. Ella S. Pringle, Santa Cruz, Cal., writes as follows: "Our union of three counties, Santa Cruz, Monterey and San Benito, had a very fine panel made of native woods, and painted by one of our W. C. T. U. artists, which we sent to the World's Fair. We instructed our commissioner, Mrs. Churchill, to give it to the Temple at the close of the Fair. As we have never seen it mentioned in THE UNION SIGNAL, we are anxious to know what has become of it." Mrs. Churchill did present it to the Temple. Through an oversight it has not been mentioned. The beautiful panel adorns the Moorish parlor of the Temple on the twelfth floor, and is greatly admired by visitors. We return our warm thanks to the W. C. T. U. women of Santa Cruz, Monterey and San Benito counties for their beautiful gift.

THE HALO.

"One London dealer in birds received, when the fashion was at its height, a single consignment of thirty-two thousand dead humming birds; and another received at one time thirty thousand aquatic birds, and three hundred thousand pairs of wings."

Think what a price to pay,
Faces so bright and gay,
Just for a hat!
Flowers unvisited, mornings unsung,
Sea-ranges bare of the wings that o'erswung,
Bared just for that!

Think of the others, too,
Others and mothers, too,
Bright-eyes in hat!
Hear you no mother-groan floating in air,
Hear you no little moan—birdlings' despair—
Somewhere for that?

Caught 'mid some mother-work,
Torn by a hunter Turk,
Just for your hat!
Plenty of mother-heart yet in the world;
All the more wings to tear, carefully twirled!
Women want that?

Oh, but the shame of it,
Oh, but the blame of it,
Price of a hat!
Just for a jauntiness brightening the street,
This is your halo, O faces so sweet,—
Death, and for that!

A TRAVELING MEMBER.

BY GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL.

He was only a common tramp, with the common name f Brown, and his arrival at Chautauqua that bright July morning seemed but a common happening to him. Others came with eager expectations; he had none. He had never heard of the place before. Others chose the steamboat to convey them to the grounds; he a freight car, because, having crawled into a remote corner of it the night before, it had carried him free of charge and without discovery.

Now he slipped unobserved from the car on the sidetrack and looked about him. There was peace and content in the clear sky above; there was energy and life in every sparkle of the lake before him, and a refreshing breeze was blowing, quite different from the stifling air of the city he had left the night before.

He stood on two broad, flat stones, and, stooping, bathed his face and hands in the lake, finishing his toilet by running his damp fingers through the heavy black hair. His face was full of untried possibilities, with a hard finish of "don't care" and "do as I please" put on in place of the refinement and culture it looked as though it ought to have worn.

He sauntered slowly to the station, where two men were struggling to move a heavy piano from an open car to a lumber wagon. They stopped to rest as he came up.

"Say, where'll a fellow get something to eat?" he asked, confidentially.

The man in the wagon paused and measured the social standing of the man on the ground.

"Plenty o' places over inside," he responded, nodding toward the fence. "Say, be you in a hurry? Because ef you'll lend a hand with this pyany I'll give ye a couple o' meal tickets I've got extra."

The man on the ground agreed readily enough, and was soon at work.

"It's a powerful heavy thing," said the piano man; "you just stay in and steady this end and help us unload. I've got plenty more meal tickets."

And thus it was that a tramp rode into the Chautauqua gates without a season ticket. But he cared little enough. He was used to going through life without a season ticket.

It was not until late in the afternoon, as he was walking about to survey this strange place he had fallen upon, that he found his "old lady." She wore a sweet, intellectual face and white hair, and was sitting in a wheeled chair by a pretty cottage, with a worried, nearsighted, young woman hovering anxiously about. The younger woman addressed him hesitatingly.

"Can you tell me where I can find a man or boy I could hire to wheel my mother to the Hall of Philosophy? Our boy has left us, and mother wants to go to the C. L. S. C. meeting to-night so much."

"Well, I might do it myself, I 'spose; I'm out of a job. How does the thing go?" and he came over to examine the chair.

So, piloted by the young woman, he carefully wheeled the old lady to a queer, white-pillared, open building where so many people were gathered that some had to sit under trees.

He arranged the chair and sat down on a stump a few feet away to watch the meeting. It was a strange one. He was interested. Some of the things people said about books and words reminded him of snatches of his life story, school days away back, and dead ambitions and hopes. He gathered that this was the meeting of a reading society.

On the way home the old lady told him something about it, asking his name, and calling him Mr. Brown. She finally asked him timidly, if he would not engage to take her to the afternoon meeting during the whole season, as he was so careful with her chair. He agreed readily enough. It was quite a novel employment, and he could leave when he was tired of the place.

Thereafter he attended regularly the afternoon conferences of the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle, and on the whole enjoyed them. For the rest of the time he loafed about, doing odd jobs, attended any lecture, concert or entertainment he happened to come upon in his wanderings about the grounds, and told himself he was taking quite a vacation like other folks.

The season slipped away to his surprise without his growing weary of the place, and the day came when his "old lady," as he called her, was to leave for home. She paid him liberally for his services, gave him a gentle little talk, and presented him with a substantial, square package, which she said she hoped would bring him pleasure and profit.

He thanked hor roughly as he went away to sit down under a secluded tree and examine the gift. It was a new thing for him to have a present and he was shy about opening it, for this was no bundle of crusts and cold scraps such as had often been handed him out of the kitchen door.

Books! He surveyed them with awe. What could he do with books? He seemed less afraid of a little pamphlet lying on the top of the pile than of the larger ones, so he opened it cautiously.

"Are you Satisfied with Life?" he read in large letters. "Is it too late for you to go to school or college (are you too old, or too poor, or too busy)? Should you like to turn mature years . . . . into youth again? . . . . The C. L. S. C. will help you to gratify this desire."

So these were the books that that society read. He felt enough stirred by the questions on the paper to examine them. He opened one at random: "In order to live, and still more to live well, a man needs certain things. If he is robbed of food, air, water, etc., he will die. If he lacks books, art, clothing, friendship, esteem, etc., he will live less well than if he has these things in abundance. So we say man has wants for air, water, food, clothing, art, esteem, etc. The power to satisfy a human want is utility."

Mr. Brown, tramp, was very much struck by this paragraph. It seemed to come home to him, though there were some things named in the list that had never occurred to him before to be essentials.

"Guess I'll read him through and get a little of that 'utility' whatever it is," he said to himself as he closed the book and opened the next:

"Ye who would your life glorify,
And float in bliss to God on high,
There to dwell nigh
His peace and love's salvation;
Who fain would learn how to enroll
All evil under your control,
And rid your soul
Of many a sore temptation,
Give heed unto this song . . ."

"H'm!" he said as he turned the leaves, "they all seem to be firin' at me. The old lady must uv had 'em writ a purpose."

"Take time while yet it is in view,
For fortune is a fickle fair;
Days fade and others spring anew;
Then take the moment still in view."

"H'm!" he said again as he closed the book and looked out to the lake. "What if I should? What if I took that place they offered me to-day and stayed right here all winter and read these books through? Would it make any difference?"

He opened the other small book and glanced down the first page: "The Bible unmistakably teaches that God both can and does interfere in our behalf, that His interference often is a direct result of our asking, that all reasonable prayers offered in a right spirit are certain of favorable answer."

The light was growing too dim for reading. The stars were coming out one by one, and the brilliancy of the sunset had faded into soft grays and pinks. The man looked up at the stars thoughtfully. "I wonder if that's true," he said, and something like a prayer for his own poor, useless life was forming in his heart.

Long he sat and thought, and when he arose at last and gathered up his books he said to himself: "Guess I'll try it. Anyhow I'll read them books through. Mebbe I'll turn out somebody after all. I'm a member myself now, ain't I? H'm!"

And who shall say but this new member of the C. L. S. C. may find through it an open door to a richer life in this world, and perhaps in the world to come life everlasting?

SPOILING THE EGYPTIANS.

BY REV. HENRY BURTON.

When Israel "spoiled the Egyptians," "borrowing" their precious things, we are not to suppose that they laid violent or stealthy hands upon their neighbor's goods, enriching themselves by sleight of hand or false pretense. There was nothing underhand in their dealings; nor did they take what was not freely given. The Hebrew word "spoil" really means to "take hastily," to "snatch away," as the brand "plucked" from the burning; while the word "borrowed" means "to ask for," either as a loan or as a gift, either as a favor or as a right. The "spoils" then were not a loan levied upon Egyptian fears, but the largess of Egyptian favors—the favor God had given to the Hebrews in the sight of the Egyptians. It is in this sense that they "spoiled the Egyptians."

In other ways, too, they led captivity captive. Going into Egypt a single family—and that, too, rent by constant bickerings and jealousies—they come forth a nation—families, tribes, all beaten and welded into a solid unit; entering Egypt as drovers, leading a nomadic, pro tem life, with tents, flocks, and herds, they come forth skilled in Egyptian wisdom, able to frame laws or to build tabernacles. They enter Egypt as Doubters, forsaking even the Land of Promise, because famine happens to be within it; they go forth as Believers, seeking their Land of Promise once again, and striking boldly across sea and desert to reach their goal. They thus "spoiled" the Egyptians in a higher sense, taking from them treasures of character and life more precious than any gold, finding in their exacting toil capabilities for higher tasks and from their bondage taking wider liberties.

Would it not be well if we could learn this Hebrew lesson, how to spoil the spoiler and lead captivity itself captive? If we only could, what new sources of strength and truest wealth we should find! What fresh hosts of ministering angels we should see peopling our sky and making our wildernesses vocal! And it would be so, if we were only desirous and determined that it should be so. There is, perhaps, no life but has a strip of Egypt thrown across it somewhere, somewhen. Even the Divine Life had its years of exile there, for it seems to be a law inscribed in all the books, "Out of Egypt have I called My Son"—the world's prophets and redeemers. There are times in every life when our activities either cease altogether or they go out only upon things that seem profitless, resultless and uncongenial. We feel out of harmony with our environment, conscious of powers that now are cramped, fettered, with no room for their exercise. Heirs of great promises and aspirations, freeholders of this or that Canaan, we spend our days in silence, in waiting, with no higher task, perhaps, than raking the stubbles of others' harvests for our straw or from the mud and slime fashioning the interminable tale of bricks. Well, let it be so, if God so wills it. We gain nothing by chafing at our circumstances except irritations, sore places without number that even the balm of Gilead cannot soothe; but we can gain much, everything, by adapting ourselves to our circumstances while we recognize the Divinity that is within and over them. Horace Bushnell said of someone, "He put extortion upon common things, and extracted the wine of life by pressure." And so it is. There is no way of reaching oratorios and sonatas but by the tedious practice of the scales. Perfection is but a mastery of details, and greatness itself is evolved from the littles.

Learn to "put extortion" upon life's common things and even its adverse things—the task, the disappointment, the strait, the failure—and you will be surprised how easily you may extract from them faith, hope, strength, patience and all the new wines of the kingdom. The desert bushes, if our hearts are true, will be "afire with God"; or they will exude sweet balsams and make the very wilderness fragrant. Are the hands tied that would be open in their sympathies and strong in their helpfulness? Are the feet "made fast in the stocks" that would run, oh, so eagerly and swiftly, with the Master's message? Are the lips sealed in silence, or speaking only in the whispers of the sick room which once were glad to speak to the congregation or the class? Are our means diminished so that we are only able to do little where we once did much, and when we long to do more? Accept the discipline and it will teach you many things. Welcome Disappointment as she stands at your door. Call her within and question her, and she will speak of heavenly things in heavenly tones; nay, she will sing to you and fill your tent with music. Do not complain of the narrowness of the circle; but fill the narrow circle well, and it will prove to be a circle within wider and ever-widening circles, with distances of sweep that you could scarcely dream of now. The smaller task, if well done, will fit you for the higher and lead you towards it. Give God, through man, your fellow, your best, to-day and here, and you may have something better to-morrow and yonder. He who will put extortion upon life's common and life's adverse things will have a perennial vintage; and Egypt will prove to be but a vestibule of the Temple, leading on and up to a sweeter music and to a freer, wider service.

FOURTH OF JULY.

The Fourth of July is almost here,
The day that America holds so dear;
The day of flags and cannon and bells,
When patriotism in each breast swells.
The day of fireworks gorgeous to view;
The day of burned fingers and faces, too!
Oh, Fourth of July is almost here,
And we're thankful it comes but once a year!

A LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION FOURTH.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE.

Bees have not much time to watch the boys and girls who live in the neighborhood of Old Hollow—for that is the name of the tree where our hive is—but there is a company of boys and girls who are so remarkable and so interesting that I am going to tell you some stories about them.

There are some children who are very much afraid of a bee, and it is just as well, for if they were not we could never keep our honey. But these children don't mind us at all. We were very busy in the hive one day, for there were a great many young bees to attend to, and a field mouse had been destroying part of our hive so that we had to call all hands to build up the broken walls. We were working away, when all of a sudden there came a noise like thunder all through Old Hollow. I am the quickest bee on the wing so I flew out to see what was the matter. I was ready to stab any intruder and buried myself in the hair of a little girl who was standing on the arched trunk of the tree, tapping on the bark with a stick she held in her hand. Usually when we get into people's hair they make a great to-do, and sometimes they kill us before we can get away. So I was ready for the worst and tried to sting her, but her hair was thick and fine and held me in its soft meshes a most unwilling prisoner.

"A bee! a bee!" shrieked several voices at once. "Lillian, there's a bee in your hair—it'll sting you!"

Then I did expect to be crushed, but instead I heard a quiet voice saying, "I am afraid the poor thing is angry. Malcolm, won't you take your handkerchief and catch it? Don't hurt it, please. It's only fighting for its home." In another minute I was all smothered up in something and taken out of the shining hair; then I felt myself traveling fast through the air, for Malcolm—whoever he was—had tossed the handkerchief high up, and as it unfolded in the summer breeze I was liberated and flew away. Somehow I did not feel like stinging any one just then. Lillian's sweet voice had completely disarmed me.

There was a fine clump of clover covering a little hillock near Old Hollow, and I was so eager to know what Lillian and the children were up to that I decided to combine business with pleasure, and while I gathered honey and pollen listen to what was going on. Of course there was a great deal I could not understand, but as I often saw the children through the summer I came to know them well. Just forget for awhile that I am only a bee and pretend I am one of those people who write stories for others to read.

"Well," said Lillian, "since it offends the bees to tap on Old Hollow I'll clap my hands for order. I don't believe the honey-makers will object to that." Then she gently clapped her hands, and the chattering of the dozen or more boys and girls gradually ceased.

"I think we'd better sing a song before we begin," spoke up the little president (for that was the name they called her by sometimes). "What shall it be?"

"Let's sing 'Three Cheers!' "

Then they all sang together. I heard the words so many times during the summer I am able to remember them. It was sweet music, and I swung on a clover stem, entirely idle, until they were through:

We are temperance children,
See our banner white,
Daily we are walking
In God's blessed light.
Three cheers! Three cheers!
Three cheers for the L. T. L.
Three cheers! Three cheers!
We are sure you love it well.

"Now we will listen to the report of our treasurer and secretary. Malcolm, come up here so they can all see you."

Lillian had a clear voice, like a bird's. Malcolm's was a good voice, too, but it reminded me of a boy who tried to smoke us out the summer before, and I just ached to sting him. But I didn't.

"We have seven dollars cash on hand," said Malcolm, and then stopped. Lillian laughed. "Is that the whole of your report?"

"Yes, Madam President."

"Very well. I think it will be accepted—cash is always acceptable. And now what's to be done with it?"

A boy on the outer circle spoke up—"Lillian—"

"You should address the chair," corrected some one.

"Miss President, then. Let's have a Fourth celebration."

Dead silence. I did not know what a Fourth celebration was, but I associated it somehow with that terrible time when the boy with the voice like Malcolm tried to smoke us out.

"Harold thinks we ought to have a celebration. Any remarks?"

Then they all commenced to buzz—talk, I mean—and the little lady on the tree-root forgot herself and tapped on the tree again. I made a bee-line for the hive, caught three angry relatives about to dart out and sent them back. Of course every one of the hive community wanted to know what was wrong, and they buzzed so about it that the children were frightened and ran away, thinking we were all coming out in a hurry to sting them. I was vexed for I was getting interested and wanted to hear the rest of the talk. It was two days before they came back, and then Lillian did all the talking. Here is exactly what she said—or read, rather, for it was all on paper. She had several copies of the same thing, and when they had all gone away I found this one at the foot of the tree. An owl, who lives near, assured me this is the same, and as he knows everything, I believed him:

ORDERS FOR CO. A.

JULY 4, 1894.

Co. A. will observe the Fourth of July as L. T. L's ought to.

GENERAL RULES.

No crackers to be fired off in town. No old ladies, little children or horses scared by big crackers or in any way. Every boy in Co. A is to find one or two poor boys who can't buy flags and crackers and divide, share and share alike. Every girl is to invite some poor girl to the picnic with her, and see that she gets just as nice a lunch, and has just as nice a time, as any one. Every soldier in Co. A is to carry pledges in his pocket same as any other day, and watch out for new recruits to the L. T. L. ranks.

SPECIAL RULES.

Detachment I. Co. A. (that's John and Jennie and Fritz and Isabel) are to have charge of the L. T. L. lemonade stand opposite Bunko's saloon. (Fritz's father, the policeman, has promised to "run in" lots of customers for lemonade.) Sell lemonade when you can, but give away any amount that will keep thirsty men and boys who can't pay from the saloon. Don't forget the pledge.

Detachment II. Co. A. (Hugh, Creston, Fred and Archie) L. T. L. guardsmen to watch out for boys who persist in throwing crackers on the carriage roads. Take particular care when women and children are riding.

Detachment III. Co. A. (Peter, Mamie, Axel and Estell). Visiting committee and flower missioners. To carry a flag, a bunch of flowers and a picture card with text to every sick child in town. (If they are very sick ask your mother to fix up a little jelly or something.)

N. B.—The whole L. T. L. will meet at Old Hollow at noon when the picnicers are eating their dinner—they always eat around Old Hollow, to sing their songs, recite pieces and distribute pledges. The L. T. L. rallying cry and salute will also be given. Every one is to practice it until perfectly known. Here it is:

Speak each syllable short and quick: "P-R-O-Pro-H-I-hi-Pro-h i-B-I-bi-P'r o-hi-bi-TION-t i o n-P r o-hi-bi-t i o n!" (Clapping hands three times.) "Saloons must go!"

The salute: 1. Right hand brought to the forehead. 2. Right hand placed on the heart. 3. Right hand extended forward. The leader gives the counts and the motions follow. The leader then says, "Interpret salute!" The Legioners reply, repeating the motions.

(1) "My head, (2) my heart, (3) and this right hand.

"For God (pointing upward), and Home (hands clasped), and Native Land." (Hands extended at sides and brought around to the front in graceful curves.)

MOTTO FOR JULY FOURTH.

Look out that some one else besides yourselves has a good time—a good temperance time.

(But they didn't pass a single resolution about smoking out bees!)

A WHOLE SERMON IN ITSELF.

Boys, why are you so thoughtless? Learn to govern your tongues. A coarse jest will ofttimes rankle in some sensitive, suffering soul, causing it to lose all its sweet hope and truthfulness.

I witnessed the other day a pathetic incident. A little hunchback boy was roughly pushed out of a game with these words:

"Go away, there is no room for a hunchback here."

The poor little chap came to me with a look of despair in his sad eyes.

"I wonder," said he, "if there will be any room for a hunchback in heaven."

Boys, is not this a whole sermon in itself?—Presbyterian Observer.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Dear patriots, I mean—for if ever your love for our country and its institutions was aroused, it surely must have been at the recent flag day exercises and the near approach of our "Glorious Fourth." The boys and girls of other lands who may read THE UNION SIGNAL must join too in the enthusiasm of such celebrations.

The children of the Cozy Corner, however, do not allow their patriotism to end with singing songs or marching in honor of our starry flag, or with firing off crackers and torpedoes on our nation's natal day. Back of all that we have a deep and holy purpose for which we have entwined a ribbon white upon our flag and pledged ourselves to total abstinence. We have "the life, the fortune and the sacred honor" of our country most at heart, and so we are united to wipe out the greatest blot upon its pages,—the giant evil of intoxicating drink.

The school-room doors are closed for the summer now, and you are all glad, I imagine; especially those who have earned the reward of earnest study and passed into higher classes. A jolly vacation and a happy time to you all. When you have opportunity write and tell Cozy Cornerers how you are spending the summer weeks.

Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

NIECES AND NEPHEWS.

Here I am again after so long a time. I would like to correspond with some of the cousins near my own age (eleven). I have a temperance cat; its name is Toots. I named it after Toots Willard. If all the temperance cats could meet wouldn't they have a big convention?

Mendon, Ill. ERMA M. THORNTON.

I belong to the L. T. L. as a member-at-large, and have a badge to wear to show my colors. Please put me on the list of nephews and nieces, auntie. I would like for some of the cousins to write to me. I am thirteen years old.

Willow Hill, Ill. MAUD DUFFEY.

I live on a farm. Last winter I went three miles to school. Would walk when the roads were too icy for the buggy and horses. I belong to the Band of Mercy. I have a great many pet chickens. One is named Frances Willard. I signed one of the red, white and blue pledge cards. ZELIA GRIFFIN.

Alexandria, Neb.

As I had a magic lantern I thought I would try to do something for the L. T. L. So I prepared a lecture and gave it last Friday evening. We made $4.35. I gave one-third of it to the L. T. L's, one-third of it to a boy who was in with me, and I kept the other third. Our Legion has sixty-five members and we are all in earnest.

Lake Preston, S. D. ARTHUR BROWN.

My mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and I like to read the little letters in the Cozy Corner. I have a little brother six months old, named after Neal Dow. I am seven years old, and I go to school and I am in the third reader. I have three sisters, and I have two brothers. My papa is a prohibitionist. We have a nice team of ponies. ENIGMA.

1, 2, 3, 4, 5 is something everybody uses every day. It is liked best when 5, 2, 1, but many people use it when they 4, 2, 3, made into 3, 4, 2. There is a continual 1, 2, 5 between its advocates and the liquor men; let us not shed 3, 4, 2, 5's because wine seems to have won, but let us 1, 4, 2, 5 the sword and go into the fight. In one thing 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 has the advantage. The 5, 2, 3, 4 charged for it is so low (it being free) that nobody need use anything else.

AMERICAN ENIGMA.

I am composed of fifteen letters and am the greatest day in United States history.

My 5, 12, 14, 11, 4 is what General Grant wanted, and is the signal of prosperity and happiness for a nation.

My 13, 1, 7 is made by the small boy on the Fourth of July.

My 10, 4, 9, 3, 15 exist in large numbers in our country to-day, caused by the hard times.

My 6, 2, 8 is the part of war which is most welcome.

O Lord our God, other lords besides Thee have had dominion over us; but by Thee only will we make mention of Thy name.—Isa. 26: 13.

THE FOURTH; FROM THE STANDPOINT OF TO-DAY.

Unquestionably the Fourth day of July, 1776, marked an epoch in history. The day which sees the birth-throes of a nation can never be other than epochal, both to that nation and to the world at large. Nor can a nation, however great it may become, ever reach a vantage-point from which the failure to look back with grateful pride to its birth can mean other than a loss of power.

England cannot afford to ignore the day when her barons at Runnymede wrung from the reluctant John her Magna Charta; nor can the world. As little can the love for freedom which is innate in the heart of man afford to ignore the day, one hundred and eighteen years ago, when that grand old bell in Philadelphia "proclaimed LIBERTY throughout the land and to all the inhabitants thereof!" On each of these days, as well as on countless others enshrined in loving memory, the world took great strides towards freedom, and humanity came, by glorious bounds, up to a higher level, a clearer air.

Therefore, it is eminently fitting that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of America should pause on this day, which represents our national birth, to give thanks and praise to God who called us into being, and whose hand has so marvelously guided our history.

But how most fittingly to commemorate this day is a question which, in the year 1894, may well "give us pause." We know that the ordinary, orthodox method of celebrating "the Glorious Fourth" is by praise and adulation.

Our orators will pronounce panegyrics upon this, "the greatest nation upon earth"; our patriotism will scream itself hoarse in our country's honor, that portion of it, at least, which has not already burned itself out in fireworks, or in a fluid preparation of a still more inflammable nature. Patriotism of the sky-rocket order will be in the air, and few will escape its contagion.

But the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has learned, in its twenty-one years of existence, that true patriotism consists neither in fulsome adulation of its country's glories, nor willful blindness to its faults. We have learned that, because a nation came into being through a God-given impulse does not prove that all its journeyings shall be God-ward. We have seen nation after nation throughout the world's history called into being for a manifestly divine purpose; and yet we have seen that purpose abandoned before its full consummation, and the nation turned aside to work its own unrighteousness instead of the righteousness of God.

Surely we cannot read our nation's history in the lurid light of the indisputable facts of to-day without feeling that it, too, is in danger of seeing the hand of flame write upon its walls the fateful letters which shall mark its overthrow.

What does the present condition of our national life mean? What does it portend? Who hath ears to hear cannot fail to hear the sentence of judgment pronounced against us in the high tribunal of eternal Justice. We have been false to our trust. We have turned from the worship of God to the worship of Baal. Our land, which was to have been the home of the oppressed, has become the home of the oppressor. Poverty stalks through our streets. The saloon has its iron grip upon our homes and upon our governmental life. The weak are ground down by the strong, and ever it seems more and more apparent that might is to take the place of right.

Can we boast of our purity, in view of an almost universal corruption? Can we boast of our freedom in full view of labor's oppression? Can we boast of our safety when the saloon exists under the protection of our laws, and yet a greater menace to the perpetuity of those laws than is anarchy: in fact the school from which anarchy itself comes forth? Can we boast of our justice in view of the fact that a glaring injustice is meted out on every hand; that, in a so-called republic, only one half the citizens are represented in the governmental life? Do strikes and industrial armies and our present success in dealing with the same call for loud and repeated boastings? Do they not rather call for sackcloth and ashes and a national humbling before Almighty God?

Well does Professor Herron, of Iowa college, declare:

"The people to-day are looking for new political conditions. Civilization is a vast undisciplined army, yet conscious of a universal change. The people are not angry, but are disturbed by sorrow and anxiety. The world is full of discontent and moving toward revolution. The race is learning that it is not an aggregation of individuals, but a union into one body. The association of men in justice is now the aim of politics. Liberty is but a means to an end. If liberty means no more than to fight each other for individual gain, it is a failure. It must be an association of men with each other. There are not two kinds of right—one for the state and the other for the individual. If there is a principle of right in the universe it is always right. The most significant fact in society to-day is that it turns to Christ as the ideal for humanity. If this ideal could be attained it would bring unity of the masses. The living Christ is the king of America, and the Christian state will be the only organized democracy. Americans are not democratic either socially or politically. In a pure democracy the people will be their own representatives. The Christian state will be the organized economy of the people. God sent this American nation to be an example to all other nations of the earth. We have failed. We have forsaken a trust. We are a fallen nation. Except the nation repent it cannot survive. We must prepare the nation for the Christian state and for the kingship of God."

And yet this address, replete with such stern facts and noble utterances, was pronounced "anarchistic" by the governor of Nebraska and by the press. If this be anarchy, then anarchy means a practical application of Christianity to state as well as individual.

It seems to us that the first use the Woman's Christian Temperance Union should make of the Fourth of July is to transform it into an occasion wherein these facts and countless others shall be fairly met. We wish each union throughout the nation could, on the coming Fourth, hold a public meeting, secure the services of some speaker who dares to face the truth, and then hurl this truth, red-hot, upon the people. If possible, hold an out-of-door meeting, in a grove, in a tent, on the common, or in any place where the people can most readily be reached; but let it be understood that you hold it, not as a day of jubilation, but as a great and awful day of awakening and enlightening as to the standpoint from which the Fourth of this Age should be viewed.

If you cannot secure the speaker, either from a paucity of such speakers or a paucity of funds, then let the union prepare its own program. There are books at hand in large enough numbers to furnish a startling array of facts. Dr. Strong's "Our Country," and "The New Era"; Helen Campbell's "Prisoners of Poverty," and others almost innumerable; while our magazines, notably the Arena,—that fearless exponent of the new civilization—contain in each number facts which may well thrill and startle into action.

If the occasion can be made a social and a financial success as well, by the addition of a lunch stand, an ice-cream table or any of the other methods by which our women know how to secure the inevitable dollar, so much the better; but by all means let the dollar be accessory to, not the principal part, of the plan.

Distribute literature upon these vital questions of the age. Sing songs which shall have in them the ring of the new dispensation. Let our country's flag wave above you, and honor its glorious folds, but strive, above everything else, to show to men and women about you that that flag can only be truly honored when it shall wave over a nation made free from iniquity; a nation in which the Lord shall be Jehovah, and not Gain.

God make us brave to face the truth; brave in the denunciation and the overthrow of evil, so shall our land indeed become what it has long boasted itself to be:

"The Land of the Free,
And the Home of the Brave."

THE PRESS AS AN EVANGELIST.

Press work in the temperance reform is nothing more nor less than temperance evangelization by means of the printed page. Thus the press becomes an evangelist, and no better definition of "the work of an evangelist" can be found outside of Paul's letter to Timothy, wherein he bids the young man, "Preach the word; be instant, in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with long suffering and doctrine."

For twenty years the W. C. T. U. has been winning to itself "the power of the press," and leading it to do the work of an evangelist—to preach the temperance word in season and out of season, reproving, rebuking and exhorting with patient, long suffering, and presenting day after day, month by month, year in and year out, the unswerving doctrine of temperance and purity.

As a result of this work it is the testimony of great numbers of temperance adherents that they became such through the potent influence of some periodical, story, incident, argument or short sentence, even, pointed with a temperance truth.

Since facts are ever more satisfactory than generalities, it may be well to glance briefly at the actual temperance work being done through the press.

Take up one of the issues of the local paper to which a W. C. T. U. press superintendent has contributed, and inquire into the varying mission of this column, which has been the result of such painstaking. The periodical, according to its circulation, is speeding to its readers—hundreds, tens of hundreds, thousands. Some of these, on turning its pages over, sight such keynote words as "temperance," "reform," "woman," "equal suffrage," and forthwith pass on, not caring "to waste their precious time over such matter." Others read, but carelessly, and forget it all in an hour. One reads with a passing sneer, another to take the truth and distort it into a weapon of sarcasm, to be flung at a temperance acquaintance, privately called a "crank."

This one hurls anathemas at the editor for admitting such heresy to his columns, that one, perchance, resorts to the severer course of a request to have his paper "stopped at once." But others—and blessed it is to know they are legion—read, mark, learn and inwardly digest, and temperance brawn and nerve are fed thereby.

Here is a quiet-faced mother, who marks the paragraph and sends the paper to her absent boy or girl, who is only too glad to read every word from home, and swallows the "little preach" with a good grace, since mother sent it.

A wife folds her paper so that particular article is uppermost, and lays it carelessly where her husband must see it.

A worried young editor in a country office spies out the bright bit of temperance sentiment or news, runs his shears about it, and the next week it goes out through his paper to a goodly circle of readers.

A minister of the gospel sees that this interesting incident or those startling statistics will enrich his coming sermon, and on Sunday he sows the good seed in many earnest hearts.

Another W. C. T. U. press superintendent, whose "copy" is due in the little office away out on some frontier of the reform, blesses her sister worker a thousand times as she seizes the fresh items and sets it in her columns.

Some John G. Woolley reads it, remembers it, and from his lips it issues some day as a very thunderbolt of truth to awaken dead consciences and affright evil doers.

But the press superintendent is blissfully unconscious of all this as she makes ready for the demands of the next week. God bless her in her work—as responsible as any in the whole field. Who, more than she, must know thoroughly the inner workings of each department?

But the work of the W. C. T. U. press superintendent in filling certain corners of the secular and religious periodicals is but a small part of the press work done in the temperance reform. There is a duty to be fulfilled in getting into print, and there is a duty equally imperative in getting that print read. In other words, it is one thing to prepare and bake a loaf of bread, it is another thing to see that the right people eat it.

There is not, we venture to say, one temperance woman throughout our ranks who cannot find few or many opportunities of placing the bread of the press where it will feed some one. Has that poor woman who does your washing ever had a bundle of good papers from your hands? Does the little woman who sits near you every Sunday in church and every Wednesday night at prayer-meeting ever have anything better to read than the Sunday papers her husband buys? You do not know? Why do you not know? Have you ever given your grocer, your butcher, your milk-man, your dressmaker, your house-cleaner, your doctor, your friend, your pastor a good loaf of temperance bread in the shape of clipping, paper, leaflet or book? No? Then you are hindering the temperance evangelization of the world through the press.

We have at our peculiar service THE UNION SIGNAL; for the Y's and their friends the Young Women, formerly called the Oak and Ivy Leaf; for the boy and girl graduates of the L. T. L., The Advance Guard, for the younger children, The Young Crusader; for the use of our rank and file, the rich output of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, in books and leaflets, touching all our lines of work, besides the wide field covered by temperance literature from all other sources.

Do you read your UNION SIGNAL and toss it aside? Does your daughter's Oak and Ivy Leaf lie among the waste papers and finally get carried off? Are the children's papers torn and thumbed, burned or sold? Are your Responsive Readings and Purity Leaflets tucked away between the leaves of books, some day to follow the rest? Then you are hindering the temperance evangelization through the press and withholding bread from the multitude.

When through the printed temperance matter, now so freely pouring into our hands from the presses of our land, we create a demand for more, we will have it. There is a great deal said about the undesirable class of reading matter forced upon the people. This is false. The people clamor for certain things and they get them. The newspaper man keeps one hand on the pulse of his public and with the other makes a paper to correspond.

Behind the evangelistic work of the press is the evangelistic work of the individual, and when every white-ribbon woman, and every temperance friend, has learned to read for temperance so as to glean the best temperance teachings and place them where they will reach others, then temperance evangelization through the press will be speeding on, demand for temperance literature will create supply and this create further demand, and who shall say what the press evangelist shall not accomplish.

ENCOURAGEMENT FROM THE ENEMY.

We always scan with interest our liquor exchanges. They are apt to indicate in a very encouraging way the progress of prohibition, and any Prohibitionist who may chance to peruse the paragraphs of the anti-prohibition press, and will take the trouble to read between the lines, cannot fail to feel a strengthening of faith and courage. For what is meant by the editors for a note of warning to the liquor interest comes as a word of cheer to its foes. Indeed if it were not that we object to rallying to the support of the enemy by subscribing for its journals we should say to every Prohibitionist (especially to the weak-kneed, those whom some one has expressively termed "wobbly Prohibitionists"), take a liquor paper.

If anything could make us more loyal to a radical prohibition policy it would be the attitude assumed by liquor organs toward the varied restrictive experiments now being made with such unsatisfactory results in different parts of the country. We are indebted to Mida's Criterion, the cleanest and "coolest" liquor paper published, for many a cheering view of the situation. Its presentation of the complications in Iowa are certainly more encouraging to Prohibitionists than to anti's.

One of the most striking features of the mulct law is the freedom it gives each community to work out its own salvation—whether from the drink traffic or from prohibition depends of course upon the point of view. Under this law the tax—for as the Criterion observes with fine irony "the Republicans solemnly declared it was not a license"—may not be less than six hundred dollars, but the maximum amount is controlled by local option; hence some towns are trying high tax, Creston, for example, fixing it at one thousand two hundred dollars. This method, besides granting the liquor-seller permission to violate constitutional law, tends also to create a monopoly, and is eminently satisfactory to the favored dealers.

Other towns are trying the Gothenburg plan. In Ida Grove, for instance, seventy-five per cent of the net profits are to be paid to the town and twenty-five per cent to the school fund. "All persons employed in the business must be satisfactory to the council and school-board," which means that the business will be run by the political machine.

That the Criterion regards the mulct law as a "bungling attempt to give some degree of freedom to prohibition-ridden Iowa," goes to show that the measure is not likely to be looked upon with favor by the persons it was originally intended to benefit. It is, in fact, a bungling attempt to cater to so-called popular sentiment in that state. Its worst feature in the eyes of the liquor interest is the "endless litigation it must produce." As this means endless agitation it is to the Prohibitionist the one hopeful phase of the law, the one result that will bring good out of this evil.

The Prohibitionists, so the Criterion informs its readers, are attempting to show irregularities in the form of the petition under which saloons are opened. This document grants permission to the applicant to "lawfully sell, etc.," and it is claimed that under the constitution the only persons who can lawfully sell intoxicants are the pharmacists. As might be expected, the saloon-keepers are now accusing the druggists of providing the financial backing in this contest, and they are watching closely for any violation of law on their part. With the druggist and the saloon-keeper each keeping a vigilant eye on the other there is hope that the work of the Iowa prohibitionist will be made easy. The mulct law, which the Republican party of that state risked its life to secure, is evidently not to bring the "relief" the liquor men of "prohibition-ridden Iowa" hoped and expected.

But while criticising the measure which has brought about such a "muddle," the Criterion at the same time regards it as a blow to prohibition. As such, and only as such, is it commendable in the eyes of the liquor fraternity. "It has cut the claws of the prohibition monster," it affirms. And this monster, which liquor leaders realize is growing to huger proportions each year, is the one thing feared by the whisky interest. The utterances of its press confirms the statement that unadulterated prohibition is the only remedy for the evils of the liquor traffic to which the rum power all over the land is vehemently and unalterably opposed.

Do the whisky organs claim that prohibition is a failure and that drink-sellers have nothing to fear from it? Not at all; on the contrary they are constantly reminding their constituencies of the necessity of guarding against the "encroachments" of the "monster." High license was, when first adopted, as strenuously opposed by liquorites as it was favored by loyal prohibitionists. A few years trial of the system resulted, as we know, in a change of front for both. Drink-sellers are now its strongest advocates; Prohibitionists its most active opponents. So it will be with all compromise measures. The Gothenburg plan, the dispensary law, the tax method—any system which regulates the traffic must invariably result in giving it added strength and protection.

The Criterion does not hesitate to proclaim the failure of the Gothenburg system, and quotes at length from an article in the Boston Traveler showing why, in the face of its known failure in Norway and Sweden, the Massachusetts commission recommends it to the lawmakers of that commonwealth; so why, in view of statistics proving the increase of drunkenness under its operation, it is not abolished in the Scandinavian peninsula.

Being therefore pronounced a failure by the leaders of thought in liquor circles, in fact admitted to be rather helpful than otherwise to the trade, we need not expect to find much opposition to the Gothenburg plan among the whisky forces.

We are pleased to note that anti-prohibition leaders are waking up to the fact—long ago perceived by temperance workers—that the prohibition question is becoming a potent factor in obliterating the old lines between North and South. The Criterion calls attention to the fact that Massachusetts and South Carolina, though widely divergent in sentiment upon other issues, "seem to be drawing together in a common experiment with the liquor traffic. . . . they are coming to have one opinion on alcohol." In this fact lies the strength and the hope of the Prohibitionists. There is gathering to this righteous cause, not a solid North or a solid South, but a solid nation. North and South are arrayed against a common foe, the enemy of every home and of every moral and industrial interest in our land.

We know well that the liquor question will never be settled until it is settled right, and it is clearly the aim of the liquor dealer and the politician to delay its settlement by experiments apparently so reasonable and righteous, and by sophistries so subtile as to deceive the very elect. We have said, and still say, that the mulct law is a step backwards; but we must not forget that it was not Iowa, but a party machine in Iowa—a combination of whisky-sellers and politicians—which foisted this law upon her citizens. The people have yet to be heard from. May the voters of Iowa, whenever opportunity offers, not fail to express the will of her people!

Whatever may be the action of the church as an organization, all reforms must originate in the principles of Christ and be pushed by His followers. No weightier responsibilities were ever laid upon those followers than at the present time, for we stand in the shadow of events as great as any the world has yet seen. Social changes, as radical as any of the past, are just before us. Like the Pharisees and Sadducees, we may be swept on or overwhelmed by them, or we may rise to the honor of the children of God, become co-workers with Him and assist in bringing about the transformation of society according to a Christian model.

About the last of this month there will arrive in this country two young ladies who are encircling the globe on a journalistic expedition. They are Miss F. Marie Imandt and Miss Bessie Maxwell, from Dundee, Scotland, who are representatives of the Dundee Courier. The mission of these intrepid travelers is to collect facts concerning all matters of interest to women. Last year this same enterprising paper sent out twelve men, artisans, to this country to investigate the condition of their several trades in the New World. They kindly visited THE UNION SIGNAL, over which this quill driver chanced to be presiding alone, and the one who ushered the stalwart party into the editorial rooms, inadvertently introduced them as representatives of an arctic expedition. We were so accustomed to all sorts of rare visitors and distinguished people, that it did not seem strange to have our quiet office invaded by twelve sturdy arctic explorers, whom we proceeded to ply with questions relative to the North Pole interests. When the mistake finally dawned upon us, the hearty base laugh from the twelve sound Scotch lungs joined with "On Duty's" treble, and a merry time ensued.

"A little item on the last page of your issue of June 7," writes a friend, "reminds me of an incident that occurred at the annual session of the East Ohio conference in 1888. Bishop Joice presided. When (in his examination of the ministerial applicants) he came to the question 'will you wholly abstain from the use of tobacco?' he eyed the class sharply as they all answered in the affirmative. Then, with the energetic, earnest manner all who have seen him will remember, he closed the book, removed his glasses and demanded if any of the class had ever used tobacco. One replied he had. Immediately came the question, 'Do you intend ever to use it again?' To the credit of the man be it said his equally energetic and emphatic reply was, 'God helping me I never will.' The Bishop then told why he questioned so severely on this point. He had once overheard a man declare his intention of quitting the use of tobacco just long enough to answer that question. Whereupon the Bishop vowed that if he ever had the power he would allow no such deception. I am glad this subject will come before the general conference and will await its outcome with interest second only to the 'woman' question."

On the 30th of May a party of temperance workers, including Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard, Mrs. Pearsall-Smith, Miss Anna Gordon, Miss Helen Hood, Mrs. Rossiter-Willard, and the four young stenographers who have been constant helpers of the English and American leaders, went on a picnic to the beautiful village of Horsmonden, forty miles from London, in Kent county. The reason for this visit was the fact that in 1605 Simon Willard, afterward major and judge in Massachusetts, was christened in the beautiful old church of Horsmonden, and in 1634 emigrated with his friend, the Rev. Peter Bulkley, to Boston, near which city they founded Concord, the famous literary village where Emerson, Hawthorne, Thoreau and other literary celebrities spent their days. Miss Willard traces her ancestry to Major Willard, being herself in the ninth generation of his direct descendants. He was a friend of John Eliot, the apostle among the Indians, to whom a memorial has recently been erected in England, and himself wrought well-nigh fifty years for every good cause in the new colony. Two of his descendants have been presidents of Harvard University, and one, the Rev. Samuel Willard, was pastor of the famous old South church, Boston, and opposed with might and main the hanging of the witches; another was the architect of Bunker Hill monument, and the family has produced many ministers, teachers and philanthropic workers. After their visit to Horsmonden the ladies proceeded to Maidstone and held a temperance meeting as the climax of their day's celebration in honor of a Kent county Puritan, who helped to lay the foundations of Christian civilization in the English colonies beyond the sea.

ON DUTY.

MICHIGAN.

OUR STATE CONVENTION.

It was at the close of the flowery month of May that we gathered in Ann Arbor for our twentieth annual meeting. For days and nights the skies said April, nevertheless, we came in good numbers, two hundred and twelve of us—four general officers, twelve district presidents, twenty-seven superintendents, the remainder voting delegates. Leaving out the children's organizations, we represented about twelve thousand people.

One of the leading papers of our state, the Detroit Journal, said of us: "Up to this time the women of the organization have carried on a warfare against intoxicants by presenting petitions to the legislature and by other mild means. These measures have proved ineffectual, however, failing to bring about the condition of affairs for which the women are working. In consequence of this the women have become tired of half-way measures, and now propose to carry the war into Africa."

The executive board was in session Monday evening and nearly all day Tuesday. At half-past three on Tuesday there was a delegates' conference and prayer-meeting, ably led by Mrs. P. J. Howard, eleventh district president. It was a meeting of great spiritual power, and not an unmeaning act was our standing as we sung, "Blest be the tie that binds," and giving the Chautauqua salute to our beloved Mary T. Lathrap, as with steps a little slower than usual she came up the aisle.

Our memorial service came this afternoon, and was led by her. "Sweet Bye and Bye" was sung, Psalm 23d read, and then as the districts were called their "promoted" were named, a large number this year. "One by one we grow to the glory none may know," said Mrs. Voorhies. "Flowers of hope fade; flowers of memory never," said Mrs. Benjamin.

"No life comes to perfect fullness that does not pass under the ministry of pain. No singer, no artist, comes to his very best until he himself has passed under the rod. Back of pain, his loss; back of loss, love. 'Some days must be dark and dreary,' our great poet said, but a greater than any poet said, 'In the world ye must have tribulation.'" These were the closing remarks of Mrs. Lathrap.

Tuesday evening we were royally welcomed by Mayor Darling in behalf of the city, by Rev. Mr. Gelston in behalf of the churches, and for the Y's a bright university girl, Miss Anna Richards, bore greeting.

Then followed the Y hour, over which Mrs. Hollister, Y superintendent, presided, a woman beloved by the Y's in the nation as well as the state. Her report was followed by a paper on "The Attitude of College Girls upon the Temperance Question." The exercises were closed by Miss Newcomb with Delsarte movements and Indian club swinging.

Wednesday morning the convention proper began. The resolutions committee was composed of one delegate from each district. The corresponding secretaries reported a total membership of 7,479; unions 425; L. T. L's, 110.

The treasurer reported that, in spite of the hard times more money had passed through her hands the year past than any previous treasurer had handled; balance on hand nearly $1,500.

The president's annual address was varied this year and recommendations only presented to the convention. These included the putting of two organizers in the field; plan for district presidents to attend the county, and the state president all district conventions; strict prohibition in opposition to local option or the Norwegian system; co-operation with equal suffrage association. These last were thoroughly discussed and unanimously adopted. In speaking of the condition of things, Mrs. Lathrap said a number of cities in the state polled a larger Prohibition party vote this year than ever before. Cass and Berrien counties still have local option. The W. C. T. U. is not in favor of local option, although we will assist in that sooner than have license, which we are very much opposed to. By local option the liquor business is simply transferred from one county to another. It is unjust to prohibit it in one county, while just over the line in the next county it is being sold as of old. It is state action that we want. What the W. C. T. U. is working for is statutory prohibition.

Wednesday evening we were given a reception in the parlors of the church, meeting many Ann Arbor people of note. Adjourning to the audience room we listened to a musical and literary program, a unique feature of which was a W. C. T. U. acrostic. The addresses were given by Rev. F. M. White, on "Women, Work, White-Ribboners"; Dr. Coburn, on "Children, Christianity and Country"; Professor Steere, "Time, Talents, Teetotalism"; Judge Cheever, "Union, University, Unity." Mrs. Wetmore, who presided, said, "We will now take a collection for the local union." When it was received she graciously said, "We now present it to the state."

The superintendents on all lines were given five minutes to report, and we had a "Mrs. Bailey" as time-keeper—inexorable—yet they told, and well told, a good deal.

Mrs. Benjamin gave three instructive parliamentary drills. There were two papers, the one by Mrs. Aldrich on "The development of the department method and its advantages in W. C. T. U. work"; the other by Mrs. M. B. Dickie, "Does the multiplicity of departments tend to divide interests and carry the W. C. T. U. away from the objects for which it was organized?"

The wise head of our president grouped the district presidents under topical subjects and they in groups of six occupied an afternoon and morning in papers of six minutes each. (My friends, I challenge the states to equal brilliancy. Send for our state minutes and you will agree with me!) The first was a conference of organization: "Why is it and what is it?"

Why did our Women Organize, by Mrs. Irene S. Clizby.

The Story of our Organization Twenty Years Ago, Mrs. A. J. Shepherd.

Constitutional Form of an Organization. Can it be improved? Mrs. C. E. Brown.

What are the Chief Hindrances to Organic Effectiveness? Mrs. T. E. Adams.

Our Auxiliary Organizations, Y's and L. T. L's, Miss Catharine Birrell.

The Proper Relation of the Department to the Organization, Mrs. E. S. Hopkins.

The applause and appeal for extension of time testified to the worth of these discussions.

Another interesting series was grouped under "Our Principles: What are they, and How can they be Applied," and comprised:

The Moral and Social Basis of Total Abstinence, by Mrs. Jennie Voorhies.

The Moral Quality of any Form of Regulation, Mrs. A. S. Benjamin.

What Right Have Women to Demand the Legal Overthrow of the Saloon? Mrs. J. D. Stannard.

If the Saloon is Overthrown is it the Duty of the Sober Citizen to Provide a Substitute? Mrs. P. J. Howard.

What Our Organization has Done for the Advancement of Women, Mrs. C. C. Faxon.

Is it Reasonable for Us to Ask that the Church Stand for these Principles with Vote as well as with Resolution? Mrs. E. N. Law.

Another stirring feature was a question drawer, conducted by Mrs. S. E. V. Emery, on the financial problems now before this country.

A very few of the questions I will give:

1. To what can we trace the present financial stringency?

2. What led to or caused the decision to decrease the volume of money at the close of the war?

3. Is it right to issue bonds at this time, and would it benefit the country?

4. What could be done as a remedy for the present panic?

5. Cause of depression in price of farm products?

Perhaps very few men have given the time to the study of these problems that Mrs. Emery has, and she was listened to with close attention.

NOTES.

We had three National superintendents and one organizer as members of our body.

The resolutions were especially strong on the political and suffrage lines.

We sold all the copies of "The Great Mother" sent us, received subscriptions for both THE UNION SIGNAL and our state paper.

As speakers for the evenings we had Rev. Henrietta Moore, the logical, and John G. Woolley, the inimitable.

Our summer home, Mary T. Lathrap Hall, at Hackley Park, received, besides donations, a valuable present of a Bible, given to Mrs. H. M. Wilson, who is state superintendent of prison and police stations, by the prisoners in the house of correction, and with their consent given to us. The inscription reads, "Memorial to Jennie Casseday,—from the Ionia house of correction to the state W. C. T. U. at Mary T. Lathrap Hall at Hackley Park." Think on this line a little, friends, the pathos of it.

The last evening the delegates, through Mrs. J. M. Kinney, presented a lovely basket of flowers to dear Mrs. Lathrap, who was reëlected unanimously. No change was made in the secretaries, but the treasurer resigning, Mrs. Voorhies, who has been first district president, was selected.

An outside affair, and yet pertaining to the inside, was the yellow and white tea given by Mrs. Morehouse, who was formerly ninth district president, to the delegates from her district, twenty-eight of them. It was, indeed, a dainty love-feast.

In closing, I will speak of the decorations of the large Presbyterian Church, in which our convention was held. The gallery was gracefully draped with white bunting, banners of the districts, of the Y's and L. T. L's interspersed. Over the rostrum hung Frances E. Willard's picture, and near it the new Y banner of the second district, which has adopted the university class of '94 colors. The sentiment of Mary T. Lathrap, that was the text for many a speaker, printed in large letters hung from gallery opposite: "We need stronger faith, stronger courage, and more prophetic vision than the Crusade women ever knew"; and Mrs. La Tour's sad object lesson on the side gallery spoke loud and long of why we work. These were clippings of crimes committed through intemperance, one thousand in all, seventy-eight feet long, five columns in width, the gatherings since a year ago last October. The platform was brightened with cut flowers and potted plants. At all the evening meetings we were favored with the choicest music; the organ playing of Professor Stanley was indeed a treat, and the music rendered was from Bach, Hadyn, Mendelssohn, Handel and Wagner. The quartette of male voices without accompaniment was especially fine.

OREGON.

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

I have just returned from our twelfth state convention, held at the capital, Salem, with the effect with all, I hope, as with myself, to place more irons in the fire, which will eventually help to annihilate the legalized liquor traffic.

We met in the Methodist church, which was made home-y, with banners, mottoes, flowers and the pictured face of our National chieftain. The basement parlors were used for hospitable lunches, children's meetings, and committee rendezvous.

No less than seventeen ladies were at once appointed to report to the press, and the principal city paper published lengthy reports daily. Our young lady pages seemed to be kept well on the go.

I think we had more visitors, especially among ministers, than usual, and all had brief words of cheer to give us. Mrs. Mead, our state evangelist, was able, because she lives near to her Heavenly Father, to bring us into His presence. Mrs. Osman, of Sunnyview, has quite a gift of singing the gospel without any instrumental accompaniment, which might, in her case, have proved a detriment.

The delegates numbered one hundred and two, amongst them two young men from the Corvallis Y's, who have embarked in two novelties, a Junior Y, and making their honorary members active with voting privileges. Our delegates came from both South (near to California) and East from over the Cascade mountains, one lady having driven seventy miles to reach the railroad. These eastern sisters have put up a request for a division of the state, which they think would facilitate the development of the work.

The county presidents (for now we can boast thirteen organized counties) were appointed the committee on plan of work. This plan of work has failed to reach me, so rather than delay my report I will reserve it for my next letter.

We were saved our usual trouble on minutes, i. e., making up back expenses, and taking up pledges for fresh ones by having none, but publishing full reports in our state paper.

The address of welcome, which was known to be a "tid-bit," in the hands of Mrs. R. S. Wallace, of Salem, was on our evening program, together with an equally telling response from Mrs. Amos, of Portland.

The report of the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Susie Foster, was very encouraging, inasmuch as it had things accomplished to show, such as ten new unions; saloons kept out of five localities by remonstrance petitions (seven have prohibition by law!); eleven unions have headquarters; twelve hundred and forty pledged L. T. L's; thirty-one Demorest contests had been held; twelve schools of method and three hundred and seventy-two lectures given. La Grande, a comparatively small place, boasts an L. T. L. of two hundred and twenty-three members. The leader was present, and her talk will have inspired others to go home and follow her example.

Notwithstanding the financial depression, which has been as deep in Oregon as in other places, the treasurer was able to show a small balance on her books.

Our state president's, Mrs. A. R. Riggs, annual address was the chief feature on the first evening.

It reviewed the work with its forty-five departments in a telling way, speaking of the evangelistic as interlacing them all. The refuge home, the outcome in Oregon of the social purity department, with its good accomplished and its possibilities to come (with the larger scope of the new building) was described. The plea for equal rights for man and woman, with many a convincing argument, was well made. The outlook for temperance throughout the country was considered broadly, the bright spots pointed out as being more in number than what were still dark, and well worth consideration for the sake of the blessing that encouragement gives. I will quote the words of a listener who said at the end of the first white ribbon evening: "I have listened to many annual addresses of this leader of Oregon forces, but I can say, without fear of contradiction, that this excels them all."

The second day the county presidents substantiated and enlarged on the work that had been summarized by the state corresponding secretary. Mrs. Williams, of Douglas, spoke of the telling banner and the refreshing ice barrel at the state encampment, likewise that at the soldiers' home lately inaugurated the canteen system will not have sway. Mrs. Kinney, of Clatsop, told of the rescue of three girls from the slums in Astoria. Mrs. Whitemore, of Yam Hill, spoke of Newberg having doubled its membership, making it the banner union of the state. The spirited verbal report of Mrs. Spray, of Morrow, elicited the warm applause of the delegation.

Among the superintendents on the first day, the work of Mrs. Gilbert in the Portland jail created much sympathetic interest. The average number in the jail is one hundred per month. Ninety-nine of these are sent there through drink. Salem, near which is the state penitentiary, with its average of three hundred and sixty-five inmates, reported good work.

It is plain all our departments are officered by energetic women, whether it is Mrs. Rounds, with all her merry bands formed inside the public schools; Mrs. Brookmiller, in her anxiety that the Oregon Scientific Instruction Law should in no place prove a dead letter, Mrs. Minnie Thoms (a bride of a few months), who feels as do all her flower mission workers the force of the following if:

"If I but had the power to stay
The blighting hand of pain and sorrow,
The human flowers that wilt to-day
Would raise their heads and bloom to-morrow";

Mrs. Marie Sickafoose (formerly of the Portland kindergarten), now in the foreign work, and last, but not least, the evangelistic report, which is, as it were, the keystone to all. Of the forty-three girls who have been the last six months in the Refuge Home, all but four have been converted. One hundred and forty-eight gospel meetings have been held, and many thousand gospel leaflets distributed.

Our L. T. L. secretary, Mrs. Ada Unruh, gave us no peace until she was allowed a whole hour in which to interest the convention in her branch, and very effectively she did it, as will be seen, I feel sure, by the starting of many more legions, when the present number of graduates—forty-four—will sink into insignificance! The L. T. L. banner which Mrs. Scott, of La Grande, so grandly won, was presented by Mrs. Narcissa White Kinney in a forceful little speech.

I was pleased to be able to report in my department four hundred and fifty columns filled.

The contest for a Demorest gold medal created great interest and brought us a packed house. The young people acquitted themselves with great and almost equal credit. The marks were very close, and the audience, as well as the young contestants, were on the tip-toe of expectancy as to the results. The gold medal was won by Miss Lena Parker, of Forest Grove, and was presented to her by Rev. Mr. Grannis, pastor of the church. A short address from Mrs. Leiter, who had worked as a missionary in Alaska, was listened to with much sympathy and pity for the Indians there.

The election of officers on the last day resulted in Mrs. White Kinney taking the place that has been filled for eight years with such untiring devotion and self-sacrifice by our dear Mrs. Riggs. This was feelingly alluded to in her short acceptance speech. The other officers remain in statu quo.

The first part of the evening was devoted to Y reports, presided over by Mrs. Thoms (the new Y secretary) with grace and womanliness. Our business sessions closed with a sweet prayer by our long-time beloved leader, that seemed fresh with the inspiration of the spirit, and fragrant with the fruits of service.

Our resolutions ring with these notes: Qualifying for suffrage; to be a woman no disqualification; as we are well indoctrinated by Mrs. Helen Harford (who would gladly have taken an hour for the telling), that our school law should have a penalty attached for violators; for compulsory education; for the reading the Bible, commentless, in the schools; that our state institutions be provided with the ministrations of chaplains; that, just as we pledge our support to that political party which best embodies our principles, so we oppose the appointment to any office of men of profligate life; that we oppose vivisection, and will do all that in us lies to develop the sentiment of mercy.

NEW MEXICO.

TERRITORIAL CONVENTION.

Owing to the great distances throughout New Mexico, county conventions are not held, but the eighth annual territorial convention closed June 8. It met in Albuquerque, Bernalillo county, and was one more beautiful success for the temperance cause. The residents of Albuquerque patronized liberally and all felt that much good had been accomplished; the workers went to their homes with new inspiration and a determination to do more in the year that is to come.

The doors of the First Congregational church were thrown open to the convention, and all of the meetings were well attended by the ministers. The church decorations were very handsome.

The ladies of the Congregational, Methodist and Presbyterian churches showed a wide-awake interest by preparing elegant noon refreshments and serving them in the parlors of the church. The press of the city was very generous in sending their own reporters to make note of the daily proceedings. The very best musical talent of the city furnished the music for the entire convention.

Wednesday evening the president, Mrs. M. J. Borden, delivered her annual address, which was full of interest, instruction and inspiration. It was thoroughly enjoyed by the large audience and highly eulogized by the press.

Thursday evening the question, "Resolved, that Alcoholism is a Sin rather than a Disease," was debated; affirmative, Mrs. Bovard; negative, Mr. T. A. Finical. Both sides of the question were well presented, but all felt that the affirmative gained the victory.

Friday evening the Ladies' Press Association of New Mexico united with the W. C. T. U. and gave a literary and musical entertainment which was a delightful treat, enjoyed by several hundred people. After adjournment ice-cream and cake were served to about three hundred and fifty guests.

The W. C. T. U. work here is gaining in popularity; some of the ladies of the press association declared themselves to be jealous of the W. C. T. U., as that organization seems to be claiming all of the best workers and truest women. But as some of the temperance ladies belong to the press association, we suspect the jealousy is not of a very serious nature.

Various lines of work are carried on in the territory, Loyal Temperance Legions are becoming more numerous and the Demorest contest department is gaining in importance. Scientific temperance instruction is receiving more and more attention and encouragement from school superintendents and teachers. Many of the schools in New Mexico now give to scientific temperance a regular place on the daily program. The teachers in the Mexican and Indian schools labor patiently to instill into the minds of the children wholesome truths concerning total abstinence from alcoholics and tobacco in any of its forms.

The little union at Catskill concluded that as there was no church building in their place, they would erect one. The funds were raised and the building is about completed. It will be dedicated of course to Christ and His Church, so that any Christian people may feel free to worship therein.

DELAWARE.

NEW CASTLE COUNTY CONVENTION.

Although Delaware has not been reported for some time, it does not signify that we have been sitting with folded hands, "For in the name of the Lord we have set up our banner."

Three profitable county conventions were held in April, but of the work done in NEW CASTLE will I now speak. In giving a report of the convention, a general idea of the work accomplished in the county may be obtained.

The convention was held at Marshalton and ably presided over by our county president, Mrs. M. S. Cranston. Mrs. R. H. Matlack, our state evangelistic superintendent, began our day's work with prayer and one of our ever helpful Bible readings, that bring us "in touch with the Master."

Words of welcome were given by Mrs. Ida Hewitt, of Marshalton, and a response by Mrs. E. R. Butler, of Newark.

A suggestion was made to have our state minutes given to our honorary members and distributed as literature.

The treasurer's report noted a general response by the unions to Miss Willard's plea for the World's union, and also a response by the L. T. L. to the fountain fund. Reports were given from all the unions in the county.

HILLES, one of our energetic unions, showed an increase in membership of twenty-three since our last convention. They circulated five petitions, and proved successful with two.

STANTON is doing good work in social purity, for they have an efficient superintendent in Mrs. Eunice Whitely. Their superintendent of scientific temperance instruction visited the public schools, and was kindly received by the teacher.

NEWPORT has subscribed for Scientific Temperance Monthly Advices, and isactive in L. T. L. work. Their colored L. T. L. holds the prize banner for the greatest gain in membership.

NEWARK has been working with saloon remomstrances, and was successful in two cases.

HOCKESSIN is working for its Temperance House which has become pretty well established and is generally patronized by travelers instead of the saloon that is in the place. They are interested in parlor meetings, too, and endeavor to hold one each month during the summer and autumn.

NEW CASTLE'S chief work is with the prisoners in the jail. Services are held there every two weeks and conducted by ministers of different churches. They are doing what they can in the line of scientific temperance instruction.

DELAWARE CITY is preparing for an entertainment and medal contest.

MIDDLETOWN holds monthly prayer-meetings and has a flourishing L. T. L.

TOWNSEND has held three public meetings.

WILMINGTON has distributed literature extensively. Five thousand and twelve boys have visited their reading-rooms.

Miss Margaret Eastburn's report of juvenile work was encouraging, two or three new companies having been organized.

Miss Mary Mather gave an interesting talk on Bible study.

Rev. Henrietta G. Moore made an earnest address in the evening portraying very clearly the need of equal suffrage. This was Miss Moore's third visit to Marshalton, and she was greeted by a large audience.

We were favored throughout the day by having our state president, Miss Margaret S. Hilles, with us, who always adds zest to our meetings.

Rev. Mr. Gardner, in whose church the convention assembled, gave us words of greeting and cheer.

Good reports were given of the Y's by Miss Bessie Mills, state superintendent, who presided over the evening meeting.

There were forty-eight delegates present.

E. ELMA PYLE.
Corresponding Secretary.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

FOR information as to suffrage contests bureaus, apply to Mr. M. M. Cooper, Jerseyville, Ill. He has both literature and medals.

THE small union at Manville, Wyo., feels greatly encouraged by the success of the first of a series of Sabbath evening services, held June 10.

THE Trilla, Ill., W. C. T. U. has lost a valued member by heavenly promotion—Mrs. Lennie Dornblaser Morgan. Appropriate resolutions were framed.

CHENANGO COUNTY, N. Y., has a member aged seventy-eight years, Mrs. C. Myers, who began her temperance work when but ten years old, in protesting against drinking and gambling as carried on in her father's tavern.

BAKERSVILLE, Cal., W. C. T. U. has $50 in the bank after erecting a $200 drinking fountain, which gave such general satisfaction that they hope to secure another. The union places SIGNALS in the barber shops and now has a cigarette crusade on.

A BRIGHT letter from the secretary of the Hudson, Ill., W. C. T. U. gives an interesting description of an L. T. L. rally, held June 15: "Tall boys of seventeen and eighteen, with fife and drum, headed the procession, and little tots of two-and-a-half and three years brought up the rear."

MRS. MARTIE P. EVEREST, of Hutchinson, Kan., says that the articles recently published in THE UNION SIGNAL, in reply to Dr. Lyman Abbott, by Dr. Bushnell and others, suggest a chapter in S. S. Reed's "Off Thoughts About Women," which she is sure UNION SIGNAL readers would enjoy.

HUENEMA, Cal., is bereft of president, financial secretary and treasurer, but has a corresponding secretary who is "in this work until death," and who "will collect the dues, and try to keep enough money in the treasury to employ a lecturer the first chance." There's "grace, grit and gumption."

REV. CARL HENRY CORWIN, who is pastor at Cragin and Hermosa, Chicago, has received a call to become pastor of one of the Congregational churches of Kaukauna, a growing city of six thousand inhabitants in Wisconsin. He is the son of a loyal county president of Vermont, and is a stanch Prohibitionist, always voting as he prays.

SAN LUIS OBISPO county, Cal., has a real brave heart in a sister who does valiant temperance seed-sowing, notwithstanding her steps are made possible only by the use of crutches. All the unions in this county could be aptly termed "shut-ins," as they are physically separated from the outside world to a great degree, but to the county corresponding secretary belongs the honor of being the first to send in the annual reports to the state.

MISS FRANCES ENSIGN, who attended the recent state convention of West Virginia, writes: "Miss Ida Abbott, of Fairmont, was appointed new state Y secretary. She is a teacher, very capable and faithful, and will do well. Mrs. N. R. C. Morrow, of Fairmont, the new state president, is a noble young married woman, formerly principal of the state Normal school, a talented writer and an excellent speaker. Her state will make great strides this year."

FROM Mrs. Frances J. Barnes comes a circular of Herrnhut House, Shawangunt Mts. Cragsmoor, New York, with this item on the back: "I call Miss Kite, the proprietor of this delightful place, 'Little Grace and Grit.' She has taken this mountain top for God and temperance. It is a resort much frequented by our white-ribboners. THE UNION SIGNAL and Oak and Ivy Leaf are always to be found on the table, and the hostess never appears without her badge."

MRS. MARKS, superintendent of social purity in Delaware, in her report of the Industrial Home for Girls said: "There are eight girls now in the home. They are obliged to care for their own rooms, do their sewing and attend school, and if their conduct permits, they are promoted each month from one grade to another. The last grade being the trust and honor grade. When they reach this grade they are thought to be ready to return to their homes or care for themselves. Some have been returned. Girls are admitted for different causes. One, a nice looking and capable girl in many ways, was addicted to strong drink. Best results are obtained in social purity by personal work; but we look too much for results. Do our work faithfully and leave the results to God. We can sow the seeds but cannot make them grow."

THE Wilmington, Del., white-ribboners will surely be rewarded for the work they are doing. Mrs. White, police matron, a good Christian woman well suited to her position, reports one hundred and ninety-four women and girls from thirteen to sixty-five years old. The women were sent to jail and the girls to the industrial home. She speaks of two women who on bended knee promised to do better if she would only save them from jail. Finally she was instrumental in leading them to Christ.

MISS MARY G. BUMSTEAD, the missionary to Africa who made such a pleasant impression upon the World's convention in Boston, has been in Colorado for the past year. She expects to make her way East during July and August, and would like to make a few engagements to speak. Her theme is "The evangelization of the world." We cordially recommend Miss Bumstead as a speaker and advise the unions and churches desiring her services to make an early application. Her address is 1440 Gaylord street, Denver, Col.

THE twelfth district, Michigan, stands at the end of the list of districts numerically, but it is number one in many things. The president, Mrs. Law, is continually in the field, and their departure on many lines, notably children's work, has been grand. It paid its assessment on Mary T. Lathrap Hall at once and in full. In the early spring Mrs. Law lectured to a large audience at Ishpeming and in spite of the hard times, secured thirty new members and several honoraries. She also lectured at Salisbury, a mining point near, and secured as honoraries several young men. This union at Ishpeming takes up thirteen departments. This winter they gave a benefit for their own poor, realizing seventy-four dollars. Garments were made and a little motherless girl cared for. This twelfth district, embracing as it does the entire upper peninsula, is a very difficult field to labor in, the long distances between the unions, the large foreign population, the transient dwellers and long severe winters test the courage and faith of our sisters there.

SCHOOLS OF METHODS.

It is hardly necessary for me to say to my faithful coadjutors and earnest, interested sisters throughout the land that circumstances entirely beyond my control have made it impossible for me to prepare and send out the somewhat elaborate plan of work promised quite soon after our National Convention. It is now so near the beginning of the many Schools of Methods in connection with the great summer assemblies that I can do little more than offer a few suggestions, hoping, too, that the July "reading" furnished in response to the call of our superintendent of that department may be found helpful. It is far from my ideal, it was so hastily prepared and under so great pressure that I can only beg our white ribbon host to "pass the imperfections by."

As to the Schools, both my experience and observation have led me to conclude that we miss much by not having a first-class secretary, who, with unflagging zeal, shall commit to paper all the helpful thoughts and ideas and opinions so well expressed and so constantly lost to those who must hear with their eyes. A "journal" should never be omitted in a School of Methods. My heart is full of pain when I realize what a fund of hints and helps has been suffered to go to waste because of this omission. While many Schools have had a nominal secretary, and others most competent and faithful, the printing of the journal is rarely provided for. Think how great a satisfaction, as the years go by, these same "old minutes" would afford, not only to those who were not present, but, if possible, far greater to those who, through these, would recall each hour of the companionship and growth in W. C. T. U. knowledge and wisdom. Again, when in the future the leader of a department fails to put in her appearance, how easy to fill the hour by referring to the journal; then follow with the review and discussion as usual. In case of great advance in the work of the department, what could be more encouraging than to note the progress? I need not elaborate these points, but feel confident that this word to those not already wise will be sufficient.

One of my dearest schemes was to prepare several plans of work and request each state of the several groups (New England, Middle, Southern, Western, etc.) to adopt uniformly the program best adapted to their needs. By planning the several schools of each state consecutively, thereby reducing time and traveling expenses to the minimum, would enable the schools to call to their aid specialists. Besides, as the years pass, the printed journal would, by and by, cover all our departments. It would be most interesting, too, to note the different views of the same question, as given by the home talent in the several localities. Not many years hence an exchange and interchange of these several journals would be an easy and profitable way of securing a program rich in detail and a veritable mine of information.

Remember, too, the enrolling committee. It would give your superintendent more pleasure than she could possibly express, to be able to give in her next report the number of those who have attended the Schools of Methods since our last convention. For the Schools yet to be held, how many will at least make the effort to comply with this request?

And now, my dear sisters, knowing your aptness to plan and your ability to execute, I look forward to great results, for what am I among so many—and after all why should I lament my failure when He alone can rightly guide us, and in His hands are all our ways.

Before I lay down my pen, what shall I say for all the words of kindly sympathy and tender affection so grateful to my aching heart during all these last weeks and months — words so compassionate and so touching and so true as to intensify the "tie that binds," and each day bring to my mind anew that most comforting declaration, "The Lord is very pitiful and of tender mercy." Your words are all written, my sisters, on memory's tablets, and as I go my lonely way, the thought comes to me over and over, that though the blossoms of hope fade, the flowers of memory can never perish.

Your true yoke-fellow,

A. S. BENJAMIN.

DEPARTMENT WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS.

A testimonial of twenty-two dollars was presented to Miss Anna Lindahl, missionary at Ellis Island, on her departure for Sweden, where she was called by the death of her guardian. She expects to be absent two months, during her absence Miss Alma Mathews will care for our missionary work as far as her other duties will permit. The testimonial was an entire surprise to Miss Lindahl, and is an evidence of the high regard in which she is held. The donors are the officers and heads of the departments connected with the Port. They gave this acknowledgment of her worth voluntarily.

S. F. GRUBB, Supt.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

Mrs. Mary E. Griffith, president of the W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia, and her able corps of helpers, are making sure and steady progress in public favor, being welcomed by the churches and regarded as an increasing power for good. Dr. W. R. Butler, forty-five years an honored pastor of the city, on the twentieth anniversary of the Luther Place Memorial church, desired the W. C. T. U. to take part in the exercises, which was done through an address by our superintendent of work among foreign speaking people, Mrs. Sophia F. Grubb, which the Washington Post characterized as an "eloquent plea for the temperance cause." The pastor and Dr. Hanrighans, a German preacher, announced themselves as Prohibitionists, and Dr. Butler said "the cause of the white-ribboners was dear to his heart."

Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, of Lexington, Ky., long an effective W. C. T. U. worker, has during the present year been especially active and effective in our work. As an evangel she has gone from place to place proclaiming the glad news of freedom from the drink habit and drink traffic through the various channels of W. C. T. U. work, and her messages, to unions, churches, L. T. L's, missions and evangelistic meetings have thrilled hearts and convinced minds, and her convention work has been especially blessed. Miss Laura Clay, a most able speaker for woman's ballot, has joined with Mrs. Beauchamp in the proclamation of the truth. The School of Methods at the Kentucky Chautauqua, to be held from July 4 to 14, enlists the interest and labors of these two noble women.

Dr. Mary Wood Allen has just closed a month of most successful work in Connecticut with the department of purity.

A cheering note of the work of the southwest district convention of Colorado (covering fifteen counties), Mrs. T. Rider Pickett, president, has been received. A Delta paper says: "A cold pencil and type report of such a gathering as Mrs. Pickett and her helpers brought about at Delta is as unsatisfactory as the description of the perfume of a rose or the flavor of a Grand Valley peach. The president of the Ouray union, her face aglow with enthusiasm, while joyful tears rained down her cheeks, voiced the general feeling of both guests and residents in the hospitable little city when she said, 'It has been perfectly blessed from first to last. I can never feel myself a stranger in Colorado.'" Mrs. Pickett says, "Interest in prohibition is gaining force that will tell this fall."

The following item from Miss Lodie Reed, corresponding secretary of Indiana W. C. T. U., well merits attention, and must interest: "Our experience this spring in raising money to complete our industrial school building at Hadley, and open it free from debt, has shown that, as you said in last week's UNION SIGNAL, 'there is money for our work if we use the proper effort to get it.' We started out to raise five thousand dollars, and have had more than two thousand paid and some three thousand five hundred pledged. The raising of this fund has also been a blessing in other ways, waking up unions from the half dead condition into which the last year's hard times had left them, and setting them to work in other ways. We are now in the midst of our annual series of inter-county Schools of Methods. Are holding fifteen this spring. These will be followed by a series of seven Y conferences in different parts of the state under the direction of our state Y secretary, Miss Dickson, assisted by Miss Hay. Sentiment in Indiana seems to be crystallizing about two branches of work, principally, woman suffrage and scientific temperance instruction."

A Frances E. Willard W. C. T. U. was organized at Tacoma in April, with forty-five active and two honorary members. Their first public meeting was a success in the interest of woman suffrage, at which Mrs. L. T. Hidden, of Vancouver, and others, spoke. Tacoma has been blessed by the coming to their union of several active W. C. T. U. workers who bring experience to the service, and are ready to join hands with others in the good work. Mrs. Croake, president of the union, is with good reason "hopeful that the organization will be a power for good" in that wonderfully growing city.

Whoever has failed to read "Beautiful Joe," by Marshall Saunders, our superintendent of the department of mercy in the Nova Scotia union, has lost great pleasure, and we believe blessing, and in the interest of this work we implore every W. C. T. U. woman to secure the book of beneficent lessons.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE.

THE ENVELOPE SYSTEM.

I desire this week to call the attention of every local treasurer to a revenue system that has been successfully used by churches, Epworth Leagues, Christian Endeavor Societies and mission circles for raising money; it is a numbered envelope system. The price for the outfit, consisting of full and complete directions, subscription cards for distribution among friends who would be glad to make a weekly contribution of any sum from one cent to fifty cents, or one dollar per week, fifty packages of small envelopes (fifty in each package), all neatly packed, is $2. We believe if this simple system could be tried in every local union it would treble their receipts. The regular price of this outfit is $3, but owing to the pressure of the hard times and our anxiety to see the system tried, we offer it for the next thirty days for $2, and we will send this box containing book of directions, cards and envelopes, post-paid, immediately upon receipt of the $2. We have only a limited number, and first come first served. We shall be glad to hear from any society using this envelope system.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

Conditions of membership in the Hospital Association: Signing of the temperance pledge, payment of $5 membership fee, and $1 annually thereafter.

Needs of the Hospital: Members in its Association; Endowment of beds, contributions of money, blankets, towels, etc. (As quilts cannot be used to good advantage on hospital beds, it is better to sell them at home and to send the money thus received.) Acquaintance with its principles and purposes. Urgent invitation is extended to all interested, and especially to all physicians, to visit the institution and make full inquiries in regard to its workings.

At the last meeting of the Board of Trustees of the National Temperance Hospital the appointment of Dr. S. H. Lawrence, as house physician, and the re-appointment of Mrs. Cleves, as superintendent of nurses, were confirmed. Dr. Lawrence has recently graduated from the Woman's Medical College, and will go abroad as a missionary in the course of a few years. There were several applications for the positions, but the opportunity of sending our principles abroad was perhaps the determining factor in making the selection. Dr. Lawrence is a capable and conscientious physician, and will look well to the interests of the patients. Mrs. Cleves' quiet and winsome manner has been of great benefit to all concerned.

Inquiry having been made regarding the principles upon which the National Temperance Hospital was founded, brings to mind the fact that there are constantly new recruits in the temperance ranks (and it is well there are, for some veterans are passing on) who are not informed as to the causes which led to present conditions. It is, therefore, well to state these principles again. They are:

1. Alcohol is a poison. Taken into the system, the greater portion is not combusted, but eliminated in its normal condition through the various organs of excretion.

2. In its passage through the system it destroys the tissues by coagulating the albumen and absorbing the water.

3. It lowers the temperature by disturbing the physiological and chemical processes of the body.

4. It lessens the amount of carbon dioxide excreted by the lungs, thereby loading the system with this poison.

5. It diminishes the power to withstand extreme heat or cold.

6. It weakens the power of the heart and paralyzes the entire vaso-motor nervous system.

7. By its interference with the moral functions of the various organs, it lessens the power of the human body to withstand disease.

8. It does not strengthen or stimulate, but depresses and diminishes the capacity for mental and physical exertion.

9. There is no disease afflicting the human body that may not be more successfully treated without the use of alcohol than with it.

Since the opening of the National Temperance Hospital to demonstrate the facts enumerated, many physicians have modified their views regarding the use of alcohol, and many more are living up to these principles in their practice than formerly, while other hospitals have followed the example set them by the handful of devoted women who sacrificed so much in time and money for this cause. It is reasonable to claim the educational work done by them influenced some, at least, of these things. The work must continue and be extended. If every state had a superintendent for the hospital, and every state superintendent would secure the appointment of one in each local union; if every one of these and all other loyal white-ribboners would call the attention of practicing physicians and surgeons to our hospital, and induce them to send patients there rather than to any other, how widespread its influence might become.

A visit to the hospital shows the lawn well kept, the flower-beds and borders all abloom; the shade of the trees and porticoes very inviting, while the homelike interior assures any incoming patient or visitor that rest and care are there insured. The matron, Mrs. Sara Hornby, is well-adapted for the position she has held so long. There are more patients in the hospital than is usual at this season of the year, and all are doing well. One, occupying Mrs. Hobbs' endowed bed, is the mother of four little children, who has come to the hospital from the deaconesses to welcome there the fifth child. But no father will welcome it, as it is not known where he is. Sick, he wandered away, and has not communicated with his family. This mother would be glad to have kind friends with good homes welcome any one of these little ones.

The matron reports the following needs: Tablecloths, of wide damask (white) for twelve-foot table; also napkins, and one dozen chairs for dining-room. The Y room needs repainting, which will cost about twenty dollars, also new hair mattress and easy-chair. Who will pledge any or all of these necessities?

TEMPERANCE CONGRESS REPORT.

It is the intention of the committee of arrangements of the Temperance Congress to publish a full report of all the speeches and papers of the Congress, provided a sufficient number of copies are subscribed for in advance to bear the cost of publication. Those wishing a copy should forward an order like the following to Secretary Bogardus:

Mr. Joseph A. Bogardus,
Secretary of the Committee of Arrangements,
167 Chambers St., New York.

DEAR SIR:—To enable your committee to publish the proceedings of the reception to Gen. Neal Dow and the International Temperance Congress held at Prohibition Park, Staten Island (New York), June 3, 4 and 5, 1894, I hereby agree to purchase ——— copies of these proceedings at 50 cents per copy, and will send the money immediately upon receipt of notice that the book is ready.

MY SUMMER IN A MORMON VILLAGE. Florence A. Merriam. An attractive sketch of the author's stay in Utah in the vicinity of the Great Salt Lake. The descriptions of village life are quaint and pleasing, while the glimpses given here and there into the dark intrigue of the Mormon faith are pathetic in the extreme.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York.

THEY MET IN HEAVEN is by Geo. H. Hepworth, who must ever be gratefully remembered for a preceding publication, "Hiram Golf's Religion." Indeed, the former is of close kin to the latter, many of the characters being the same. Although a writer on spiritual themes, Mr. Hepworth makes no claim for any creed; he uses no theological technics. He simply narrates in a strikingly clear and forcible way the struggles of a soul out of darkness into light, and be the belief of the reader what it may, he can but read and feel his own soul expand in the genial, indeed, it were not too strong to say, holy atmosphere of the book.

E. P. Dutton & Co., 31 W. 23d St., New York City.

BRAVE LITTLE HOLLAND AND WHAT SHE TAUGHT US. By William Elliott Griffis, D. D. Here is a very interesting little volume of history aptly dedicated "To that large number of American people, who, whether they know it or not, have in their veins Nederlandsche Bloet." The book is readable and historically reliable. It reads like a romance, this story of Nederland, which, as the author says, "has a Celtic, Germanic, Roman Pagan, Christian, feudal, crusading, and revolutionary history of its own. It touches also Saxon, Norse, English, Spanish, German and American history at many points."

Houghton, Mifflin & Company, Boston and New York. Price $1.25.

FIVE MINUTE OBJECT SERMONS TO CHILDREN. Preached before the Sunday morning sermon. By Sylvanus Stall, D.D.

These forty-three brief sermons to children were preached by Dr. Stall, while pastor of the Second English Lutheran church at Baltimore. With some object of everyday life presented to the eye, the author, after the manner of the parables, presents the important truths of the gospel to the easy comprehension of both old and young. The manifest purpose of the author is to render the Gospel attractive to the young, to present the great truths of salvation in plain, simple language, by means of aptly chosen objects and impressive illustrations. Entrance into the city of Child-soul is sought by assaulting both eye-gate and ear-gate at one and the same time. The illustrations used are impressive, the truths taught are important, and the impressions made are likely to be lasting.

Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York City. Price $1.

The ARENA for June contains an exceedingly valuable symposium on "Child Slavery in America." Alzina P. Stevens, assistant inspector of factories for the state of Illinois, leads off in a paper entitled, "The Child, the Factory and the State," giving statistics, factory laws, the violations and evasions of these laws, committed that greed may have its hands filled by the cheap labor of little children. Mr. Stevens dwells upon the injury done to children, morally, mentally and physically, in making them toil in factories, sweat-shops and the great retail stores of the cities. "It is not a trade that is learned in the great workshops where child labor is the foundation of a company's riches. What the child does learn is instability, unthrift, trifling with opportunity." "Not every waif, not every factory child, becomes an invalid or a criminal, a menace to society or a burden upon it; but that any so environed with evil in the most crucial years of a human life—the formative years—pass through to sound manhood and womanhood is a miracle." The second part of the symposium is conducted by Alice L. Woodbridge, secretary of New York Working Women's society, who discusses "Chiid Labor an Obstacle to Industrial Progress." She maintains—and rightly,—that "upon the weak shoulders of our child laborers depends to a great extent the welfare of the nation," and that the crushing out of the best in the children by putting them into the great work wheels of the world the sum of the nation's highest development is sadly reduced. Prof. Thomas E. Will, A. M., closes the series by furnishing "Data Compiled and Condensed from the Original Sources," and giving for reference by those who wish to pursue the vital subject further, a valuable bibliography of child-labor, consisting of reports and current literature.

Toothache is a little thing in the books, but many physicians would rather meet a burglar at the door on a dark night than to be called to cure a bad toothache, especially of several days' continuance. The old-time remedies only postpone the evil day, and usually the patient is respectfully referred to the dentist. Now to avoid all this trouble keep in the house a bottle of Dent's Toothache Gum, so handy to use; does not spill or dry up. Always ready. In value it represents but a small amount, 15 cents, but in good results untold pain and loss of sleep and rest. For sale everywhere by responsible druggists, or direct upon receipt of price.—C. S. DENT & Co., Detroit, Mich.

"MERIT WINS."

We are constantly advertising household articles, or such things as are useful in the home, and we are always careful to advertise only meritorious articles.

Advertisers of this class of goods use our paper, expecting they will make quick sales, because we are reaching a constituency of women, the majority of whom are heads of households. They have a right to think this way, and if our readers do not answer their advertisements they are greatly disappointed; many of our patrons have so expressed themselves of late, and we feel that we ought to assure our readers that what they see advertised in our paper is meritorious and worthy of their patronage. The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association is greatly benefited by the money earned by the advertising department, but advertisers will not remain in our paper if it does not pay them.

You will notice on page 13 of this issue a small advertisement of the Standard Tea and Coffee Strainer. This concern is greatly disappointed because more of our readers do not want their valuable and meritorius little article. I know there are many "so-called" strainers offered for sale that are of little account, but this one is the best I have ever seen or used; we are using it in our home, and would not be without it. I hope our readers will send 25 cents and get one.

HOUSEHOLD TREASURE.

GROWING POPULARITY OF THE OXFORD SEWING MACHINE.

There is nothing more truly a household treasure than a good sewing machine. To be without it, is to be willfully deprived of the immense advantage of one of the greatest of all inventions. A machine once bought is a perpetual treasure. It demands no wages, occasions no expense or trouble, and is always ready, without a moment's notice, to render the work of the laborious housewife tenfold more efficient and expeditious. Some machines combine the best ideas and suggestions which have been so abundantly introduced in this remarkable mechanism.

A machine which exhibits in liberal combination all the best features introduced, is the Oxford Improved Sewing Machine, made by the Oxford Manufacturing Company, Chicago. They make High and Low Arm machines, with lock stitch shuttle, running light and quiet. These machines have the following important features: Cheapness (ranging from $10.50 upward), perfect, almost self-adjusting and graduated tension, are under control of the operator, and are always positive in their working. They are entirely self-threading in all points, including the shuttle. The needle is self-setting, and the attachments are quickly and easily fastened. The shuttle has an easy, oscillating motion, causing it to keep its proper place against the race. Their Oxford Home and Columbia machines, with attachments, were awarded the medal premium at the World's Columbian Exposition, Chicago. See their advertisement on page 16, this issue.

A GREAT MOTHER

ZION'S HERALD, JUNE 6.

A GREAT MOTHER: A Sketch of Madam Willard. By Frances E. Willard, Her Daughter, and Minerva Brace Norton. With an Introduction by Lady Henry Somerset. Chicago: Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. Price $2.

The interest in this book is in both subject and authors. Madam Willard belonged to a hardy New England stock, transplanted to the prairies of the West. The Hills of New Hampshire were people of stamina and character; they were energetic and purposeful, and, as a result, were usually conspicuous in the democratic society in which they lived. Mary Thompson Hill married, in 1831, Josiah Flint Willard, a lineal descendant of Major Simon Willard, the old Puritan captain of Massachusetts Bay, conspicuous in the Indian wars of that early time. The commanding qualities of the ancestor have come down to his descendants in the latest generation. Josiah Flint Willard and Mary Thompson Hill were honorable for a long line of noble ancestors; but they will be remembered less for their great ancestry than as the parents of Frances E. Willard, the woman of high moral purpose, the philanthropist, and the born leader of her sex in one of the most important reforms of our time. The narrative is full of interest from beginning to end. Lady Somerset opens with a luminous introductory paper, reminiscent and appreciative of Madam Willard, as she saw her in 1890. Then follows the delightful biographical sketch by Frances E. Willard, and recollections by other members of the family, and the volume closes with the memorial address of Lady Somerset, on the life of Madam Willard, at Denver in 1892, in connection with the annual convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The book is admirably illustrated, and will be prized not only by the white-ribboners, but by all interested in noble character and philanthropic work.

ADVANCE, JUNE 7.

"A Great Mother" is the title of a volume of Sketches of Madam Willard, compiled by her daughter, Frances E. Willard, and her kinswoman, Minerva Brace Norton. Although Madam Willard's prominence before the public has dated only from the time when her daughter became prominent in public work, still, as these sketches plainly reveal, she shone by no reflected light, but had within herself the strong, serene, self-confident nature which gained for her the title of Saint Courageous from those who knew her best. Whether in the school-room, where she taught ten years before her marriage, or among congenial friends in Oberlin, or in the Wisconsin wilderness, or under the classic shades of Evanston, or under whatever stress, she appears always the same sunny-hearted, cheerful-tempered woman, mistress of herself and of her circumstances. These "sketches" are contributed by a number of persons who were more or less intimately connected with her, and together they make up a beautiful picture of her as she appeared in all the relations of life. Her old Roman firmness was tempered by benignity; she held her opinions tenaciously, but never combatively; on her tongue was the law of kindness; and the influence she exerted over those with whom she came in contact was marked and beneficent. Of course her history could not be told without giving that of her family, the different members of which are sketched by both pen and portrait. It is the record of a rare, strong, sweet soul, which is written here, and a record which will be perused with interest by every one into whose hands it may fall.

THE RAM'S HORN.

A Great Mother.

By Frances E. Willard and Mrs. Minerva Brace Norton. If you believe in the second commandment, or, in other words, heredity, you will be interested in reading of this great mother, Mrs. Mary Thompson Hill Willard. The introduction by Lady Henry Somerset is filled with bright specimens of clear thought and eloquent philosophy.

In the easy, flowing style which characterizes her writings, Miss Willard tells of her mother's ideas upon the care and culture of children; of her wise sayings; and relates many incidents of home life which reveal the strong character possessed by her mother. It is interesting as one reads the book to trace the qualities from mother to daughter, and to notice the kind of training which developed the characteristics of our world-known and loved Miss Willard. When our land is filled with such homes and such training a generation will arise which will trample under foot those strongholds of Satan, the saloons, and will raise the banner of God and temperance over the length and breadth of our country. The book will be an inspiration to every home.

CAMPAIGN ECHOES

A well-printed book, neatly and strongly bound, is "Campaign Echoes." It is the autobiography of Mrs. Letitia Youmans, the pioneer of the white-ribbon movement in Canada. It is written by the request of the Provincial Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Ontario, with an introduction by Miss Frances E. Willard, indorsed by Lady Henry Somerset. Though an invalid, Mrs. Youmans has written an interesting history of her life, and the movement in which she was engaged. This substantial and entertaining volume is worthy of a wide circulation.—Boston Star.

Signal Notes.

THE Salvation Army has forty-three newspapers, printed in fifteen different languages, and with a total circulation of 37,720,000 copies.

IN France the consumption of spirits has increased three times since 1850, and remedial measures are now being suggested. A thousand million francs is the estimated cost of alcohol in France each year.

SINCE 1869 European expenditure on armaments has increased by seventy-two million pounds. At the recent annual meeting of the Universal Peace Society in London, a resolution was proposed for a reduction of these gigantic burdens on the people.

SOUTHERN China is being visited with a dreadful plague which causes the death of eighty per cent of those who are attacked. It appeared in Canton about the end of April after a long drought, the first sign being the emerging of thousands of rats from the sewers and houses of the city.

THE London liquor dealers, in their meeting not long ago, stated that the total revenue from the trade to the exchequer was about thirty-five million pounds. As the expense of British armament is thirty-eight million pounds, it was urged that the drink traffic nearly paid for the cost of the country's defense! Nothing was said about the cost to the individual and nation because of the drink.

TOLEDO, O., with 90,000 population, has 800 saloons, making 1,600 out of the 15,000 voters of the city. They are firmly espoused to the party that favors the liquor interests, and are members of the liquor-dealers' association, voting solidly together. The same percentage of power is the average among our cities, but would avail little if the anti-liquor people would act as unitedly in casting their votes against the drink traffic.

THE editor of the Banner of Asia has been arraigned for his fearless utterances against the action of the Bombay government in permitting the open running of opium dens when it has power to close them. He says: "Nothing short of prohibition will save India from the profoundest depth of moral degradation and social misery. The opium vice is not one but many. Its name is legion, including the filthiest of all."

OF the enormous national drink bill for the United Kingdom last year, £138,854,829, only £21,255,416 was expended in the manufacture and distribution of the drink. Mr. J. Duthie estimates that this would employ about 527,086 persons at about twenty-five shillings a week. But if the whole of the amount were expended in useful and necessary articles nearly five times as many work people would be employed. Neat clothing and comfortable homes would displace rags and lack of shelter.

A WRITER in the Century magazine adduces facts and arguments which clearly prove that municipal government in Germany, France and England is superior to that of the United States. The growth of population in German cities compared with these of America is in favor of the former, and a similar advance has been made in the administration of municipal affairs, giving more solid pavements, railway and dock accommodations. The just conclusion is that there is room for decided improvement in the management of American cities.

M. LALAUNE, a French authority, gives some interesting statistics regarding the number of drink shops in France and Belgium. The latter country in 1892 had one drinking place for every thirty-nine inhabitants, comparing favorably with the ratio fifty years ago which was one to every eighty-three. In France the proportion is much greater; in 1886 it was one for eighty-seven inhabitants. Marseilles alone shows an increase in the last half century of five times the former number.

THERE is to be a union temperance celebration held midway between Minneapolis and St. Paul on the Fourth of July. All of the temperance organizations have been invited to aid in the arrangements and program, and many, including the W. C. T. U., the Good Templars, the Boy's Brigade, the Catholic Crusaders, the Keeley League, Christian Temperance League and the Prohibition clubs and committees, have responded, and an excellent program has been arranged for, upon which will appear as one of the chief speakers ex-Gov. John P. St. John. Pleasant grounds have been secured, and a large seating capacity is assured.

A MOST FASCINATING STORY, GIVING THE ART OF TRUE LIVING, AND POWER TO MEET EVERY DIFFICULTY
"No more charming book could be placed in the hands of a girl. It is so bright, so piquant, so full of delicious bits of nature, that one can hardly lay down the book without finishing it at one reading."
Nellie Blessing Eyster.—In Koradine the science of right thinking and right living is portrayed in a way so fascinating to the reader that one closes the book with a realization that he has been breathing the air of heaven. No other book like it in scope of thought, in elegant simplicity of language, nor in sweet and wholesome purpose, has appeared in this century. Although written for the benefit of young girls, it is equally enchanting and instructive to thoughtful boys; and the wise, loving mother, seeking for the highest spiritual and physical development of both, can obtain no better aid than by placing in their hands this incomparable book.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The British House of Commons has declined to reduce the tax on beer.

Iowa Prohibitionists convened at Des Moines June 28, nominating a state ticket.

The New York police investigating committee has adjourned until September 10.

The bill to admit New Mexico to statehood has gone to the Senate, having passed the House.

Indiana mine operators have granted the claim of their men for increased pay, and work is resumed.

A bill making Labor Day a national holiday has been passed by Congress and signed by the President.

An inter-colonial congress was held at Ottawa, Ontario, Can., for the purpose of furthering trade alliance.

The University of Michigan conferred degrees on six hundred and eighty-nine graduates last Thursday.

Mobs have threatened the Italian quarters in many French cities, sacking wine and fruit shops and cafés.

The Sunday Rest Association of Chicago has denounced the mayor's action in vetoing the Sunday Closing bill.

Sir Oliver Mowatt, who has served as premier in Ontario, Can., for twenty-three years, was reëlected last week.

The annual picnic of the Chicago Waif's Mission was held at Jackson Park, June 28, with eight thousand in attendance.

Many nations and prominent municipalities through their representatives have expressed sympathy with the people of France in their national calamity.

Mrs. Mary Frost Ormsby has been appointed a delegate by the American Peace Society to the sixth universal peace congress at Antwerp, August 29 to September 1.

Forty of the four hundred and six delegates at the New York Prohibition Convention at Syracuse were women. Francis E. Baldwin, of Elmira, was nominated for governor.

M. Casimir-Perier was elected President of France to fill the vacancy caused by the assassination of the late President Carnot. The trial of the assassin is announced for July 23.

King's county, N. Y., W. C. T. U., in its meeting at Brooklyn, June 28, passed unanimously a resolution not to patronize stores of any description which have intoxicating beverages for sale.

The boycott of Pullman trains has led to great inconvenience for the public. Attorney-General Olney has ordered the enforcement of the law regarding the obstructing or delaying of the United States mails.

According to a decision by Judge Colt, of the United States district court at Boston, the Japanese, being of the Mongolian race, come within the Chinese exclusion act, and are not eligible to citizenship in the United States.

The Pullman Palace Car Company, Friday, sent to the internal revenue collector twelve thousand five hundred dollars in payment of the twenty-five dollars' annual revenue tax for each of its five hundred buffet cars on which liquor is sold.

A dispatch from Albany, June 29, announces that the equal suffrage committee of the constitutional convention stands only as five to twelve in favor of abolishing sex distinction. Its report will be, however, that the subject be made a special order and debated at length.

Last Thursday afternoon was spent by the Solons of the nation in the Senate chamber in a discussion of the whisky schedule of the tariff bill. A motion was passed to make the increased tax go into effect immediately on the passage of the bill. Distillers are removing large quantities of whisky from bond in anticipation.

THE league of Republican clubs in Denver has advised its members to "study up on female suffrage." Verily, the day of enlightenment dawneth.

FOR one short hour last Saturday we held delightful converse with Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell, whose change of plans are announced in another paragraph. True to the great work laid upon them, they are hurrying on to England, utterly regardless of personal comfort, with the dust of the Orient still on their garments. Verily, the Lord will protect such consecrated workers, and bless their devoted labors for human weal.

"EVERY turn of the car wheels sings 'Home, Sweet Home,'" writes Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, en route to Boston, June 28. Mrs. Stevenson will spend a month in the East, presenting her favorite subject of temperance literature at the New England Chautauqua, July 10, and preaching the annual sermon at the New England W. C. T. U. conference, Ocean City, July 15. We warn the Massachusetts sisters not to place too many allurements before our contributing editor, as we do not regard her as Lent(e) any longer, but ours by right of adoption.

THE new census for Chicago shows a grand total of 1,700,000, an increase of one hundred thousand over the World's Fair year, which is exactly opposite to the predictions, as it was thought that a goodly proportion of the city's population were Fair residents only. One strange political feature of the canvass is that while there are 466,960 males over twenty-one years old in Chicago, there are only 288,933 registered voters. Consequently there are 178,027 male adults who do not vote—nearly forty per cent of the voting population. And yet one of the chief objections to extending full suffrage to women is that they will not all avail themselves of the privilege!

IOWA Prohibitionists are acting wisely in deciding to test the constitutionality of the infamous Mulct law, which everybody now acknowledges to be nothing more or less than high license. A Des Moines liquor seller will be prosecuted July 10, and a decision will be rendered in time to bring it before the supreme court at the October term. The recent state convention declares: "The so-called Mulct law, enacted at the demand of the liquor power, is an outrage upon the moral citizenship of the state, and the proposition to re-submit the prohibitory amendment a mendacious political trick to palliate that outrage, and while we denounce the political trick of its submission, we desire, and will do all we can, for the adoption of the prohibitory amendment when it comes to a popular vote." A full state ticket was nominated, including Rev. Bennett Mitchell, and Mrs. Marion H. Dunham, W. C. T. U. state president.

THOSE were great speeches of the great men at Harvard University, wherein they recounted the glories of its development, and presented a gold medal to President Eliot for his twenty-five years' service. But to a simple woman's mind the complete omission to include that "branching out" whereby Radcliffe College, with its "sweet girl graduates" has become equal in educational status and opportunity to the university of which it is the "Annex," is indicative of a non-development of the new chivalry in the minds of these great men. But all the same there are new men who could not so fail or forget, and they grow more numerous each day. With a young woman distancing the Senior Wrangler at Oxford, England, another taking the prize in oratory at Cornell, New York, and three carrying off prizes in the Lutheran University at Gettysburgh, Pa., with almost every college door open and the professions now free to women, it becomes all wise men and educational leaders not only frankly to accept the situation, but to glory in the discovery that in all lines of life "it is not good for man to be alone."

IN England the jails, prisons and public institutions are in a large degree shut away from the public. Women seek in vain to gain admission to the police stations that they may learn what is going on. We think it would be better if the public, which has the taxes to pay, and whose interest in all these institutions is vastly beyond what the interest of any transitory government can be, were allowed to have access to all institutions pertaining to the people. We believe it would be better for those who are incarcerated and better for the people themselves. It would increase the total intelligence concerning the defective, dependent and delinquent classes. It would bring abuses directly to the knowledge of those who are most concerned to have them abolished, and would soften the asperities of life to those large and unfortunate classes who form the minus side in character and life.

ONE of our special issues that is eagerly awaited each year is the Fair number. The date of it this year will be August 30. This is a number particularly for the farmers and their wives, among whom are so many honored members and brothers-in-law of the W. C. T. U. We always try to give them something of special interest, both as regards farming and temperance; and for that smaller class of husbandmen who do not believe in and vote for temperance measures, we will have earnest, persuasive words of counsel and entreaty. Another prominent feature of the Fair number is the suggestions to local and county unions for securing a foothold on the fair grounds, and utilizing such opportunity for the propaganda of our temperance mission. To this end we invite contributions from all readers who have had experience in temperance fair work. These contributions should be brief and in our hands not later than August 10.

AN imperative call of duty necessitates a change in the plans of Dr. Kate C. Bushnell and Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew. They reached the United States Monday, June 18, coming more than a fortnight before their expected date of arrival, because of great weariness and a sense of Divine guidance in hastening home. Immediately upon their arrival they were met with most urgent pleas to hasten on to England. A very unusual crisis has arisen in the British Parliament which involves the moral and spiritual welfare of millions. The Royal Opium Commission is about to make its report for parliamentary action on the opium traffic. Further, the matter of the state regulation of vice in India is up for consideration. The Christians of England are doing everything in their power to arouse the conscience of the British government on these two questions which vitally concern the moral welfare of the entire Orient. It is in order that they may emphasize their testimony on the evils both of the trade in vice and the trade in opium in the eastern world, that our third and fourth 'round-the-world missionaries have felt called to proceed directly to England. The immediate haste is in order to attend the great meeting of the British, Continental and General Federation for the abolition of the state regulation of vice, which, as they have been informed by cablegram, convenes in London, July 12 and 13. Therefore, with scarcely an hour's rest, they are speeding on their way across the Atlantic to further labors in behalf of the women of the Orient. They earnestly beseech the prayers of all white-ribbon sisters that God may send the convicting power of the Holy Ghost into the hearts of British legislators, that they may be caused to see their tremendous responsibility to the Far East at this unusual crisis in the world's history. They wish to express their heartfelt appreciation of the cordial welcome they have received upon their arrival in the home land, and to those who have already sent invitations for meetings. It is a real sorrow to disappoint these kind friends, but they earnestly trust to be able to fulfill all these requests at no distant day.

AGE.

A Sonnet—Dedicated to Frances E. Willard.

BY FRANCES OVIATT LEWIS.

The wind-blown trees—at noon a tossing band—
Are stilled with magic touch by gentle night;
The birds fly past to nests in blossoms white,
While stars their pale and mellow light expand.
For falling twilight now with wizard hand
Touches the face of nature with more tender light,
Veiling rough furrows from the keenest sight,
And peace spreads brooding wings o'er all the land.

So, on the face of age, as life draws near Infinity,
A beauty grows which youth will never know;
A radiance from the past, and sweet serenity
Shine where the dimples chased so long ago,
And pain and sorrow have no power to war
The inner light of soul which shines forever there.

"TONY."

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

Summer is a terrible season in St. John's street. Out in the orchards in the lovely country bobolinks flash up from the tall grass and sing their sparkling carols in praise of glorious July. The hummers dart above the honeysuckles and roses. The bees hm above the clover. The ferns give forth their perfume to the mid-day heat, and in the transparent shallows of the river snowy lilies open.

But in St. John's street all the day from early dawn till long after dark there is a ceaseless rumble of drays and carts, a din of gongs, for the grip-cars cross it to plunge into the tunnel, and when the rolling-mills and the box factory are going there is added the clamor of machinery. Not a spear of grass is to be seen in it from Avenue K to Avenue T. Around one electric light pole a lusty dog-fennel once took root, and for a time led a scrubby existence, much to the delight of the many children of the neighborhood. But after a time it gave up the fight. When the wind was east the fumes from the gas-works were stifling, and quite too much even for dog-fennel.

Rows of low, sooty, squalid houses line either side the street from Avenue K to Avenue B, and each one is full of people as it can hold, for rents are dear in Zoar, and for all sorts of work that poor people can do there seem to be a dozen hands stretched out. The only prosperous looking places on this bit of street are the saloons. The saloon-keepers wear good clothes and carry gold watches. The four on the short piece of highway I have indicated call their places "Exchanges," a most appropriate name, for in exchange for hardly earned dimes and dollars the people receive there drink, destitution, disease, disgrace and death. Garbage boxes, black with flies and reeking with odors, stand at regular intervals along the pavements, which are of wood, pasty with filth and broken with age. But the street, such as it is, is better than the tenements. It is a relief to escape from them into it.

There were a dozen or more children squatting along the side of the alley or leaning against the great pole loaded with wires near it. Out of the west the wind poured as from an oven, and from the high walls and the stones in the road the heat still twinkled, though it was evening. It was not wonderful that particular part of the street had a funeral daily, or oftener.

"I wance was oop th' lake," announced Mikey Roach, a tall boy. "Me uncle, Timmy O'Shea, may the hivens be his bed! tuk me. He was ship's cook two months, barin' thray wakes, when he died, God rist his sowl! Sich a viage wud be the makins av Tony."

"It's grass he nades," said Patsy Flanigan. "Me grandmither says this is a turrible place to be auld in, an' to be little in, an' grass kapes folks healthy. Yis, an' trays. Tilegraph poles ain't shady,"—he glanced about at the lofty shafts dim in the gloaming with their loads of wires. "'Tis misilf wishes I cud take Tony to me country risdince."

"I wass hearin' off folks as takes kids to th' country," announced Bertha Oleson, shifting the pallid baby she was tending from one tired shoulder to another. "Yas. It was at the mission school, and they said it was so peautiful, dose kountry. One girl she was tellin' me dere wass flowers aplenty for everyone to pick."

"I've been to the park," said skinny Janey Higgs. "There was flowers, but the cops would git you for touchin' of 'em. There was lions, and it was splendid when they roared. I think it would do Tony heaps o' good to hear 'em."

"We cud sind him on a 'scursion," said Mikey. "It ud on'y cost a matter av a dime or two. But his clothes is auld-fashioned."

A laugh followed this sally. Tony, the boy under discussion, was an Italian waif, and one of four who lived with a dark-skinned old man named Theodore Foscatti, whose appearance was the signal for a general disappearance of the children of the neighborhood, so afraid were they of his fierce, black eyes, his cane, and his shrill tongue. Old Foscatti kept his boys in rags that scarcely held together, and compelled them to deliver the pennies they gained begging after their street concerts (so-called) to him.

Little Tony played the violin, and though his instrument was an unworthy member of its tribe, he handled it with a born musician's magic, and so generous and gay was he, so ready to help, and to lend a hand to anybody, in any emergency, whether it was a crying baby to be soothed, a seam to be sewed in a hard-running machine, an errand to be done, or a doll to be mended, or mush to be stirred, that now he was ill all St. John's street was moved in his behalf. But it was a busy hive, at least for the women and children. Little fingers sewed buttons. The girls sorted rags and picked over tobacco. The boys sold papers and blacked boots in addition. There was small opportunity to do neighborly offices for Tony, who lay worn and weak in old Foscatti's cellar,—much to the great irritation of that old savage, who assured him if he did not mend soon they would all starve, a catastrophe for which he, Tony, must answer to the saints. As for the boy, all he could do was to count the beads which he for some reason believed had belonged to his mother, and then doze off into forgetfulness. A young doctor, come from no one knew where, had visited him and given him some drugs. A Salvation Army woman had visited him and had stroked his head with her cool fingers, and had brought him an orange. But Padrone Foscatti had interfered with further attentions. The young doctor had said Tony was overcome by the heat. Old Foscatti scoffed at the idea. "Why am I not overcome?" he demanded, foaming at the half-conscious Tony.

It was during one of his worst paroxysms that Mikey Roach had come in with a banana for the invalid. Mikey's life was not easy. He did odd jobs at the box factory when it was running, and picked up rags with Abraham Isaacs when it was not; and whether he did well or ill he was sure of a sound scolding from his red-headed step-mother when he got home to the two rooms which he shared with her and his four half-brothers and sisters. But the baby, Peter, was fond of him, and the step-mother's bark was worse than her bite. He felt quite sheltered and loved in comparison as he listened to the old Padrone's incomprehensible words, but very comprehensible feeling; and the next morning after the conversation recorded he determined to risk a scolding, and, possibly, a penance, for he had heard Father O'Dowd say many a time that he was sure "God hates Lutherans," and went to the tiny chapel up Avenue K, where Pastor Katz preached every Sunday.

The morning was cruel hot. Pastor Katz was tired. and he preached in German. The singing was in German. Even the deacons dozed. As for poor Mikey he fell fast asleep and when he woke he found himself alone. When he was again in the street he found the wind had shifted, and brought faint suggestions of the great lake. He turned his steps toward it, and, after a time, came a bit of open space where some Salvation Army workers were holding a meeting. There was a man holding a flag. One of the women with him had a tambourine, and sang in a high, sweet voice what seemed to Mikey a most beautiful hymn, about "the far away home of the soul." The other women prayed. About them were slatternly women holding babies, while other children clung to their gowns. A few men slouched on the outskirts of the crowd. The woman who had prayed began to talk, and told of heaven.

"Ah, think," said she, "of its fair green fields where flowers bloom, and where there are never tears, nor pain, nor death." Mikey listened attentively, as he told himself, trying to "git some light on a good place for now." After the last hymn he presented himself.

"Have you ever thought about going to heaven?" demanded the pleasant-voiced woman.

"Yis, mu'm, frayquent, whin I has time," he replied politely. "Father O'Dowd kapes it in me moind, but what I'm after is a chance at the fields for Tony now."

"I can give you the address," said the kind worker, when Mikey had made himself plain, "but there are conditions, and I don't know about Dagoes."

"Savin' your presince, mu'm," interposed Mikey quickly, "inside him Tony's a gintleman."

That was the one touch needed to harden Mikey's kindly wish to serve his friend into a set purpose, and when, at last, after incredible efforts on his part, and the sacrifice of his own best jacket in spite of his step-mother's tears, he saw Tony propped up in a seat in a car bound for Fernwood, only a clog dance of the most pronounced description could express his feelings. "Hustle wid yur healths, me b'y," said he at parting, as he grasped Tony's thin, yellow paw. "Ye'll be a credit to us, I'm sart'n. Bring back wid ye sthrength, and to sphare."

THE GOTHENBURG SYSTEM.

II.

BY REV. CARL F. ELTZHOLTZ.

There are widely different opinions concerning the Gothenburg System and its dispensaries ("Samlagene"). Some believe that no substantial good is gained thereby, while others are of the opinion that it promotes the cause of temperance. The real truth is that the dispensaries have different influences in different localities. It depends largely on who the managers are and what interests the dispensaries are expected to serve. If the managers are persons who are in sympathy with the drink traffic and who do not recognize any danger or wrong in the intoxicating use of drinks, and if they believe that the surplus from its sale is a real gain and a blessing for the local government, then it must be put down as granted that the dispensaries will be the cause of as much drunkenness, degradation and damnation as the average high license saloon. But if the management is laid in the hands of persons who are opposed to the drink traffic, because they are convinced that it is only evil in its effects, and that the more it can be hindered the better it is for the individuals and the community at large, then it must be admitted that the Gothenburg System is the best form of license system in existence. If the drink traffic shall be tolerated and licensed in a community then the dispensaries are, if they are managed well, to be preferred for the private saloon. But why should the saloon nuisance be tolerated in any community?

The Gothenburg System throws great temptations on the path of the municipal authorities which many of them do not care to resist. The persons who hold individual licenses sell liquor for their personal gain, and to satisfy their insatiable greed for money; but when the municipal authorities—the "city fathers"—monopolize the liquor traffic and put agents, who represent them and their interests, behind the bar in the dispensary to sell whisky for the benefit and in the name of the city government, then the "city fathers" have become saloon-keepers, debauchers, seducers and corrupters of public morals, of innocent youth—the children of their own city; they have become what Wesley calls "poisoners general" upon whom "the curse of God is in their gardens, their walks, their groves, a fire that burns to the nethermost hell! Blood, blood is there; the foundation, the floor, the walls, the roof, are stained with blood," and this only to satisfy (not personal greed, as in the case of the individual saloon-keeper, but) the municipal greed for money regardless of the social, moral and spiritual consequences upon the community which they have the honor to represent.

Hon. Sven Aarrestad, president of the Norwegian Total Abstinence Society, and member of the Norwegian Parliament (Northinget), who has investigated a number of the annual reports from the dispensaries in several Norwegian cities, remarks: "It cannot be denied that some of them (the reports) give the impression that the dispensaries, instead of diminishing the liquor traffic rather do their best to extend it, so as to make the business as profitable as possible." In the annual report from the dispensary in Drammen, for 1882, it is said: "The surplus for 1882 is Crowns, 6,271.73. When it is remembered that the dispensaries have had to contend with considerable competition, this must be considered very satisfactory." The competition spoken of is from the private saloons which had not yet been swallowed up by the monopoly.

The report goes on to say that there had been an increase in the sale of liquor, which increase probably was because the managers had rented a better located property, near a square, answering better to the requirements of existing conditions. And it is also stated that the managers had thought it most profitable to let one of the licenses remain unoccupied for the time being, so that they could be at liberty to dispose of it in connection with fairs, theaters and other social gatherings. This shows that the managers are exerting themselves in order to make as much as possible out of the business. In Christiania they thus, according to Menneskevennen, organ of the Norwegian Total Abstinence Society, had a surplus from the dispensaries (1892) of Crowns 281,093.43. In Stockholm, Sweden, the dispensaries disposed, in one year, of 1,859,413 litre brandy, which is 13.63 litre per inhabitant. The surplus received from the dispensaries by the city of Stockholm was Crowns 1,619,773.

In the annual report from the managers of Stavanger dispensaries for 1880, it is said that the increase in the sale of beer "was because the dispensaries had been better patronized than formerly, as the public seemed to appreciate that the dispensaries were kept clean and orderly." Thus many otherwise respectable people, who would not have visited the dark and dirty saloons, now without hesitation patronize the beautiful and clean dispensaries.

It is not a wise policy to make the dram-shops more tasteful and inviting by removing the offensive surroundings. Justice R. C. Pitman, LL.D., of the superior court of Massachusetts, has well said: "Let the business create its own atmosphere;—do not artificially purify it, rather let its natural loathsomeness repel the yet young and pure. To make the grog-shop 'well-lighted, roomy, airy and clean'; to allure with the security of pure liquors (i. e., unadulterated poison); to furnish respectable bartenders and even comely young women . . . and to throw around the whole the double sanction of the state and a business corporation of the first citizens of the town—all this is but to aid the devil in the recruiting of his army of drunkards, and to supply him with the choicest of stock. No! if the grog-shop is to exist, let it not become a reputable institution . . . but rather let it stand, like the brothel, a horrible excrescence upon our civilization, unconnected with any legitimate business or honest trade, unsecured by any police certificates, visited even by its votaries with a sense of degradation and conscious guilt."

It was the original idea that the surplus profit should be applied to philanthropic purposes, but facts prove that the administrators of these funds have departed more and more from this idea. Instead of using the surplus for philanthropic purposes it is used to pay the municipal expenses. If the city is in need of better streets, public baths, brass bands, libraries, museums, water works, public parks, shady drives, roads, better sewerage, hospitals or municipal railroad shares, etc., etc., the surplus from the dispensaries has been resorted to to defray their expenses, which otherwise should have been raised by the people through direct taxation. It is, therefore, not to be wondered at that people, who are not aware of the fact that whenever the liquor traffic drops one dollar in the public treasury it steals at least five or six dollars, should look upon the dispensaries with great favor. As this unclean whisky money is used to defray many of the public expenses, the tax-payers as well as the municipal authorities are disposed to defend the dispensaries, which Mr. Aarrestad very appropriately has called "municipal milk-cows." When, therefore, temperance people have been candidates for public office they have in several places—especially in the cities—met with considerable opposition, because the people feared that they should work against the dispensaries and thereby increase the burdens of the tax-payers.

As Mr. S. Aarrestad has no hope of getting national prohibition for Norway at the present time, he is pleading for a more strict control of the dispensaries, and he advocates strongly:

1. That all traffic in strong drink shall be monopolized by the dispensaries.

2. That no dispensary shall be opened in a community when a majority of the inhabitants (men and women over twenty-five years) are against it.

3. That the possible surplus from the sale of intoxicating drinks shall be paid over to the national treasury.

I understand that the Norwegian temperance people follow their leader in advocating these measures, which (if they become law) will lead them a step nearer the goal. It is reasonably expected that the sale of intoxicating drinks will not be tolerated in many communities when there is no prospect of either private or municipal gain thereby. The local authorities will not be willing to pay the extra expenses for police, prisons, poor-houses, insane asylums, etc., which are always connected with the sale of intoxicating drinks, when there is no hope of any local gain from license or otherwise.

It is a most encouraging fact that there has been a considerable decrease in the consumption of liquor per head in Norway the last twenty-five years. What is the principal reason for this? Is it the modified Gothenburg system? No! There is another most powerful factor that must be taken into consideration. It is the Norwegian temperance movement, the marvelous spread of total abstinence. The Norwegian Total Abstinence Society, which was organized in Stavanger, December 29, 1859, by Mr. Asbjorn Kloster, with a membership of thirty persons, has, according to the official report, at the close of 1892 a membership of 104,071. If we add to these the Good Templars, the members of the Blue Ribbon societies, the members of the Methodist Episcopal church in Norway, who are total abstainers, and other scattered teetotalers, I am not very far from the mark when I estimate the total abstainers in Norway to be an army 150,000 nence) that they drink but little, and if so, there are at strong. In a country where there are 150,000 teetotalers, who are members of societies that work against strong drink, there must be at least 250,000 persons more who are so much under the influence of the 150,000 teetotalers (and so much enlightened on the subject of total abstileast 400,000 persons in a country with about 2,000,000 inhabitants who are either total abstainers or else drink but little. The influence of the Norwegian temperance movement is sufficiently powerful to account for the decrease in the consumption of liquor in that country. Public sentiment is growing stronger and stronger in favor of total abstinence. Norway is marching rapidly forward to the goal of national prohibition—the Gothenburg system notwithstanding. It is, however, true that the Gothenburg system has led to less drinking at bars, but it has at the same time undoubtedly increased the home drinking.

WOMANHOOD SUFFRAGE.

BY MRS. KATE W. SHEPPARD.

Superintendent Suffrage Department W. C. T. U. of New Zealand.

Now that womanhood suffrage is one of the leading political questions of the day, it may help some who, either from want of time or inclination have not given the subject the consideration it deserves, to publish a few facts connected with the extension of the suffrage to the women of New Zealand, and the results on the recent elections in that country.

Although the question was first introduced into the New Zealand Parliament in 1878, it was not until the women themselves began to organize in 1885 that the subject was received with anything like seriousness either by the people or their representatives. The establishment of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, with its various departments of work, embracing almost all questions of social and moral reform, was the means of gathering in a large number of thoughtful, earnest women. So broad was the scope of the union that the officers of each department had full liberty to procure assistance from, and work with all who wished to do so, whether they were members of the union or not. Thus, where the franchise department circulated its petitions for womanhood suffrage throughout the length and breadth of the land, at least one-third of the women who collected the signatures were not members of any temperance body. The appeal embodied in the petition was made on the broad ground of citizenship irrespective of sex, so that every woman who realized to some degree the disabilities under which her sex labored, was enlisted as a helper in the suffrage cause.

It should be noted, however, that the women were not thoroughly roused to a sense of their need for direct representation until they found that all their attempts at reform were practically futile without it.

Petitions, largely signed by women, were at various times presented to Parliament pleading for enactments, which, if passed, would have been for the betterment and elevation of humanity. These were regulated to a "Petition Committee," the members of which usually decided that they had "no recommendation to make" when the women resolved to work for equal suffrage. Without it they were helpless, with it they would at least be fairly represented and their wishes respected. Candidates for parliamentary honors were publicly questioned, and their replies noted; meetings were held, literature was distributed and every device resorted to that could help in influencing public opinion on the question. Suffrage Leagues were established in 1890 and did good work.

Sir John Hull was the special champion of the measure in the House of Representatives, introducing various Women's Franchise bills from time to time, until the Ballance Government in 1891 incorporated the Suffrage clauses with the Electoral bill, and passed the measure in 1893. After some violent opposition in the Legislature Council, that body also passed this measure. The Governor, Lord Glasgow, gave his assent to the bill on September 19th, and for the first time in the life of this "Britain of the South" her people were free.

It had been said by the opponents of the measure that women did not care for the franchise, and would not use it even if they had the opportunity given them. Recent events have proved the fallacy of this assertion. The newly qualified electors were allowed very little time for registration, as the rolls were closed early in November, and the general election held on November 28.

In spite of this disadvantage 109,461 women were enrolled, and 90,290 recorded their votes at the election. There were at the same time 193,536 men on the electoral rolls, and out of that number 129,792 voted. It will be seen, therefore, that the proportion of women who voted was larger than that of men.

The manner in which the election was conducted proved that the assertion that women would be subjected to insult was a groundless one. Although one of the most exciting elections ever held in the colony it was frequently commented upon as being undoubtedly the most orderly. Women freely attended the meetings, and the rowdyism that so often disgraces such assemblies was noticeably absent. The crowds on polling day were most orderly and well behaved. It was found that the presence of large numbers of women at the booths was a far more effectual restraint on ruffianism than the police force could have been. Every male voter had a sister, wife, mother, daughter, or some one equally dear to him, for whose sake all riotousness must be restrained. The daily papers were unanimous in their remarks as to the orderliness of the elections, and the freedom from drinking. One of the results of the elections has been a crushing defeat of the old Conservative party; but many causes operated to produce this effect, which cannot be dwelt on here. Another result is that the present Parliament is a cleansed and purified one. A number of M. H. R's, whose reputation has been unsavory, have been rejected, even though professing the popular creed in politics.

In all this it will be seen that the moral and social condition of the nation is, from a woman's standpoint, the first consideration, and most fair-minded people will admit that hitherto this side of human affairs has not been emphasized too much. We do not want a one-eyed government, but one with a perfect vision, which is able to focus and legislate for the wants of the whole nation.

THE CHURCH'S PRESENT DUTY TO SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

It is quite generally admitted by labor leaders that what is most needed in industrial reform is the application of the spirit and law of Christ to business life.

Movements in behalf of the poor have always been chiefly supported by those who have learned justice and charity from the Bible. A few years since the editor of the directory of New York charities wrote us, in response to a question, that there was not then a public charity in that city of ten years' standing that had not been founded and chiefly supported by Bible men, that is, by Christians or Jews. Moral reforms are almost wholly carried on by Christian people.

But these applications of Christianity to politics, industry, charity and reform are not made by the churches as such, but by a small minority of their most earnest members acting as individuals. There is Christian unity, on a small scale, in social reform, where there ought to be church union on a much larger scale for the world's sake and the church's sake. Because the work of social reform is done by Christians as individuals rather than by the churches as such, the latter lose the credit of even what is done and incur much censure from those who have a high ideal of the church's duty to society, many of whom contrast unfavorably the "Kingdom" Christ proclaimed, a divinely ordered society of brotherhood and justice and purity, with the church's small efforts toward the realization of such social conditions.

It is clearly seen by students of the times that the most stupendous evils of the day could and should be swept away by the united forces of the churches, massing their lessons, sermons, literature, letters, petitions, and especially their ballots, on such scandals of Christian nations as legalized opium and liquor, tolerated prostitution and gambling, lax divorce laws, corrupt elections and monopoly, any or all of which could be at once overthrown in the United States and British Empire if the controlling Christian votes were themselves unitedly controlled by loyalty to Christ and His laws of purity and humanity.

The real difficulty seems to be not so much lack of sympathy with social reforms, as failure to adjust ancient church creeds and discipline to the new social conditions of our times. The chief denominations were organized in the age of individualism, before the age of cities and of social solidarity, when environment did not need to be converted as well as character. It should also be noted that the churches mostly originated in doctrinal controversies, before Christian ethics had been fully developed, when liquors and lotteries were neither of them ethically heterodox, and when Sunday trains, Sunday mails and Sunday papers were unknown.

Charity was an early flower of Christianity, and so has a recognized place in church work, though only in the outgrown, unscientific charity of the "poor fund"; but moral reform, the last and most consummate flower of Christian faith, has as yet only found welcome to the unofficial ante-room of advisory resolutions, being mostly left out of binding creeds and rules and official schedules of benevolence; indeed, reform is shut out of the household, allowed only the place of a Lazarus begging for resolutions and casual offerings at the door.

Denominational conferences should hasten to adjust their creeds to the new developments in Christian ethics: (1) by establishing ethical "standards" not less specific and binding than their doctrinal standards, providing also for teaching them in theological seminaries, and for their use in examinations of preachers and of candidates for church membership; (2) by giving moral reform as well as charity a place in the official schedules of benevolence; and (3) by providing for efficient and official coöperation with other denominations in reforms—nationally, locally, and by states, through the appointment and support of active committees for that purpose.

If it be asked just what a joint committee or league of the churches, local, state or national, could do without causing party dissensions in the churches or trespassing beyond the church's province as the custodians of religion and morals, we answer:

1. A local league of the churches could help to unite all good citizens in electing administrative city officers on the only appropriate platform for such elections, law enforcement, leaving legislative politics to legislative elections; or, in default of this, such a league, with the aid of the courts, could either compel city officers to enforce laws against vices or do it in their stead; and each league could stop many evils with no other arrest than "the arrest of thought," by providing lectures, distributing literature, and by the personal work of persuasive committees.

2. A state league of churches could prevent much evil legislation and promote the passage of good laws by systematic and thorough use of petitions, and especially by inducing good citizens to lobby by letters, and by maintaining a committee for work and warning at the capital, to be reinforced by mass conventions in emergencies.

When the Louisiana lottery's plots roused the churches of North Dakota and of Louisiana they showed a controlling moral power, as the churches have done in other states in like cases, a power that ought to be used regularly and systematically, for instance, now toward the suppression of the new Florida lottery. Every Christian should at once write his congressman to help to secure concurrence of the House with the Senate which has passed the Hoar bill.

What a state league of the churches could do for state legislation, a national league, officially constituted by general conferences and assemblies, could do for national legislation in such matters as the churches are agreed upon, besides which its committee or bureau at the Capital could do a vast educative work for all moral reforms in the name of the churches, such as is now done very imperfectly by small and feebly supported voluntary societies, wholly dependent on a few earnest Christians for support and direction.

On such questions as the churches have reached no definite agreement, the labor problem, for instance, church conference should be held and earnest efforts made to find a Christian remedy and apply it.

Pittsburg, Pa.

THE HOME-COMING.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Never, perhaps, has a ship been awaited with more loving anxiety than was the ocean grayhound that came panting into port June 20, bearing to her native shores and her loyal subjects our "uncrowned queen." *Un*crowned? Would we not come nearer the truth if we omit the first syllable? If ever a woman was crowned in the hearts of the people that woman is Frances E. Willard. And let us not forget that a crown, woven of love and studded with the sparkling tears of gratitude will retain its brilliancy when the gem-set tiaras of earthly powers have been dimmed by the dust of ages or broken under the wheels of human progress; that a throne built on the rock-bottom of loving hearts shall never be shaken, though dynasties tremble and kingdoms fall.

"Where is she?" "How does she look?" were the questions asked by heart and voice as the little company assembled to greet the chieftain pressed eagerly to the edge of the pier, scanning the rows of faces gliding by on the back of this monster of the sea. There, at last! she is, with her faithful, invaluable companion by her side, with the old-time smile on the sweet, loved face, with rounded cheeks and every sign of returned vigor. "How well she looks!" is the joint exclamation—the anxiety is over; she is safe—and sound.

Then the meeting and the greetings, the founder of the Temple heading the procession up the gang plank, followed by Mr. and Mrs. Demorest and a few others, the company being later joined by Mrs. Barnes. After that the cheerful chat in the writing-room of the steamer, the inevitable reporters and interviews, the first steps on the native soil after so long an absence, and, at last, rest in a quiet, secluded temperance hotel.

New York City. KATE LUNDEN.

WELCOME MEETING.

Gifts and Flowers, Speech and Song, Smiles and Tears, Greet the White-Ribbon Chief, Frances E. Willard.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—A spacious church adorned under Mme. Demorest's tasteful direction, by beautifully draped flags, the star spangled and W. C. T. U. banners in harmonious combination, just as it should be. Over the pulpit a silk banner, showing the white ribbon encircling the globe and the motto, "Christ for the World." A platform banked in with daisies, lilies and roses, and occupied by leaders in the world's great reforms, and in front of these hundreds and hundreds of eagerly expectant faces turning impatient eyes towards the chapel door, faces which glowed out into love and smiles, and eyes which first glistened with joy and were then dimmed with tears as they saw the well-remembered, sweet face move towards the platform.

How they cheered; how loyally they saluted, in their usual fashion, the chief. How they paused for a moment to look anxiously to find signs which would justify the long absence, and tell that the rest and recuperation had brought the loved leader back to health and strength. And how the cheers broke out again, more joyfully than before, when they saw that the pale and worn cheeks had rounded out into almost rosy youth, that the weary lines about the mouth and eyes had disappeared, that the brown hair had still no winter's snow, that, in fact, the leader was back, and stood before us just as she stood ten years ago, when, under the writer's chairmanship, she made her first Prohibition party speech, and started the ball rolling in Maryland, my Maryland, for St. John and Daniel, only I saw that some paused in their cheering to whisper "Thank God."

How was she dressed? I don't know. I only saw she was there, restored to health, and that at her corsage and in her hand were branches of white roses, showing that she had not forgotten the Prohibition party of her love and loyalty, and that the white rose and the white ribbon are to share her future labors.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, LL.D.

I saw, too, that a learned title had not changed her womanly gentleness. For she is now a Doctor of Laws, made so only a few hours before this welcome, and announced for the first time by President Bashford's telegram from the Ohio Wesleyan College, Delaware, Ohio. Hereafter Frances E. Willard, LL.D., will lead the white-ribboned hosts; fit title for her who as she said later would so doctor our laws that "the Gospel of Christ, Peace on earth, good will to men, would be applied to and in law, in government, in politics, for the cause of Labor, the cause of Woman, the cause of Prohibition, until all are brought, 'Nearer my God to Thee, nearer to Thee.'"

THE CRUSADE PSALM.

It was several minutes before Mrs. Mary T. Burt, president of New York state W. C. T. U., was able to announce the opening hymn, after which Mrs. Hammer, Pennsylvania's president, read the Crusade Psalm, which seemed to reconsecrate to her home work her who has so long "waged her peaceful war for God and Home and Native Land."

After prayer by Dr. Mac Arthur, the pastor of the church, Mrs. Burt set the key for the evening tribute in her eloquent though brief address. She said, "Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war; victories not heralded by cannon's roar, but blessed by glad hearts. They are victories of peace over war, of virtue over vice, of sobriety over drink. We give tribute and welcome to-night to her whose voice has won such victories. Her voice and pen have won greater victories than were won by sword. Worn by struggle she left us for a time, and now returns with new vigor. It would be easy to choose the quiet way, the easy path where the chill wind of hostile criticism does not blow, but our sister chooses the path of duty, and will courageously walk, as she has for twenty years, 'in the middle of the King's highway.' To-night, from Atlantic to the Pacific, thousands of white-ribboners welcome her, thank God, and take courage for renewed warfare. Her presence will give new impetus to reform; her counsel will guide to new achievements; her voice, so eloquent, will win greater victories, for Frances E. Willard's is

'A voice, a persuasive voice,
That travels the wide world through,
And flies on the beams of the morning light,
And speaks to men with a gentle might,
And tells them to be true.'"

After the applause that greeted this eloquent tribute Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, corresponding secretary of the National W. C. T. U., said: "Mine is the honor and pleasure of extending the welcome of the great host of white-ribboners in the United States. Perhaps in no two years has there been more stir than during those just passed. Christ has been with us, and we have learned of the sin and wretchedness, the poverty and woe; we have heard the cry for bread, have seen the laborer crying in vain for employment, have looked upon women on their knees holding up their babes to public gaze in pitiful plea for help. By such scenes as this are we brought to a social platform which unites all who love in the cause of all who suffer. I bring you telegrams of welcome from your sisters in every state and territory. They have held you up in their arms before God. To-night, a glad army, they stand 'Ready' for your word of command. They have said to me, 'We cannot see her, we cannot meet her; go and give her our loving welcome.'" The telegrams from state W. C. T. U's were then presented, handsomely bound.

As if spontaneously the audience burst into a verse of "Blest be the tie that binds," but sang it softly, reverently, as though in prayer for a reunited sisterhood.

Mrs. Margaret Bottome, of the King's Daughters, then spoke. She said that the white ribbon and purple ribbon would bind the world to Christ. The only hope for womanhood for the world was in Christ. Frances E. Willard led a noble band in His Name. We are glad England appreciates her, but she belongs to the stars and stripes.

Rev. Phœbe A. Hanaford gave the greetings of Sorosis, of which society Miss Willard is an honored member. Mrs. Hanaford said that were she speaking for herself she would pledge to Miss Willard renewed fealty as a fellow-soldier in the battle for total abstinence and prohibition. As a Sorosian, she greeted Miss Willard as the noblest type of American womanhood, one of the brightest stars in our nation's literary firmament.

The Salvation Army's greeting was given in the following letter from Mrs. Maud B. Booth:

111 READE ST., N. Y., June 20, 1894.

MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD,
World's President of the W. C. T. U.

DEAR FRIEND AND HONORED COMRADE:—Friend, because we know full well that your heart beats in unbroken union with every cause that has in view the uplifting of the friendless and unprotected, and Comrade, because, like those beneath our own dear flag, you are engaged in a real, stern battle with the foes of vice and intemperance.

We cannot allow you to return to this country without sending, on behalf of our many thousand troops, a few lines of welcome and blessing. In this I may also add the greetings of my precious husband, Commander Booth, though he sailed for England on Saturday last, with our party, to the International Congress.

May your cause for the whitening of the dark pages of women's lives, for the broadening of women's influence, for the good and noble effort towards the abolishing of the baneful and terrible foe, intoxicating drink, be furthered increasingly by God, who has promised that no weapon that is formed against us shall prosper. MAUD B. BOOTH.

When Mrs. Clinton B. Fisk was introduced to speak for the Woman's Home Missionary Society, the audience showed that they had not forgotten the noble man whose name she bears, and her lips were tremulous as she spoke. "I wish I had the eloquence of those lips now silent. Nobody loved you better, Sister Frances, and were he here you would have welcome hearty. I bear the welcome of Methodist women, women who labor for the poor, whose mission is to educate and Christianize poor women, and who in that cause speak in meeting. I greet you with an old-time Methodist hand-shake."

The next speaker was Mr. William T. Wardwell, secretary of the National committee of the Prohibition party. The applause which greeted Mr. Wardwell shows that the W. C. T. U. and the Prohibition party are one in the affections of temperance people, and that the audience recognized the fitness of this joint welcome to one whom both organizations claim as comrade.

A WHITE ROSE WELCOME.

Mr. Wardwell said: "Few who return from across the water fail to bring some relic with them, some trophy of foreign visit. But our friend has brought herself. Whatever the Old World has done in giving her renewed health, we are the Old World's debtor. She returns to us unspoiled by flattery. I wish I could say that during your absence the church had risen in her might, and that good citizens had joined to close the two hundred and forty thousand saloons of the land; that prohibition had been accomplished. But I cannot, and our welcome must be to new labor, more arduous, perhaps more bitterly opposed than ever. But we will work on and look for the dawn of the day when women shall have equal rights in a land free from all slavery."

The welcome of the Catholic Total Abstinence Society was read by Mrs. Barnes. It was in the form of a letter from Archbishop Ireland.

The W. C. T. U. of New Jersey was represented by Mrs. Emma Bourne, their president, who in a bright speech gave Miss Willard the cheering tidings of the passage of the Scientific Temperance Instruction Law for New Jersey, and presented her with a hair mattress which is at Eagle's Nest Cottage, and which is expected to be so restful that Miss Willard will be able to be present at the coming State Convention.

AN ENGROSSED ADDRESS.

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, first vice-president of New York State W. C. T. U., presented Miss Willard with a handsomely engrossed address, which in eloquent sentences, welcomed her home and pledged her loyal support. Mrs. Boole made a beautiful speech, calling all laggards to rally to the White Ribbon and White Rose. Her arraignment of licensed saloon, Gothenburg System store, and State dispensary as an evil trinity of iniquities, was greeted with wild applause.

Mrs. L. Devereux Blake delivered the greetings of the Woman's Suffrage Association, and Jos. A. Bogardus followed with those of the American Temperance Union.

SAVE THE CHILDREN.

Anthony Comstock, of the Society for the Prevention of Vice, then followed in a touching welcome on the part of the boys and girls in whose cause Miss Willard has labored so faithfully. Said he: "Thank God for Frances E. Willard and her staff. They are Christly women, and legislative Pharaohs tremble when these women say 'Let my people go!' As Rizpah battled all day for her loved sons, dead, so the W. C. T. U. women battle for their sons, living, but in peril. 22,400,000 boys and girls, between whom and the nameless monsters who would ravage them you stand, welcome you."

Mrs. E. Frances Lord, president of the New York City W. C. T. U., presented Miss Willard with a beautiful basket of flowers, and Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, of the Y's, followed with a beautiful silk flag, the stars and stripes, with a white ribbon streamer. The Y's were represented also by Miss C. C. Hall, president of the city union, who in a pretty speech gave Miss Willard a silver plate properly inscribed, to be placed in a handsome mahogany chair which had been sent to Eagle's Nest to receive its owner on her arrival.

ANNA GORDON'S WELCOME.

During all this time a little figure had been modestly hidden away behind the reading desk, but the loving and loyal companion of our white-ribbon chief had not been forgotten, and now Anna Gordon's welcome was to come, appropriately voiced by the boys and girls of the Loyal Temperance Legion for whom she has labored so lovingly and well. It was sweetly and beautifully done. A little lass came first, and with gracious words handed Miss Gordon a beautiful bouquet whose blossoms hid, perhaps, a costlier gift. Then a sturdy lad came with a lighted candle in a silver candlestick, emblematic of the light which, he said, Miss Gordon had kindled among the working boys of the city, and which had not yet gone out.

Enthusiastic applause greeted Miss Gordon as she rose to respond, and the applause was redoubled at the close of her beautiful but too brief speech. She said: "While I have sat here and joyed in the welcome you have given to her whom I love so well, I am sure you think with me that my welcome was the best of all. How blessed it is to stand here and share ever so little in the kind greetings you have given Miss Willard. How more than blessed it is when I think of the deep significance behind this welcome from the Loyal Temperance Legion. Five hundred thousand boys and girls march in its ranks; their banners bear the warning, 'Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up.' They sing as their marching song Miss Willard's song, 'Saloons must go, saloons shall go.' It will be a glad time when these children reach voting age. They will purify the ballot, dignify the ballot, consecrate the ballot to high and noble ends, and the world will be blest through them."

Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the "Temple builder," president of the W. T. P. A., and of the Chicago W. C. T. U., who, though called on suddenly, made a beautiful address and voiced the sentiments of all her hearers when she said, "when I saw her rounded cheeks, I felt like singing the doxology."

Mr. Tenney, treasurer of New York state W. C. T. U., read a large number of letters, and Mrs. Woodbridge followed with telegrams, a few of which are given:

Ohio Wesleyan College confers upon you the degree of Doctor of Laws to-day. Congratulations and welcome home.

J. W. BASHFORD.
Delaware, O. C. W. PAYNE.

How glad we are to have you once more among us. With renewed health, and with all your long-time devotion to the just cause which we have so much at heart, in which you are a recognized loved and honored leader. NEAL DOW.
Portland, Me.

Sincerest congratulations on your returning health and home-coming: we are all the richer and happier for it. See Proverbs 31:26; also Ruth 2:12.

MR. AND MRS. SAMUEL DICKIE.
Albion, Mich.

Please extend cordial and sincere congratulations of Mrs. Pickler and myself upon your safe return. Nation needs you.

J. A. PICKLER.
Washington, D. C.

Wife and I join in the welcome to our sister, Frances E. Willard. God bless her and you all. JOHN P. ST. JOHN.
Olathe, Kan.

Mrs. Woodbridge brought the enthusiasm to a high pitch when she concluded with a reference to Norfolk's Prohibition party victory, and said, "This is one blessing for which we are not called on to thank the G. O. P."

It was nearly eleven o'clock, the heat was intense, but nobody in the vast audience had left, and the hundreds waiting patiently on the street in the hope that room would be made for them by early goers were doomed to disappointment. Everybody wanted to hear Frances E. Willard after her long silence. The one mistake of the management had been in engaging a church instead of the Metropolitan Opera House or Music Hall. The auditorium was too small for the thousands who wanted to welcome personally the returned leader.

MISS WILLARD'S RESPONSE.

Now the patient waiting was rewarded. After a verse of "Home, Sweet Home," Miss Willard arose, and when the applause which greeted her appearance had subsided, she began in that quaint soliloquistic way so characteristic of our Frances, as though tender thoughts which had been occupying her mind had broken into spontaneous utterance.

"And I feel as though you had rocked me in the cradle. As you sing, 'Home, Sweet Home,' I seem to look up into my mother's dear face and hear her sing it to a nervous little girl. Mother's gone, brother and sister have passed away. I am the last one left, but I am not lonely, for these are 'my folks,' this is my home. And the world grows brighter, kinder, better, through Christ's love. It has been a beautiful evening, never to be forgotten. Who can suffice for such a greeting as this, so kind, so tender, so mother-hearted, and so father-hearted and brother-hearted, for dear as it has been to hear comrade voices, after all, a good man's blessing is very dear to a woman's heart.

"I feel just like a grandmother to you all to-night, and when Brother Anthony Comstock spoke for the boys and girls the tears come to my old eyes. They have been in my heart all the time.

"But this loving greeting is not a personal tribute. These kind words and kinder deeds are not invidious to woman. Some say that we women are a mutual admiration society; well, better so than carping critics of each other. But it isn't fair to have so much praise. I am but the buoy kept up by the ever-heaving sea, the windmill showing the course of the wind; sea and wind are the noble, self-sacrificing rank and file of the White Ribbon Army. All this tribute should be for them, it is for them.

"We personify great reforms; disembodied movements are like disembodied principles. Whatever we say about God's beautiful movements as represented by an individual we mean We, Us & Co. all the time. And when the tributes are directed to one person, it is only that we bring our loyalty to a focus. If you want to 'catch on' catch on to an organization which battles for a high principle, and in which are the hidings of the power of God.

"Such occasions make us love each other better. We are forced to, even by decorum, let alone ethics and the Golden Rule.

"We W. C. T. U. women are Christians first, and white-ribboners next. Christ for the world, and the world and woman for Christ. We are for womanhood first, and for anything afterwards. Woman will brighten every place she enters, and she proposes to enter every place. And men will say, 'come on,' just as my brother Oliver used to say when he wanted me to go with him hunting; not, 'Oh, I suppose you must if you insist,' but a brotherly 'Come on, sister.' Why shouldn't I think well of men when I was taught by such white souled men as my father and brother?

"In England there is much stir over prohibition and woman's ballot. I would not be surprised if within the next fortnight we would learn that women can vote for members of parliament, and that in five years we would see our Lady Henry Somerset in the cabinet. And she will be just as womanly there as in her own home. A bit of paper will not change her.

"And now, beloved, I accept this loving greeting on behalf of the noble army whose warfare is always peaceful and whose word is 'Prohibition by law, prohibition by politics and prohibition by woman's ballot.'

"But the beauty of it is, that it is better all the way, better, for we are nearer to the glorious end of our warfare. I sometimes fear that mine and Sister Carse's state, old Illinois, may lag. Yet I love the broad-prairied state, though it is hampered by certain agglomerations and conglomerations. Illinois has a great spirited people, and with this nation of ours is learning more and more the gospel of Christ. Let us apply that gospel to law, to government, to politics, to labor, to woman's cause, to temperance, and we will have a paradise in this land of His own planting.

"At the World's Fair the bands were once playing national airs. As 'Yankee Doodle' rang out Yankees would join in the tune, and when 'Rule Britannia' was played our British cousins, with more guttural tones, would chant the lay. But suddenly all the bands began 'Nearer, my God, to Thee, Nearer to Thee,' and the different voices and widely sundered nations merged in the prayer of humanity, 'Nearer, my God, to Thee.'

"This is what the W. C. T. U. want to say. This is what the W. C. T. U. want said, in pure laws, better manners, higher lives, holier government. May this beautiful meeting be an inspiration to all of us. In loving each other we learn to love Christ more, and in His love we can work to bring our, my dear country, and the whole world 'Nearer, my God, to Thee, Nearer to Thee.'"

So simply, so beautifully was it all said. We knew, then, that it was our Frances Willard, unchanged, except for the better, who had come back to take up her work and to lead to new efforts the reformers of the world.

The services were concluded, but for half an hour longer Miss Willard and Miss Gordon received in the chapel, and hundreds of friends and followers grasped their hands in kindly welcome. It was a great occasion.

NEW ENGLAND'S WELCOME.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—From Boston, June 23, the following message was sent across the sea: "To Lady Henry Somerset, Reigate, England, six hundred guests at Willard reception breakfast vote love and thanks." All that is included in this message is written in the hearts of white-ribbon women, not only in New England, but throughout the world. A great leader, greatly beloved, laid aside, and going away in sorrow and sickness, almost to the borderline; this same life gently shielded and brought back to the work again through an outstretched hand of special providence and blessing; this, and very much more, may be read into these lines by those who know of Lady Henry Somerset and Frances E. Willard. No word at the reception breakfast, at the Hotel Vendome, met with a heartier response than this by Mary A. Livermore, "More and more am I a convert to the power of prayer. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been on its knees and the answer has come."

The ocean voyage was a hard one; and then to arrive in New York where the temperature was in the nineties was a severe testing to a restored invalid. But Boston was even warmer, and if Frances Willard had any lingering doubt of New England loyalty and devotion, every remnant must have been dispelled by her Boston reception. For there we were! literally packed at high noon, Saturday, in the spacious dining-room of the Vendome, sweltering, gasping for breath, and yet a happy, welcoming crowd. The presiding genius of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., Susan S. Fessenden, was, as usual, equal to the need. Everyone wanted to make it warmer for Miss Willard, but of course this wouldn't do!

The gathering was a beautiful object lesson in the significance of a movement "for God and Home and Every Land. Men and women were interested together in all that was involved in the greeting. Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island united in the hospitality of this occasion, all but Rhode Island sending their president, and this last being represented by Mrs. J. K. Barney. We can well imagine it was about the happiest thing for Miss Willard to be greeted by so many of her executive staff. Mrs. Stevens brought from Maine the pine tree of prohibition; Mrs. Reed, from Vermont, the fresh, pure air of the Green mountains; Miss Wendell, from New Hampshire, roses instead of granite; Mrs. Fessenden, host for Massachusetts, eloquent opening words, and the National knows Mrs. Forbes well enough to know that Connecticut bravely and forcibly rounded out this presidential company. Indeed, it was a whole White mountain range! only this time Willard instead of Washington was at the head of the group.

The address of welcome by Mrs. Livermore, honorary president of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., voiced the mind and heart of the great audience. She announced a new organization, a "Watch and Ward Society," to look after Miss Willard. "She is not to take up the work of ten men any more. She is no longer to keep six stenographers and ten secretaries at work. Anna Gordon is henceforth to have a new charge, which is to see that Frances Willard keeps still."

The presence and words of Neal Dow added one more distinguishing feature to this great occasion. Governor Greenhalge sent regrets and congratulations which were happily expressed by General Champlain, one of his staff. Hon. Elijah Morse, U. S. congressman, gave a national government flavor to this local feast. "What shall be done—not alone in Massachusetts—unto the woman whom the people delight to honor?" Mrs. Carse, W. C. T. U. Temple Carse, was fortunately present, and brought an advance word from Chicago of the loving salutations which are there in store. Dr. A. H. Plumb, the conspicuous Boston pastor at the forefront in every righteous cause, spoke of the prime elements in such a character as Miss Willard's, the expression of and devotion to truth so beautifully illustrated in this woman. Alice Stone Blackwell, bright and pointed as always, Henry S. Faxon, whose gifts material have so often come to the rescue, and Ella Gilbert Ives, poet, based their welcome upon the foundation of equal rights, i. e. liberty, fraternity, equality. What right has government to ignore such gifts and goodness and graces of which Miss Willard is a shining illustration? The uncompromising prohibitionist of Massachusetts, Dr. A. A. Miner, said that he was glad to welcome back all that Miss Willard took away, and all the British addition that she brings. He was glad that New York had imposed no tariff on the added thirty pounds!

It is sufficient guarantee for the music to say that it was under the direction of Mrs. Alice J. Harris, and every heart was kindled when with her beautiful voice she led the opening song:

"'Mid pleasures and palaces, wherever we may roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home."

At length, at four o'clock, the long waited for climax came, and Miss Willard had the floor, or chair, it was, which she was requested to mount. There she was! the same Frances E. Willard, loving and beloved; no less an American, but broadened, sweetened, purified, in the English domain; and fostered, comforted and built up by all Great Britain. "This has been a wonderful time, a beautiful time," she said. "You have seen a boat bobbing up and down on a great sea. You have seen a thistle down careening and careening on the great ocean of the air; and I, sitting here to-day, have felt very much like the boat and thistle down. And I have said, 'It is the tide, the tide, that is carrying forward our cause and our work.'" Her English story will be told in many a W. C. T. U. gathering. Do not miss the ringing, eloquent truth. Her closing tribute to Mary A. Livermore, her sponsor in the temperance work when bishops and prelates were against, was just like her, and wonderfully fitting. Let the words of this patron saint be preserved. "Burn your bridges and go in. God will stand by you. You'll be all right; I feel it in my heart."

Massachusetts gave, through Miss Louise Hodgkins, a clock for that Eagle's Nest on the Hudson, where everybody hopes our National and world-wide president will have a summer rest.

Miss Ives' poem closed with the following tribute to Miss Willard:

"One such in dauntless womanhood
Withstood the world, a heart at bay;
Clear-eyed she saw the highest good,
And dared the inner voice obey.
Alone upon her solemn quest,
As pure and high as Holy Grail,
A Galahad, the sacred test
Of knighthood met, she could not fail;
No foe could make her spirit quail;
Or steal the jewel in her breast,—
A sacred yet divine unrest.
The peaceful warfare wages still
To which her mortal life is pledged;
For her great spirit drank its fill
At freedom's fount, till, newly-fledged,
An eagle, gazing at the sun,
Its swift, untrammeled flight begun.
On these great wings, upborne, a brood
Of callow young, a multitude
Of earnest souls with longings rife,
Have left the nest for larger life;
And in the fields of air full play
For growing pinions find alway.
Dux foemina facti we quote
With love and pride and fondly voice
Of heart and head the dual choice;
And yet—this woman cannot vote!"

A NEWSY SOUTHERN LETTER.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The noble women of Asheville, N. C., W. C. T. U. are too busy and too modest to tell you of the good work they are doing. They are now rejoicing over the reëlection of Mayor Patton on the reform ticket. While he is not all we wish he was—a Prohibitionist, with a Prohibition council to uphold him in his administration—yet he did so much last year to aid our work in so many ways and for the reform of the city that the saloon-keepers and their friends were all arrayed against him; but be it known to the credit of the fair city of Asheville, the retreat of those who are not strong enough to endure the severity of the Northern winter, and a haven of strength to the people of Florida and other Southern states, who need the ozone of this mountain top, that here they will find men who will not be driven by party lash, like cattle in a "round-up" on our Western prairie, but who do their own thinking and "vote as they pray."
